To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out in part the provision of the act entitled "An act to abolish the Miami tribe of Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, the following sums are hereby appropriated, to be charged to the Miami tribal fund, and to be immediately available, namely: For payment to said Miamies as elected to become citizens under said act their proportion of the tribal moneys, $33,133.96; and for payment to the confederated bands of Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians, $24,922.03; in all, $58,055.99.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1467, the word "twenty" where it last occurs should be stricken out and "fifty" inserted. That is the exact sum as appears by the appropriations. It should be $24,952.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one omission. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Chaffee] calls my attention to page 5, line 107, in the appropriation for interpreters for tribes in Colorado. The word "two" should be stricken out and "three" inserted, so as to read "three for the tribes in Colorado;" and on page 6, line 108, after the words "White River" "and Southern Ute" should be inserted.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the chairman whether the first amendment just read is from the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. The Senator will see that it was agreed to in committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I only wanted to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on these amendments of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.]

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the Senate for unanimous consent to permit me to offer an amendment that has not been offered heretofore, and which would have been offered and submitted to the committee had I not been detained from the Senate as I have been for a number of days engaged on investigating-committees of the Senate. I will state what the amendment is, and I think there will be no objection to it. I hope there will not be any objection to it at least. I move to insert, after line 9, on page 68, as a separate section of the bill, the following words:

SECTION —. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the unexpended balance standing on the books of the Indian Office of appropriation heretofore made for the expenses of the board of Indian commissioners for the fiscal year 1576, to James Brown, late Indian agent in Oregon, the sum of $1,170.33 for services rendered as Indian agent.

I offer this amendment in pursaunce of a letter which I hold in my hand from the Department, and which I shall read in order that the chairman of the committee and members of the committee generally and of the Senate may understand it, as I think, if it is understood, there will be no objection to it. The letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior states the case fully. I will read it:

I will read it:

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Affairs,

Washington, D. C., January 10, 1877.

Sir: By authority of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, under date of December 11, 1874. James Brown, of Oregon, was appointed special agent of the Department to look after and exercise control over Indians in that State who leave their reservations and loiter about towns, to the great annoyance of the citizens and to their own demoralization, at a salary of $2,000 per annum, provided there were funds available for the purpose, this amount to include the expenses of travel and subsistence incident to the duties assigned him.

When this appointment was made it was believed that funds appropriated for incidental expenses in Oregon were applicable to the payment of Mr. Brown's salary, and he was actually paid therefrom for the services rendered by him from the 'fime he recommenced to perform these duties, namely, January 1, 1875, until the 30th of June following.

Upon the presentation of his account for salary for 'he third and fourth quarters of 1875, it was adjusted by this bureau and referred to the Second Auditor of the Treasury for settlement, the amount to be charged to the appropriation "incidental expenses Indian service in Oregon, 1875."

Under date of January 21, 1876, the account was returned by the Auditor with the remark that his office doubted its authority to report the claim to the Second Comptroller because the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 39, 1876, provided for only one special Indian agent in Oregon, and the provisions of law, found in sections 3678 and 3682 of the United States Revised Statutes, page 723, seem to forbid the allowances of claims of this kind, especially from the appropriation designated. By this decision of the Auditor, which the solicitor of your Department has informally pronounced to be right, Mr. Brown is debarred from his pay until further legislation by Congress, and was notified that his services as special agent must terminate on the 31st of January last.

There is an unexpended balance of about $2,000 on the books of this office of the appropriation made for the expenses of the board of Indian commissioners during the fiscal year 1876, and there being no outstanding indebtedness against the same. I respectfully request that the matter be submitted to Congress by the Department with the recommendations that authority be granted by that honorable body to pay out of this balance the amount justly due Mr. Brown for services rendered as above indicated from July 1, 1875 to January 31, 1876, namely, $1,170.33.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

To Hon, the Secketary of the Interior.

To Hon. the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

This letter of the Commissioner to the head of the Interior Department was transmitted to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by the way I perhaps ought to apologize for having this letter. I was down in the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs a moment ago and I told the clerk I wished to submit it with the amendment to the Senate.

The accompanying letter is as follows:

The accompanying letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
Washington, Junuary 13, 1877.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication dated the 10th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject of the payment of the salary due Special Agent James Brown, who was appointed under authority of this Department in December, 1874, to look after and exercise control over the Indians in Oregon who were in the habit of straying from their reservations.

There appears, under the decision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, to be no fund at present under which Mr. Brown's salary for the third and fourth quarters of 1875, namely, from July 1, 1875, to January 31, 1876, amounting to $1,170.33, can be paid, and the Commissioner suggests that this sum be taken from an unexpended balance of about $2,000 standing on the books of the Indian Office of the appropriation made for the expenses of the board of Indian commissioners during the fiscal year 1876, and against which no outstanding indebtedness exists. The subject has the approval of this Department and is respectfully commended to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary. Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs United States Senate.

I know I have no right to offer this amendment at this time, not having submitted it to the Senate and not having had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I was not aware in fact that the Indian appropriation bill had progressed so far as it has. Indeed, I was not aware until last night that it had been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations, and I appeal to the Senator to allow this amendment to be offered at this time and adopted. Mr. Brown is a one-armed man, a man who has been in the Indian service since Oregon was first extled—a very excellent man. It is evident Brown is a one-armed man, a man who has been in the Indian service since Oregon was first settled—a very excellent man. It is evident from these letters that he has not been paid for these services from the fact that there was a misapprehension in regard to the power of the Department to pay him out of the incidental fund. For the services which have been rendered he has been paid in part, and this is simply to pay him the balance. It makes no new appropriation. It simply asks that this unexpended balance of $2,000 standing on the books of the Department to the credit of this Indian commissioner's fund and against which there is no indebtedness, he applied to this proposes.

the Department to the credit of this Indian commissioner's fund and against which there is no indebtedness, be applied to this purpose; and I shall be very much obliged, and I shall know that an act of justice and right will have been done if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I regret exceedingly that I am unable to accommodate my friend from Oregon. I will promise him that the Committee on Indian Affairs, which committee seems to have jurisdiction and charge of this matter, will look into it at a very early day, and make a report upon it. Of course, if this claim should be presented and approved, this bill might be loaded down with a great many other meritorious claims.

meritorious claims.

Mr. WITHERS. We have stricken out several propositions of the kind.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to my friend that if it is to be put upon an appropriation bill at all, it should go upon the deficiency bill, and not a bill for the current expenditures of 1877 and 1878.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the chairman if there are not appropriations of this kind in the bill before the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. None whatever that I know of.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under the promise that the chairman of the committee makes me, that he will give the matter early consideration, and try to get it on the sundry civil bill, or the deficiency bill, or some other bill, I shall not insist on the amendment. Knowing that I have not the right to do so I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. BOGY. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to insert on page 32, after line 768, the following:

And the proper officers are hereby authorized and directed to execute the resolution passed on the 26th of June, 1873, by the Osage national council and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 8th of July, 1874, for the payment of the balance of the debt as fixed and limited by such resolution out of the proceeds of the sales of the Osage lands now in the custody of the United States: Provided, That the authorized authorities of the Osage Nation request the payment of the same.

I move that as an addition to the bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to give notice now that I shall move, at the proper time, to non-concur in the amendment proposed by the committee, which is found between lines 1420 and 1427. I want that amendment reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on the amendment proosed by the Senator from Missouri. That amendment is not in order,

I believe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will state

the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. The point of order is that the amendment provides for the payment of a claim, and not for an expenditure for the fiscal

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOGY. It is an authority to pay an existing debt of the Osage Nation or the nation of Osage Indians. I thought I understood a moment ago that I was authorized to present this amendment by the consent of my friend himself. The amendment was submitted by myself some days ago and went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was reported back by the committee without being adopted, with the distinct understanding that I could offer it in the Senate. I thought that was the distinct understanding of the committee. The amendment has been offered and it went to the committee in regular order at a proper time.

order at a proper time.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri offered an amendment some days ago, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That amendment I reported back by direction of the committee without recommendation. When that amendment is offered I presume it will be in order, but that is not the amendment which the Senator has now offered. He has offered another, a new or at least a different amendment from the one proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair understands it so, the Chair will rule it out, as not in order.

Mr. BOGY. I simplified the amendment and made it shorter, but

Mr. BOGY. I simplified the amendment and made it shorter, but I now offer the same identical amendment which was offered before and which went to the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment, I presume, will be in order.
Mr. BOGY. I withdraw the former amendment and move to strike out all after and including the words "of which amount," in line 740, page 31, down to and including the words "per capita," and to insert
the following:

And that no expenditure of any of the foregoing sums appropriated for the Osage Indians shall be expended except for such objects and in such amounts as the Osage national council shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, direct, and the proper officers are hereby authorized and directed to execute the resolution passed on the 26th of June, 1873, by the Osage national council and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 8th of July, 1874, for the payment of the balance of the debt as fixed and limited by said resolution out of the proceeds of the sales of the Osage lands now in the custody of the United States: Provided, The authorized authorities of the Osage Nation request the payment of the same: And provided further. That the agent of the Osage Indians shall not retain or appoint any person as an employé of his agency other than persons belonging to the Osage Nation except for sufficient reason, to be first certified to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and approved by him.

I am informed by the Senator from Iowa that I may now modify this amendment so as to make it the amendment which I proposed awhile ago, and I shall do so, as it simplifies the question. The amendment will be so modified as to assume the shape of this amendment.

A claim or a debt has existed against the Osage Nation of Indians for a great many years called the Vann and Adair claim, for services for a great many years called the Vann and Adair claim, for services rendered by these men as attorneys for the Indians. The amount is large and the debt is justly due, admitted to be justly due by the Indians, and they have been very anxious to pay it, but they are not willing to pay the full amount. It is within the power of the Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior at any time to pay that amount of money out of the Indian fund. A portion of the debt has already been paid. They are very anxious that this matter should be settled and disposed of. They therefore ask that the Secretary of the Interior examine this debt, look into the merits of the claim, and that he allow the sum, subject to their approval, so that the subject the interior examine this debt, look into the merits of the claim, and that he allow the sum, subject to their approval, so that the subject may be disposed of officially, and that they will not be in danger of paying more than they think they ought to pay.

I could explain here, if it were necessary, the history of this claim. It is a just claim. The Indians admit that it is strictly due; they admit that they are indebted; and all they desire is protection against an overallowance. The chief of the tribe told me a few days ago myself, at my room, that he would not object to a few thousand dollars more or less, but they are anxious that the claim should be setmyself, at my room, that he would not object to a few thousand dol-lars more or less, but they are anxious that the claim should be set-tled. It has been hanging over them for nearly ten years, and it is a large claim. All they ask is that when it is allowed by the Secre-tary of the Interior they shall be consulted. That is the whole of the subject. As it is now, the claim can be allowed without their being consulted at all. A portion of the debt has been paid. Two or three years ago in the Senate I introduced a resolution of inquiry upon this very subject myself. I think the amendment should be allowed. It is at the desire of the Indians. I am familiar with the history of the claim myself. I have talked with the chief very lately. It is inst. is at the desire of the indians. I am infinitar with the instory of the claim myself. I have talked with the chief very lately. It is just, it is fair, and they desire to be protected in the amount which may hereafter be allowed; but they are very anxious that it should be disposed of finally. I therefore hope that the amendment will be

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, against which the Chair understands the point of order to be withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, how-This is a very familiar claim; it has been many times considered; and it is now proposed to place it upon this Indian appropriation bill. As I understand the facts, and the Senator from Missouri will correct me if I am mistaken, this amendment if adopted would compel the Secretary of the Interior to pay $180,000 out of the funds of the Osages. It leaves to the Secretary of the Interior no discretion whatever. It directs him to pay a certain sum in pursuance of a resolution of the council of the Osages. As I understand, this council have already directed the payment of this sum, or rather they have directed the payment of $230,000, of which sum $50,000 has already been paid by the present Secretary of the Interior, or by a former Secretary.

former Secretary.

I do not wish to place any obstacle in the way of a proper adjudication of this question. It is claimed, I know, and very seriously and strenuously, by the representatives of Vann and Adair that they rendered services to these Indian tribes for which they should receive compensation. That claim, whatever it may have been, has been considered by the departmental officers or by the Secretary of the Interior, and has been the subject of investigation by both branches of Congress. What I object to is placing the amendment upon an appropriation bill. I think it ought to be acted upon independently and separately, and stand upon its own merits. The Committee on and separately, and stand upon its own merits. The Committee on Indian Affairs last year made a considerable effort in the way of in-vestigating this claim, as my friend from Missouri will very well recollect, and the committee were divided in opinion as to what should be done with this question. It appears here in the shape of an amendment to be placed upon an appropriation bill. If this amendment is placed upon the bill, there is no escaping the payment of the whole of this sum. I think it is unjust to attempt to place it upon this bill, this sum. I think it is unjust to attempt to place it upon this bill, unjust to this Indian tribe, although they have agreed to pay this sum, but in the Indian council I believe there is a minority at least of these Indians who are opposed to the claim. I think it ought to be fully and fairly considered by a committee of Congress, and then passed upon on its own merit by the Senate and the House.

Mr. BOGY. I would say in one word that the object of the amendment is to protect the Indians. It is to prevent this debt from being allowed, as it may be allowed now by law at any time and paid out of the Indian funds. If the amendment is adopted, the payment can allowed, as it may be allowed now by law at any time and paid out of the Indian funds. If the amendment is adopted, the payment cannot be made without the consent of the Indians; they would have full control over the subject. It is a large claim, and it is an old claim, as my friend well says, and that is the reason why it should be disposed of. It has been before us two or three times. The Senator admits himself that these people have rendered services, and that there is some merit in the claim. He does not deny that, but he says it has no business on this appropriation bill. If I had time to look over the bill I could find private claims in the text of the bill now. over the bill I could find private claims in the text of the bill now. There can be no objection to the amendment; it is for the protection of the Indians. The Secretary is not compelled to allow the full amount, and whatever he does allow the Indians may refuse to sanc-

Mr. ALLISON. No money can be paid except by appropriations. The Secretary cannot pay one dollar of this claim until Congress acts upon it. It is well known that the Secretary of the Interior is opupon it. It is well known that the Secretary of the Interior is opposed to the payment of this claim or any portion of it. These attorneys have received $50,000 already for the services which they claim to have rendered. When that was received, as I understood it was upon the idea that it was to be in full for those services. This provision, if placed upon this bill is no restriction upon the Secretary of the Interior. Is it claimed that he can pay a larger sum unless restricted by this law? No sum will be paid unless we pass a law authorizing its payment. I do think that it is not proper to place this character of claims upon an appropriation bill providing for the this character of claims upon an appropriation bill providing for the future service of the Indians. No part of this can be paid until we act upon it.

Mr. OGLESBY. What is the amendment pending !

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL in the chair.) amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of line 768, on page 32, the following words:

And the proper officers are hereby authorized and directed to execute the resolution passed on the 26th of June, 1873, by the Osage national council and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the 6th of July, 1874, for the payment of the balance of the debt, as fixed and limited by such resolution, out of the proceeds of the sales of the Osage lands now in the custody of the United States:

Provided, That the authorized authorities of the Osage Nation request the payment

Mr. OGLESBY. I would ask if the Committee on Appropriations have referred that amendment to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate? I ask the honorable chairman if the subject has been referred to the consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir. The honorable Senator from Missouri introduced this amendment a few days ago and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations reported it back without recommendation, and it was laid upon the table. The Senator from Missouri now offers it on his own responsibility to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. It has not been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs ? Mr. ALLISON.

Last year the Senate-I mean this year for this bill? Mr. OGLESBY.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. OGLESBY. This proposition was considered of sufficient importance heretofore to be referred on two separate occasions to the Committee on Indian Affairs, certainly once directly by the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Indian Affairs gave the subject very considerable attention and reported to this body upon it adversely once, almost with unanimity. It was referred back to the Committee on Indian Affairs and considered in full with all additional information on the subject brought before that committee for consideration. The Committee on Indian Affairs instructed me to report back adversely upon this claim, and I made in open session near the close of the last session of this Congress, by the direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, an adverse report upon this claim. It is a matter of considerable importance, and I can scarcely think Senators will be willing here upon an appropriation bill to take up an item like this that refers to the proceedings of the Osage Indian council and that refers to contracts made between Vann and Adair, two Indian attorneys, who first made this contract with the Osage Indian tribes, and refers to the Indian treaty itself, and which is a contract that covers a great deal of territory. I say I can hardly think that the Senate would pass this amendment upon an appropriation bill the senate would pass this amendment upon an appropriation bill here, and pass it without sufficient or at least without some consideration of the subject. It involves $180,000 of a fund that belongs to the Osage Indians, a fund under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior has declined to pay that amount; he has declined to recognize it. Fifty thousand dollars of the claim was paid to these attorneys. They accepted it, but, I believe, under some sort of protest. Now they come in and ask again and again for $180,000 more.

It is said that the chief of the tribe and the council of that tribe of Indians are disposed to recognize this claim and permit it to be paid out of that fund. That belongs to all the Osage Indians as well as the council and the chief of the Osage tribe. Neither the President of this body nor the members of the Senate can tell how many of these Osage Indians have been consulted on this subject. Great force is given to the fact that the council has consented to it.

The $50,000 more than paid all the attorneys whatever they were entitled to. It was more than an abundant fee for all the services they entitled to. It was more than an abundant fee for all the services they ever rendered. I beg leave to say that the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, now prostrated by sickness, once an honorable member of this body, defeated the purpose to swindle the Osage Indians out of their lands to pay Messrs. Vann and Adair. He was the honorable member of this body who defeated the effort to divest these Indians of their lands and stood by the tribe. He defeated the treaty and defeated the legislation on the subject. Vann and Adair had a and defeated the legislation on the stoject. Value and Adair had a contract with the Osage Indians, it is true, from which they have received $50,000. At one time they had a contract which would have given them half the proceeds of all that was saved by this proposed treaty with the Osages or by the proposed law of Congress that would have taken their land from them at about sixteen cents an acre. The Secretary of the Treasury did more service toward that tribe when he was a member of this body than all the lawyers they ever had in this body. Yet those attorneys had a contract with the Osage Indians through their council and their chief. I understand their chief is here trying to help put this amendment through against his tribe. I understand he is here getting Senators to vote this appropriation of money from his Indians.

of money from his Indians.

Vann and Adair have been paid all they have earned, and a fair investigation of this case will satisfy the Senate, I doubt not, that another dollar ought never to be paid to them. They were to have a large sum. I do not know but that the attorney's fees would have amounted to over $2,000,000 at one time. They finally did agree to take $330,000, and afterward they knocked off a hundred thousand dollar ware and were constitution with this council of Cases India. take $330,000, and afterward they knocked off a hundred thousand dollars more, and upon consultation with this council of Osage Indians and this chief, they consented to take $230,000, and they finally did receive $50,000 from the Secretary of the Interior; and now they want the balance of that $230,000, a balance of $180,000 more, and they want the Senate of the United States to place such an amendment upon an appropriation bill and take it out of the funds of these wild Indian tribes for this attorney fee. It has been reported against twice by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I stand here, if I stand alone, to oppose it once more.

alone, to oppose it once more.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator from Illinois is entirely mistaken when he states that it has been reported adversely from the Committee on Indian Affairs. There has been no report made. The subject was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I am not aware of any report. I think the Senator is mistaken. There was no adverse report.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator from Missouri is right if he says there was no written report. I made a report verbally in open Senate twice against the claim. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCreery] was present and heard me make a report on it, and although it was not a written report he took occasion to compliment me on the emphatic character of it.

Mr. BOGY. I will tell the Senator that he is entitled to the same compliment to-day, because he is again very emphatic. This is not the proper time to go into the merits of this claim. The object is to permit, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon the claim, but not to pay it without the consent of the Indians. I say as a matter of law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to do so now and to pay the money. He has done so before in part. Fifty thousand dollars of this money has heretofore been paid without the knowledge or consent of these Indians, and by law the Secretary can pay the money at any time now, and there would be no protection to these Indians. They want protection.

It is true that the chief of the Osages is in the city and that he is desirous to have this amendment passed. It was given by him to myself. It is his own amendment. I would ask the Senator from Illinois, Who is authorized to represent their interests but their chief? Who is authorized to speak for them but their council? Who is au

Who is authorized to represent their interests but their cinies? Who is authorized to speak for them but their council? Who is authorized to speak for any organized body, be it a nation or a tribe, but some organization, council, or senate, or congress? Certainly the chief has some right as the agent and the representative of that tribe. He wants this amendment adopted. Whether he be a bad man or a good man, whether he is anxious to participate in fraud, I know nothing about it; but he is very anxious that this amendment should be adopted and that this representative the result of the state of th adopted and that this money shall not be paid without the consent of the nation; not of the council, but of the nation, their own nation, and certainly there is the protection. The intention of this amendment is to protect the Indians.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 11, noes 13;

no quorum voting..

Mr. PATTERSON. I call for the yeas and nays in order to get a quorum.

Mr. ALLISON. The yeas and nays will be necessary unless the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think it is quite apparent that there is no quorum here. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at

Mr. INGALLS. I hope not. I hope we shall finish this bill. We can get through with it in fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will withdraw my motion until it is ascertained whether there is a quorum here or not. If there is no quorum I shall renew the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, to test whether there is a quorum

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted-yeas 16, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gold-thwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Norwood, Ransom, and Withers—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Dawes, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Teller, Wallace, and Windom—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Boutwell, Burnside, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morton, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Wright—37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that all the amendments may be concurred in with the exception of those specially reserved as we went along. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is proposed that all the amendments be concurred in except those that were specially reserved. Is there objection? There being no objection they will be considered as having been adopted. The first reserved amendment will now be The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 741, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words "one-fifth" and inserted "one-third;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend for the subsistence and civilization of the Osage Indians, out of funds belonging to them now in the Treasury of the United States, §100,000, of which amount not over one-third shall be paid to the said Indians per capita.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir. I move to amend by striking out "one-third" and inserting "one-half;" so that of the $100,000 proposed to be paid to the Osage Indians, one-half shall be paid to them per capita. The bill as originally reported provided that one-fifth should be paid. The Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment substituting one-third. I move that one-half of the $100,000 shall be paid to them per capita.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that "one-half" be inserted in lieu of "one-third" as proposed by the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that Mr. INGALIS. I understood the Senator from lows to say that there would be no objection interposed to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not quite say that. The Committee on Appropriations agreed to the provision as reported by them after considerable discussion. We thought one-third would be quite sufficient to test the experiment, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations reported one-third instead of one-fifth. Now the Senator from Kansas proposes to enlarge it to one-half. I do not think the amendment is of such importance as to divide the Senate particularly upon it, because it must go to the House for their concurrence; and I trust the Senator from Kansas will not press his amendment so as to ask the Senator from Kansas will not press his amendment so as to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. INGALLS. The Osages are an independent nation. They are a distinct political sovereignty. They number about twenty-eight hundred. They are entirely capable, in my opinion, of self-government. They have a fund in cash in the Treasury amounting to something in excess of $3,000,000 at the present time and from lands, and from other assets they will realize no less than $5,000,000, which, added to that, gives them an aggregate of between eight and nine million dollars, making them the wealthiest community upon this continent, whether white, black, or of any other color. They have made very considerable advance in civilization, and they are exceedingly anxious that of this small pittance provided for their civilization and improvement a certain portion shall be distributed to them per capita to dispose of it as they see fit. The entire amount divided between the tribe pose of it as they see fit. The entire amount divided between the tribe per capita would be about $35, I think. If one-half of this is given to them for their own personal distribution or expenditure, it would be about $17.50 a year. If we intend to bring this tribe of Indians up to be self-governing, self-reliant, and to accustom them to the management of their own affairs, it certainly cannot be harmful to trust them individually with the expenditure of $17.50 per annum.

I trust that upon a proposition that is so fair and so just as this, and that is open to no possible objection on the score of economy—because this does not come from the Government at all; it comes from the funds of the Indians themselves—no objection will be offered by the committee having this subject in charge.

Mr. SARGENT. The first step taken in dividing this money into per capita sums for the Indians was a mistake. Even one-fifth of it ought not to be given to them. Most of these Indians are merely blanket Indians. It is nonsense to talk about their being a civilized tribe. The larger proportion of them have no elements of civilization among them at all. They are as wild as almost any Indians, except that they are not quite so dangerous. The amount of money which that they are not quite so dangerous. The amount of money which will be parceled out to them will probably be spent for no beneficial purpose at all. They are not far advanced, and they have no use for money in such a way. They are our wards, and we should take care of them and furnish them the best articles judiciously purchased and adapted to their good. I do not think we ought to make it one-fifth, and if we say one-half, then we had better abandon our whole system of taking care of the Indians. There may be some vice in the system; but I am opposed to dividing up among them a large amount to be expended. to be expended.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from California states that my remark in regard to the Osage Indians is all nonsense. I beg to tell him that these Indians are just as capable of representing a State in this body and upon this floor as the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I merely wish to say that I did not use the discourteous remark which the Senator imputes to me; and as he has followed it up with a remark that is extremely discourteous, I disdain to make any further reply.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the matter can stand as it is, Mr. President;
I am entirely satisfied. These Indians are capable of self-government, and they are not "blanket Indians" in the sense in which that ment, and they are not branket includes in the sense in which that term is ordinarily used. They are capable of taking care of themselves. They have an independent political organization, with their own council and their own heads of affairs; and they are entirely capable of managing this branch of their own affairs. They ask this themselves. I say that, if we are to bring them to a condition where they will be self-sustaining and self-reliant, we certainly cannot begin better than by granting them this small, insignificant sum annually to spend upon their own nation.

Mr. SARGENT. I am informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that there is not a full-blooded Indian among them who wears white men's clothes; that they are in a state of barbarism. Unless we desire to throw aside the whole system which we have originated with so much care with reference to the Indians we ought orginated with so much care with reference to the indians we ought to apply it in this instance, and not only apply it to these Indians but everywhere, or it should be entirely abandoned.

Mr. BOGY. I will say that I presume the Commissioner of Indian Affairs never has seen fifty of these Indians in his life.

Mr. INGALLS. By his own report there are two hundred and fortyfour of them who were wearing civilized dress at this time.

Mr. SARGENT. The remark I made was that there is not a full-bleeded Indian among them who were such its representation.

blooded Indian among them who wears a white man's clothes.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the Senator from California, in saying that none of these Indians wear white men's clothes, is undoubtedly mis-

Mr. SARGENT. By ordinary comprehension there would be half-breeds to which that would apply. I spoke of those who were fullbreeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will

The CHIEF CLERK. After the words "per capita," in line 742, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted the following words:

And out of this appropriation he is hereby authorized to pay for goods and supplies furnished the Usage Indians while upon a hunt during the season of 1875 and 1876 to an amount not exceeding $14,000.

Mr. BOGY. I objected to this amendment before in committee, and gave my reasons. It is hardly worth while for me to restate them now. I said that there was no evidence before the Senate that we ought to make this appropriation. I am unable to understand how $14,000 could be required to supply Indians upon a hunting ex-There is something wrong in the amendment, and we have or evidence to justify this thing at all. There is not a particle of evidence on the subject. It may be that there was some evidence before the committee, but we have not been furnished with that evidence here; and it seems to me the whole amount is entirely too We all know that the Indians need no supplies and no extra large. We all know that the Indians need no supplies and no extra clothing when they go out upon their hunting expeditions. They camp out; they have their own ponies, their own small quantity of ammunition, their goods, and they feed themselves from the very day they leave their homes. The hunt may be a failure, or it may not; but they are always able to supply themselves with food, and I am perfectly satisfied that this amount of goods was not furnished to these Indians to be used by them in a hunting expedition. It is an utter impossibility, and the amount should not be allowed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of they hole.

The amendment was concurred in; there being on a division-ayes

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inerted the following proviso in the appropriation for the Pawnees, beginning in line 784

Provided, That $5,000 of this sum may be used in the erection of a school build

So as to read :

For support of two manual-labor schools, per third article of same treaty, $10.000: Provided That $5,000 of this sum may be used in the erection of a school building.

Mr. BOGY. It was my objection to this amendment that caused it to be reserved. I say the sum of $5,000 is entirely too large for building a school-house in the Indian Territory. It is a misappropriation, but I will not press my opposition to it.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the maximum sum. As the Senator will see, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior may use a sum not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. BOGY. They will be sure to use all of it.

Mr. ALLISON. They may want the entire sum for the purpose of erecting the school-house, and placing the proper furniture in it, or they may use only one-fifth of it. I think it had better stand as

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the amendment will prevail.
Mr. SARGENT. I should like to make one remark. This is to be a boarding-school, a school where scholars are to be boarded. I understand furthermore that that kind of a school is an absolute neces sity; because unless the children are separated from their parents you cannot do anything toward separating or teaching them, or improving them in their manners. It is to be a boarding school. Three thousand dollars may put up a building of that kind, and it may require more to crect it and furnish it properly.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator from California has no right to say that it is a boarding-school. The bill does not say any such thing.

Mr. SARGENT. I have it from information given to me as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOGY. I have information that it is an outrageous appropriation. If it is designed for a boarding-school, it says simply a "school-building."

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to state for the information of the Senator from California that these tribes of Indians were removed from my State to the Indian Territory. They were removed only the last year, and upon their reservation there they had a school-house which cost several times the amount.

Mr. ALLISON. It cost a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly $50,000. They are a tribe of Indians far advanced in education and civilization. I think this appropria-far advanced in education and civilization. I think this appropriation is a very reasonable one and very just.

Mr. SARGENT. I agree entirely with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DAVIS. There is something in what is said by the Senator from Missouri, that this may be a log house and cost $250 or $300. If it is intended to be a boarding-school, let us put in the word "boarding" before "school" by unanimous consent. I know it is out of the regular order to let it go over; but there would be no objection to such an amendment whatever, I think A school-house, as the Senator from Missouri has said, may cost $250 or it may cost $500. We all know that. Now, $5,000 is to be appropriated for a school-house, and we are told by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, through the Senator from California, that it is to be a boarding-school; but the bill does not say so. My impression is that, unless by unanimous consent we cover the ground intended, the amendment ought to be voted down. I hope the chairman, who has this bill in charge, will submit to an amendment of that kind in his own language.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I rise mainly for the purpose of asking the Senate to go into executive session; but before I do so I want to say a word about these school-houses, and the folly and extravagance of the country now in building school-Everywhere men who have no interest in the tax-paying in the municipalities, townships, boroughs, and cities build extravagant school-houses for purposes of jobs. What do you want with a school-house costing $5,000 in the Indian Territory? It is ridiculous; it is trumpery; it is dishonesty. A Senator said here that the school-house which these Indians left in Nebraska cost a hundred thouse of the school house which these resets anything which had man will agree to sand dollars. A house can cost anything which bad men will agree to give to corrupt men who are the contractors; but to think of a log house costing $5,000; it is wrong.

I am as much in favor of education as anybody can be, but I do not believe that education furnishes brains, and I do not believe that colleges and schools make men fit for rulers; yet I am satisfied that people who are fitted by nature to take the lead in the world will be much benefited by having a school to cultivate them and improve their minds and hearts. It is better to cultivate their hearts than their minds, and if you make them good in health and good in heart they will be good people as leaders; but to think of spending all this money to build a log school-house out in the Indian country, where half the people have no clothes on except a breech-cloth, is ridiculous. Therefore, in order to dispose of this subject for the present, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania not to press that motion. We can finish this bill in fifteen minutes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. No, we shall not.
Mr. ALLISON. In twenty minutes.
Mr. CONKLING. Let us try to finish it.
Mr. ALLISON. There are only three or four amendments more.
Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I shall occupy more than five minutes myself, and besides that, there is a very important treaty between this country and Europe, which I desire to bring before the Senate and the country.

Mr. SARGENT. We should finish the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Upon the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania I ask for the yeas and nays, that we may see whether or not we can finish an appropriation bill within a reasonable time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania

Mr. SARGENT. I submit an amendment, if in order, to meet the views of the Senator from West Virginia. In line 786 of the bill I move to strike out the words "school-building" and insert "building for a boarding-school."

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to ask the chairman in charge of this bill if the Indians ask for this school-house?

Mr. ALLISON. These Indians have been recently moved to the Indian Territory from their reservation in the State of Nebraska. They are now furnished only with temporary buildings. It is necessary if any of these Indians are to attend school that a building. sary, if any of these Indians are to attend school, that a building shall be erected for them. There is a fund of $10,000 devoted by treaty stipulation to the purpose of education. The only object is to provide a school-building in which the youth of the tribe may be able to attend school.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is it for the whole tribe?

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the whole tribe.

Mr. KERNAN. Did they have a boarding-school on their old reser-

Mr. ALLISON. The entire tribe has been removed to the Indian Territory. The old reservation is directed by law to be sold, and the process of sale is now going on. I think this provision is entirely cor-

Mr. INGALLS. I am inclined to think that this provision is a trifle extravagant. While I am in favor of all appropriations for education, especially for Indians, I am not sure that this is warranted by the facts relating to the Pawnee tribe. It appears by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that they have one school in operation at the Pawnee agency. During the past year the number of scholars who attended school was one hundred and ten. The same table of statistics states that $3,800 was expended for education last year and that no member of the tribe learned to read during that period.

Mr. KERNAN. Was it all for teachers' wages?

Mr. INGALLS. All, I presume, for teachers' wages. If $3,800 were expended last year and nobody learned to read, it seems a trifle superfluous to expend $5,000 for another school-house. It may be entirely correct and a wise expenditure of money; but I shall be inclined to death; it

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that last year the Indians moved over from the reservation in Nebraska to this place. Of course that interrupted their schools. They had no school building to begin with until temporary accommodations could be got for them, and it is not until temporary accommodations could be got for them, and it is not strange that under the circumstances very few of them learned to read. If Senators will look at the bill they will find that these are but manual-labor schools that are required under the treaty. The treaty says they shall be maintained. Manual-labor schools teach something besides reading and writing. They imply that, of course; they imply education, but they imply their training in habits of industry. This has been beneficial to the Pawnee Indians in time past from the fact that they have been reased from the law to the pawnee. fact that they have been rescued from the lowest stage of degradation almost of Indians until they have been more than half civilized.

I believe those who are familiar with the subject will bear me out in stating that the Pawnees are well advanced for Indians. Their in stating that the Pawnees are well advanced for Indians. Their advancement has been very encouraging indeed, and in these schools a great many of them have learned to read and write, although the statistics may not show an instance in the last year. They have been taught habits of industry and are well behaved. They are very friendly, and they are extremely friendly to the Government of the United States. My recollection is that the Pawnees have furnished the scouts of the United States in a great many cases where we have needed them. needed them.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is true.
Mr. SARGENT. The Pawnee scouts are now under General Terry, Mr. SARGENT. The Fawnee scouts are now under General Terry, and it seems to me these Indians deserve well at our hands. Formerly I had charge of this bill and my recollection, a little ancient however, is that these Indians were under charge of the Society of Friends, that they have taken great interest in their welfare, and that is a society which predominate so largely in the State from which my friend from Pennsylvania comes and which he so admirably represents.

The Society of Friends are peculiarly interested in these Indians. They go out there unselfishly, not mainly as teachers, because teachers are poorly paid indeed; but more is spent from the funds of this society than from the Government itself for these Indians. They make the contributions in all their quarterly meetings. That is a matter of missionary effort with them of most devout and unselfish character. The result has been seen upon these Pawnees. I remember that I myself at the time, when I was familiar with the matter and had charge of the bill, became peculiarly interested in the characteristics of the property of the characteristics. acteristics of these Pawnees, their friendship to the Government, their aid to us when we were at war with other tribes. Of course the progress of an Indian in civilization is slow. Nature in him strives the progress of an Indian in civilization is slow. Nature in him strives against it, and I do not think he ought to be ridiculed for the slow progress he makes or that we ought to be discouraged or despair of doing him ultimate good by the steps we take.

So far as the moneys appropriated in this bill are concerned, they are from funds paid for the exchange of their lands given to the United States. There is not a dollar there which our generosity bestows upon these tribes, and the same is true of two-thirds of the amount appropriated in the bill. It is money which we have given them for land now covered by our cities and farms and enjoyed by our propose and it is right that we should use it for the purpose of them for land now covered by our cities and farms and enjoyed by our people, and it is right that we should use it for the purpose of advancing them in civilization instead of keeping from them the inadequate means which we propose to pay them for lands which we took from them and turned over to our people. I say there ought to be a spirit of generosity on the part of the American people toward the Indians. The United States has agreed to give them school-houses, and their own money is taken to provide school-houses, and means for their Christianization and civilization ought to be provided in a proper spirit. This amendment ought to be liberally construed. in a proper spirit. This amendment ought to be liberally construed. Certainly liberality does not cost much where it does not come out of our own pocket.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Let us hear the amendment read as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. As amended, the proviso reads:

Provided, That $5,000 of this sum may be used in the erection of a building for a boarding-school.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted after line 1093 the following words:

For pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota,  $\S47,000.$

Mr. BOGY. I took no time to state my objections when I moved that this amendment should be reserved. We have no information here at all as to this large amount being necessary for these Sioux nere at all as to this large amount being necessary for these Sioux Indians. It is a very large sum of money, and we certainly cannot vote for an amendment of this kind without some information. We have none at all. It provides for additional employés in the several agencies of the Sioux, $47,000. This is a large sum of money, and I should like to be informed before I can vote for it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri will recollect that this covers the employés at all the agencies of the Sioux. There are seven different agencies in Dakota and Nebraska. This sum the Commissioner of Indian Affairs states is absolutely necessary for the employes of these agencies. Of course we are obliged to pay some respect to his estimate, and this sum has been used for the last two or three years, and a portion of the time considerably more was used for the necessary employés at these agencies.

The amendment was concurred in.
The CHIEF CLERK. The next reserved amendment is in lines 1112 to 1115 to strike out the following clause:

And the President of the United States is hereby directed to prohibit the removal of any portion of said Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory unless the same shall be hereafter authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. BOGY. I objected to striking out this portion of the bill as it came from the House and think it should be retained. I am not in favor of the removal of the Sioux Indians at any time to the Indian Territory. The object of this provision of the bill as it came from the House was to prevent anything of that kind being done without the special authority of Congress. I think that the bill as it came from the House should be retained without being amended in this respect.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did not consider the merits or demerits of this amendment. It is new legislation. Of course, these Sioux cannot be removed to the Indian Territory without special appropriations and special legislation therefor. It is a mere prohibitory declaration at best and it is in the nature of legislation, and I think it ought not to be admitted under our rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1393, after the word "that," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "hereafter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That contracts involving an expenditure of more than $2,000 shall be advertised and let to the lowest responsible bidder.

Mr. DAVIS. In the last year's appropriation bill that proviso read:

Provided, That hereafter contracts for transportation involving an expenditure of the amount of $1,000 shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder.

of the amount of $1,000 shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder.

In the present bill the committee recommend striking out the word "hereafter," and then it is hereafter $2,000 instead of $1,000. Striking out the word "hereafter" changes the existing law and I think it is a great injustice to many persons who might want to transport goods under the arrangement heretofore made. If parties know they can only get the contract through agents or through those who choose to favor others, of course there will not be the same competition.

I think the word "hereafter" ought to remain, so that all parties who desire to transport goods will have an equal chance. The amount has been raised from $1,000 to $2,000. That I think is wrong, but I made no especial objection to it in committee. I think it ought to continue at $1,000; but when you strike out "hereafter" what is the meaning of it? The meaning of it is that persons who have heretofore been in the habit of looking at the advertisements will be probably very little advertising.

I understand the smile of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who thinks there is nothing in it; but persons who have dian Affairs, who thinks there is nothing in it; but persons who have dian Affairs, who thinks there is nothing in it; but persons who have had experience believe there is something in it, or what is the object of having it struck out? Why is it necessary to strike it out? What is the object of striking it out? It is changing the legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. The law now provides that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall not make contracts except by public advertisements, to an amount exceeding $1,000. This bill as it came from the House enlarged that provision to $2,000, so that he could make contracts to the extent of $2,000 without public advertising. That was intended to apply in all the future, not to this appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations thought it wise to apply this provision Committee on Appropriations thought it wise to apply this provision enlarging the powers of the Commissioner to the present bill; but the Senator from West Virginia seems to object to it, and I care so little about it that I am entirely willing he shall have his own way, and that "hereafter" may stay. I think nobody will object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia propose an amendment?

inia propose an amendment †

Mr. DAVIS. O, no, sir. Let us disagree with the recommendation of the committee, and let the bill stand as it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is in concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out lines 1420 to 1427 inclusive, in the following words:

For this amount, to pay Marcus Erwin, of Asheville, North Carolina, for services as attorney in examining the papers in the purchase of a judgment on W.H. Thomas in behalt of the North Carolina Cherokees, $300; to be paid out of the moneys placed to credit of eastern band of Cherokees on the books of the Treasury, August 15, 1870.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not ress the retaining of that clause. It is a private claim. I have no oubt it is a just claim.

Mr. MERRIMON. If the Senator will just read it he will see that it is not a private claim.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon; I have read it.
Mr. MERRIMON. It is for services rendered under the direction of the Department, and I trust that the chairman will not insist upon a concurrence in this amendment. I understand from a member of the committee that he is satisfied the claim is entirely just, that it is for services which this person rendered at the instance of the Depart-ment. I do not think it can be properly regarded as a private claim at all.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the chairman to let it go.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Chair if all the reserved amendments are through with?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are.
Mr. PADDOCK. I move, in line 1107, to strike out "15" and insert "30," and in line 1110, after "Poncas," to insert "and Santees;" so as to read:

That the sum of $30,000 of this appropriation, in addition to that heretofore appropriated, may be used for the removal and permanent location of the Poncas and Santees in the Indian Territory.

The object of the amendment is that the Santee tribe of Indians which now remains on our public lands within the settlements of Knox County, in the State of Nebraska, may be removed also to the Indian Territory, if it be found practicable to do so. I think the chairman of the committee will not now object to that sensible propo-

Mr. ALLISON. I must object without some further information or recommendation from the Department having charge of Indian affairs. The Senator from Nebraska may be right with reference to this, but we have not the information necessary to act upon it intelligently.

Mr. PADDOCK. As I said before, when I proposed this amendment as in Committee of the Whole, I cannot see by what process of reasoning the Committee on Indian Affairs arrives at the conclusion that the Poncas, who are on a permanent, defined settlement which they own, should be removed to the Indian Territory, and the Santees, who are within the limits of a rich and populous county in the State of Nebraska, within its settlement on the public lands, without any interest whatever, with no permanent or defined establishment, should remain there and not be removed, as the removal of the Poncas is provided for in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year Messrs. Window, SHERMAN, and WALLACE.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent to retire from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks to be excused from further service on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Is there objection? The Chairs none.

Mr. HARVEY. I ask to be excused from further service on the Committee on Agriculture.

proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first call up the unfinished business according to the understanding, the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Friday, February 9, at ten o'clock a. m.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the memorial of Alexander Moffitt and M McEwen, asking for a further investigation of the charges made against the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table and the accompanying report printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY TO VETERAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. GLOVER also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4450) authorizing full payment of bounty to certain veteran vol-unteers, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be laid on the table and the accompanying report printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. SPENCER.

Mr. HARTZELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4193) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army, and that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I reserve the right to object until I hear

Mr. WILSO the bill read.

The bill was read. It authorizes and empowers the President to restore to his former rank and relative grade in the Army Thomas J. Spencer, late first lieutenant, Tenth United States Cavalry; provided that said Spencer shall not be entitled to any pay or allowances as an Army officer for the time he may have been out of the military

Mr. HARTZELL. I ask that the report of the Committee on Military Affairs may be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The said Thomas J. Spencer first entered the military service as a private in Loomis's Battery, Michigan Light Artillery, May 28, 1861. August 29, 1802, he was appointed second licutemant of volunteers, cavalry, and in February, 1863, he was detached for ordnance duty at the headquarters of General W. S. Rosecrans, commanding Army of the Cumberland, and subsequently continued on the staff of General George H. Thomas, in command of the same army. He remained on duty as an ordnance officer until the close of the war, and was mustered out of service September 15, 1865. He was appointed second licutenant Tenth United States Cavalry the 28th of July, 1866, and promoted first licutenant June 1, 1867. He was brevetted, for gallantry in action, first licutenant and captain, United States Army, March 2, 1867.

Testimonials from the highest military officials, such as General William T. Sherman, General George H. Thomas, General William B. Hazen, General J. D. Webster, and many others, of his gallantry and good conduct during the war, and of his efficiency and fidelity to duty, as well as respectful bearing and demeanor to his superior officers since his appointment into the Army, are submitted herewith, and in extenuation of the single offense which, in the judgment of a court-martial, was deemed sufficient to deprive him of his office in the Army after an honorable service of nearly fourteen years.

Lieutenant Spencer was dismissed from the Army by sentence of a court-martial, approved April 24, 1875, for writing to his commanding officer, Fart Richardson, Texas, the following letter, namely:

Sunday, July 19, 1874.

Colonel Wood:

SUNDAY, July 19, 1874.

Six: Any officer who refuses to shield the honor of the wife of a brother officer, when clothed with the power to do so and appealed to dispassionately, is a coward, or worse.

This has been your action in my case, and I denounce you as a moral coward. To the Secretary of War and the civil authorities I propose to submit my case.

First Lieutenant and Brevet Captain, United States Army.

The circumstances which led to the writing of this letter are briefly these:
Lieutenant Spencer, returning to Fort Richardson, Texas, after a month's absence in the field against hostile Indians, was informed of sundry scandalous reports affecting the honor and domestic peace of his family, which reports, he was man's quarrel, he sought the advice and friendly intervention of his commander, as the most judicious mode of showing the falsity of the scandal and of preventing future social quarrels that might lead to serious personal consequences. It is alleged by Lieutenant Spencer that the commander promised attention to the subject, but took no steps to comply with it. At length Lieutenant Spencer sought to avail himself of the presence of Colonel Joseph Taylor, acting assistant inspector general, United States Army, then temporarily at the post on official duty, and he requested of his post commander that the matter might be referred for investigation to that officer. This seems greatly to have excited the anger of his commander, and Lieutenant Spencer was answered with harsh words, and at length told to "shut up and leave him at once."

Smarting under what he deemed very unjust and unmerited treatment, Lieutenant Spencer was no other charge before the court, nor any defense by Lieutenant Spencer beyond a showing that he attempted the next day—after the first excitement had passed away—to withdraw the offensive letter through Captain Baldwin, of his regiment. In his letter to Captain Baldwin he said: "I was suffering and greatly excited at the time."

Lieutenant Spencer also showed by the testimony of brother officers that at all other times he had been prompt and faithful in the discharge of his official duties, and invariably respectful to his superiors.

The sentence of a court-martial is not known to the accused until it is published in general orders. Before the court in question no attempt, for obvious reasons, was made to show the exciting and aggravating circumstances which occasioned the disrespectful

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Having heard the bill and report read I have no objection to its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARTZELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESSES-J. M. WELLS AND T. C. ANDERSON.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HALE. I have received the following letter, which I respectfully present to the House:

CAPITOL BUILDING, Washington, D. C., February 7, 1877.

Washington, D. O., February 7, 1877.

Dear Sir: We beg leave to have presented to the House of Representatives, through you, this statement:

The cell or dungeon in which we are confined by the House of Representatives is damp and utterly without ventilation, so that the air is absolutely poisonous. For criminals such a confinement would not be humane. We are not criminals, but free citizens and officers of a State. We have the misfortune to differ with the majority of the House as to what constituted the proper discharge of the duties which we owe to our State as such officers.

The foulness of the air of this cell is already affecting the lungs of one of us [Mr. Wells] and he is threatened with serious illness therefrom.

Yesterday we were transferred by the order of the Speaker to a room better lighted and ventilated. To-day, by the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms, we have been retransferred to this cell.

Yours respectfully,

J. MADISON WELLS.

J. MADISON WELLS. THOS. C. ANDERSON.

Hon. Eugene Hale, Representative from Maine.

I have been, Mr. Speaker, my attention being called by this letter, to the place where these gentlemen are confined. I can have no doubt, since seeing the room, that what they stated as to its being unwholesome and the air being poisonous, is correct. It is a little room in the basement of this Capitol, with but two windows, opening upon no sunlight, but upon a narrow confined court into which no gleam of sunshine can ever enter. It is a small room. These two men are confined there constantly day and night. They sleep in this room. The gas escapes constantly and poisons the air. One of these gentlemen is at present stretched upon a sick bed. It is not, I think, proper, it is not safe that they should be kept there longer.

I am glad to state, as this letter has told us, that the Speaker humanely interfered and had them transferred to a better place, I presume. Why it was or how it was that the Sergeant-at-Arms retransferred

Why it was or how it was that the Sergeant-at-Arms retransferred them to this bad and unwholesome place, I do not know. But it is a thing of the highest moment to this House. These men are here under our summons. They are here under order of the House, and we should see that while they are held here they are properly regarded and treated. There is no danger, and never has been, of escape on the part of these gentlemen. They came here voluntarily on being sub-pensed in New Orleans, and were arrested on the morning of their arrival at their hotel. For a time they were kept, as was proper, I am told, at the hotel over at the corner, the Congressional Hotel. I have never heard that anybody in charge of them saw anything in-dicating any desire on the part of these gentlemen to escape. On the contrary, they have from time to time sought and have requested per-mission to give testimony before one of the committees of this House, and have at last been granted that privilege. They are there in this little room by themselves, constantly stood over by a deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

This morning I stopped in to see them so that I might prove for myself what was the situation. I am able to say that no one, unless it be counsel, is permitted to speak to these gentlemen in private corference without a deputy sergeant-at-arms standing over them to listen what he says. I had nothing to say to them but what might be publicly stated here, but I discovered that they were under close guard and that these gentlemen are kept in a dark place, a dismal place, a damp place, a dangerous place, with the gas constantly escaping, and I believe that it is not a fitting thing that these men, the officers of we of the States of the Union, who came here valentarily and officers of one of the States of the Union, who came here voluntarily and have been desirous to testify from day to day, should be so held. It is not proper, it is not fit; I will go further and say it is not decent that this treatment should be extended to them. I would be glad that what the Speaker undertook to carry out, as I understand from this letter, should be done, and that these gentlemen should be removed to a proper place; and I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and upon it I call the previous question.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to be heard before the gentleman calls the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I will give these gentleman the opportunity to be

Mr. COX. Let the resolution be first read. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved. That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to remove J. Madison Wells and Thomas C. Anderson, the witnesses now held in custody by the officers of the House, and now confined in this Capitol, to a place more suitable, and properly lighted and ventilated; to a room where the comfort of the witnesses may be secured and where their health may not be endangered.

Mr. COX. Is it decided by the Chair that this is a privileged ques-

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is; it is one that touches the privileges of the House.

Mr. HALE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York,

Mr. HALE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox.]
Mr. Cox. I would remind the House of Representatives that the last House, which was republican, at least in form, sent Mr. Stewart and Mr. Irwin to the same "dungeon," to the same room, as I am informed, in this Capitol, occupied by the board. There was no complaint then made about the atmosphere. The same complaint about atmosphere is often made about the Hall of the House of Representatives. I do not know but what the atmosphere of this House and its surrounding rooms has become more or less tainted since that time. surrounding rooms has become more or less tainted since that time.

But whatever may be the facts as to this matter, one thing can be said, and that is, these men now in custody can be relieved at any time when they choose to purge themselves of their contempt. All they have to do is to answer the questions propounded to them and to tell the truth in a great transaction that concerns the whole nation. Either of them or all of them can have sanitary relief by telling the truth. [Laughter.] It is health to answer truly. It is no uncommon thing for the House to send recusant or contumacious witnesses to the common jail of the District of Columbia, there to be held in strict confinement until they shall have purged themselves of their contempt. It is nothing unusual. It should not be complained of. The only thing extraordinary about it is the nature of the transaction and the stupendous quality of the crime, if crime has been committed, in regard to which they refuse to answer.

Mr. McCRARY. Will the gentleman state what questions these gentlemen have refused to answer?

Mr. COX. The gentleman should be familiar with what has taken place in the committee-rooms, while I may not be; but I understand what has taken place as to these witnesses. He denies that they have refused to produce the records which they were called upon to pro-

Mr. McCRARY. That is what they are confined for, and not for refusing to answer the questions. They are confined for refusing to produce the records of their State, which are not now in their posses-question whatever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the debate should be confined to the subject-matter of the pending resolution.

Mr. COX. I will again say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Mc-Crarr] that the House has disposed of that question by committing these men, and there is no unusual cruelty in the cause of their confinement or the manner of their treatment. The same penalty has been enforced on other witnesses. Why can they not, if they please, with the aid of their acute friends on this floor, purge themselves of the contempt of which they were committed by helping their friends in Louisiana or here to develop the facts as they exist in the interest of the Republic? But without disputing the fact, Mr. Speaker, which you have decided as a matter of privilege, (although I doubt whether it is such a question,) I am willing to have the question of humanity considered. That question involves the conduct of the Speaker or the Sergeant-at-Arms and the officers of the House in charge of these prisoners. An adoption of this resolution would be a reflection on prisoners. An adoption of this resolution would be a reflection on the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and before the resolution is passed I would like to have a response from that officer as to the facts in the

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that any communication from witnesses who are in contempt it seems to the Chair are privileged. It might be that they would communicate to the House their intention to comply with the requirements of the committee. Therefore the Chair is very clear upon the point that a communication from witnesses held in confinement is a privileged communication.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to take up a great deal of the time of the House before calling for a vote.

Some four days ago I learned that members of the returning board of the State of Louisiana were not being properly treated, and for my own satisfaction I endeavored to ascertain what truth there was in the report. I found the utmost difficulty in obtaining an opportunity to see these men. I had always supposed that a member of this House could of right I had always supposed that a member of this House could of right go into any room in the Capitol, even into a committee-room. But only by the most strenuous and repeated efforts did I succeed in visiting these men. After calling repeatedly at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, after getting permits that failed to be of any effect, after having deputies sent down with me to the room without any effect, I finally called upon the Speaker, and only then did I succeed in seeing these men. I believe firmly that without the interposition of the Speaker I would not have obtained an opportunity to see them, the Sergeant-at-Arms being himself absent. My conviction is, them, the Sergeant-at-Arms being himself absent. My conviction is, so far as his action is concerned, that he was and is anxious that these men should be well treated.

I desire to say, however, that so far as the persons in the Sergeant-at-Arms's office are concerned, my conviction is that it is their intention that these men shall not be well treated. I could not escape the conviction that the impression was given to the subordinates of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the officers under him that these men should not be well treated, and that impression is strengthened by the fact that they have been put back in that hole again.

Sir, these men have been confined in a room such as I would not dare to risk the life and health of any animal on my farm, however invaluable. I do not care what persons have heretofore been kept there, or by whom. It is an outrage, a gross outrage, to confine any person in such a room. The continuance of such confinement will bring this whole House into the deserved contempt not only of the bring this whole House into the deserved contempt not only of country but of humanity in general.

Think of it; an old man seventy years of age confined in a room where it is so dark that it is necessary to keep gas burning all day; a room that stinks, that smells like the den of some foul reptile, a room where thieves arrested around the Capitol are kept. I do not care what the offense of these men may have been; I do not care if they are murderers under sentence; this room is no place in which to keep them. Mr. Wells is ailing, unable to take food, and his health will be permanently injured.

will be permanently injured. I succeeded after a time in prevailing upon the officers of this House to remove these men to the committee-room of the Committee on Education and Labor, a well-lighted room, a sweet, clean room; a room where, upon inquiry, I ascertained a committee meeting had not been held for a month. The committee has no business, scarcely ever meets, and does not need the room at all. Even if they did meet once in a

Mr. COX. They will not answer in relation to the records. They conveniently put it out of their power to answer! One thing is sure, that this matter has been already disposed of by the House of Representatives. The House itself has disposed of it in so far as the committal is concerned for contumacy. It is too late for the gentleman from Iowa to raise that question now.

Mr. McCRARY. I simply desire that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] shall state the question fairly. He knows very well that whole House, and of the American Congress. The very idea was ab-horrent to me that any one should tolerate the thought of torturing horrent to me that any one should tolerate the thought of torturing any human being, ay, of even torturing an animal.

Now I learn with great surprise that these men have been by the authority of any one retransferred to that abominable dungeon. I hope this resolution will prevail, and if these men in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms will not obey it, then other resolutions will be in order. I do not want to say that the men in that office are not gentlemen, are not civil in their treatment of members of this House. But the impression has forced itself upon me that the study of Mrs. Dahlgren's book on etiquette would not hurt any of them.

Mr. COX. Allow me to say that the Sergeant-at-Arms has just informed me that he has done everything in his power, in a humane way.

formed me that he has done everything in his power, in a humane way, that Mr. Anderson is entirely satisfied with the room where he is, as he has told the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House.

Mr. CONGER. Let him tell us so.

Mr. COX. That remark shows the necessity of having something to offset a mere ex parte statement like that in the resolution. The Sergeant-at-Arms has moreover offered to place these gentlemen in other rooms, or to separate them or place them together, according to their wish and convenience. They have not all been satisfied. And although the Sergeant-at-Arms has assured me just now that he has treated them precisely as other witnesses have been treated here-tofore, by putting them in the same room, together if you please or separately, they are utterly dissatisfied, except Anderson, utterly irreconcilable. And I do not wonder at it.

Why, sir, is there any better place to put them in? Must we place them in a hotel and feed them at the public expense? Must we send them to the common jail? Is that better? Gentlemen objected to that when it was suggested. What can we do with recusant witnesses except to follow the precedents which you of the other side set in the last and other Congresses? Mr. COX. That remark shows the necessity of having something set in the last and other Congresses ?

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Wilson,] goes below any party feeling. I did not hasten to bring this subject before the House. I waited, as did the gentleman from Iowa, until I found that the Speaker's humane interposition had been overridden.

The majority of this House cannot afford to take the position which follows logically from what the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has said. This House cannot afford to keep these men in a bad, unhas said. This House cannot afford to keep these men in a bad, unhealthful place for the sake and with the purpose of extracting testimony from them. [A voice: Extorting it.] That is not a thing to be done at this day or in this country. It smacks of the thumb-screw and other instruments of torture. It menaces these men with the loss of health. Why † Because they do not produce papers which they have stated are out of their control.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Maine that he does not think discussion upon the question as to why these witnesses were committed is pertinent to this resolution.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to go into that. The Chair is right

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to go into that. The Chair is right undoubtedly.

Sir, the real question at issue here cannot be put out of sight by any talk as to what has been done heretofore. If any man (I do not care who he may have been) in the situation of these gentlemen has care who he may have been) in the situation of these gentlemen has been put in that place, in that little room, in that "hole in the walle" and kept there for any length of time, I do not care by whose order, it was an inhumane act; it ought never have been done, and, with the attention of the House called to it, would never have been allowed. These gentlemen are not satisfied. They are not querulous men who are seeking an opportunity to get before the House. They have waited ten days in this noisome place seeking to give testimony all the time. Their letter has been read. It is signed by Governor Wells and General Anderson, both of the gentlemen who are confined in this room. It declares their discontent and their suffering. It denies this room. It declares their discontent and their suffering. It denies any statement, by whomever made, that they are or that either of them is satisfied. I have seen them this morning; and I know that such is not the fact. Their health is impaired. That old man, Governor Wells, lies upon his bed taking medicine—an ill man. And we ernor Wells, lies upon his bed taking medicine—an ill man. And we are told that they are to be kept there until they produce papers over which they have no more control than I have or the Speaker of this House has or the Sergeant-at-Arms or any member or any citizen.

Now this is a plain question. The resolution is before the House. The House can, if it chooses, vote it down, and thereby declare, as the gentleman from New York has done, that these gentlemen shall be kept in that place at the peril of their health until they produce the papers. The House may exercise this menace, may inflict this torture upon them, if it chooses. But, as I have said, that is not a thing which we ought to do. It is not a thing to be done by any gentleman or any party or any House that professes to believe in maintaining and protecting the rights of the citizen.

I call the previous question.

I call the previous question.

Mr. COX. I hope the previous question will be voted down, so at we may refer this resolution to some proper committee.

these witnesses could be transferred, and he succeeded in finding the room alluded to by the gentleman from Iowa. The difficulty was that the room was under the control of a committee of the House, whose chairman objected to its being used for the purpose indicated. There is one fact which ought to be stated in reference to this subject, and that is that the room now occupied by these witnesses is the same which has been heretofore used for like purposes for many years. The Chair is fully aware that it is a gloomy room.

When these complaints were made the Speaker felt it to be his duty to go and see the witnesses and hear their statements in reference to the matter. He inquired first as to their food, and was answered that their food was ample and its quality good; that they had no complaint to make in that respect. Mr. Anderson stated to the Speaker that he was satisfied with the room, but that Governor Wells was not; that the health of Governor Wells was being affected by his oc-out; that the health of Governor Wells was being affected by his occupation of that room.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Speaker when that was?

The SPEAKER. That was two days ago, the Chair thinks. Yesterday the Speaker learned that the room which he had desired that the witnesses should occupy had been refused, and that therefore the Sergeant-at-Arms had taken them back to the room they had before occupied. While the Speaker feels that he has no charge whatever of these prisoners, he is quite willing to obey any action of the House upon this subject.

Mr. HALE. Gentlemen will bear in mind how carefully this resolution has been worded. It simply proposes to carry out what the Speaker undertook to do. Now I care little what one committee or another may say as to the occupation of its room. If this House directs its officer to put these men in a safe and comfortable room (and that is all that the resolution requires) the Sergeant-at-Arms will find a suitable place for the purpose. Nobody need have any doubt about that. The committees are nearly through with their business. I do not suppose that one in twenty of our committees is holding meetings from week to week. Now if the House gives this direction to the from week to week. Now if the House gives this direction to the Sergeant at-Arms, following out the course the Speaker undertook to adopt, (and I am bound to say he did all he could, but he had no power in the matter,) these men will be removed to a proper place. And that is all that is asked in this resolution.

Mr. COX. The Sergeant-at-Arms has said he has done all he could in the premises.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, rose.

Mr. HALE. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the proposition of the gentleman from Maine is apparently, on its face, entirely correct, and were it not for the comments the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] made upon the resolution and the character of the restraint which an officer of this House has seen proper in pursuance of his duty to impose upon these prisoners I should not feel called upon to say anything. But if it is true, as the gentleman from Iowa has stated, and as I assume upon his personal knowledge of the facts, that these gentlemen are not only restrained of their liberty, but in a condition where their health is liable to be seriously impaired and where this House and its officers are liable to be charged with inhumanity in reference to the character of that imprisonment, then in common with gentlemen upon this floor I believe we have no right to pursue course of that character even to witnesses as contumacious as these seem to be.

This is not the first instance, Mr. Speaker, when complaint has been made to the House of rooms allotted to witnesses held in contempt. made to the House of rooms allotted to witnesses held in contempt. The Speaker will recollect the case of Irwin, who was a witness before the Committee of Ways and Means, when we felt it to be our duty to commit him for contempt for refusing to answer questions propounded by that committee, and after he was incarcerated in the common jail by the entire vote of the republican party of this House, he complained of the character of the rooms and the danger to his health in consequence of dampness and other ill effects which he suffered. This House required he should produce certificates of physicians, and he did produce the certificates of Surgeon-General Barnes and another physician of the District of Columbia, and on those certificates his quarters were changed. Soon after he came to the bar of this House, made a clean breast of it, purged his contempt, and was set at liberty.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. WOOD, of New York. Certainly.
Mr. HALE. Has the gentleman from New York himself ever been in this place where these gentlemen are confined in Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have not.
Mr. HALE. Then I wish the gentleman would himself personally go there and see it.
Mr. WOOD of New York. I assume Mr. Speaker, and cannot but

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I assume, Mr. Speaker, and cannot but assume under the resolution committing these gentlemen to custody, our Sergeant-at-Arms has done the best he could under the circum-Mr. COX. I hope the previous question will be voted down, so that we may refer this resolution to some proper committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that, strictly speaking, these witnesses are not in his charge. The resolution passed by the House provides that they shall be kept in the close custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms has done the best he could under the circumstances. Our Speaker himself has told you they do not make any complaint to the Speaker; that they appear to be satisfied with their quarters; and certainly I cannot suppose any gentleman upon this floor can excite any sympathy or divert the issue in the minds of the Sergeant-at-Arms has done the best he could under the circumstances. Our Speaker himself has told you they do not make any complaint to the Speaker; that they appear to be satisfied with their quarters; and certainly I cannot suppose any gentleman upon this floor can excite any sympathy or divert the issue in the minds of the people of the country in reference to the necessity, the national necessity, for holding these gentlemen as they are at this time. When, however, we go further than that, further than mere detention, and assume to do that which is inhumane, then I, for one, will not support any conduct on the part of an officer of this House or of any majority of this House which shall attempt to undertake any persecution to that extent. But I submit, until we have some positive information of an official character as to this room and the alleged want of health on the part of Ex-Governor Wells—that until we have some such professional certificate as the basis for our action, we are not called upon to pass any resolution of this character.

Mr. HALE. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, but before doing so I should like to ask the Speaker how much of my hour remains, as I wish to call the previous question before it expires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has about twenty-eight minutes remaining.

Mr. HALE. Then I yield to my friend from Iowa for ten minutes.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from New York expresses a desire for official information touching these quarters. In the case to which he refers, that of Irwin, with which we are both so familiar, it appeared to us, although it was in another building, the room was above-ground with some light and air; and knowing that fact by the statement of our own officer, we required as to the effect upon the health of prisoner a certificate of his physicians. In this case I wish to say several of us here have, if it be possible for a Representative to give official information, visited these quarters. Among others, I went there, yesterday or day before, because of information from without which I will explain. An old Quaker friend of mine in Maryland wrote me a letter giving his personal knowledge of the elder of these gentlemen, Ex-Governor Wells, for many years, and his friendship for him, and further that he had seen it stated he was deprived of ordinary comforts at the peril of his life, and asked me to visit him and, if I found that it was as stated, to notify him and solicit permission to supply the wants of these witnesses held in custody. Accordingly I went down and found what is known among us popularly for years as the "Dungeon." No matter by what name called, it is a room with no opening except through a barred window upon a well with high walls, so that no fresh air can circulate, no current can possibly get to it. All the dampness there remains, and not a ray of God's sun can penetrate it except by violating all the laws of nature and penetrating the walls of this building.

I ask the House with these facts before us, with the fact that one of those witnesses is over seventy years of age—no matter how plucky that spirit within his breast may be, whatever his enemies may say of him they never say he is a coward or quaits in the presence of danger or persecution—I say, with the fact that that body is over seventy years old gentlemen may judge whether such a place is healthy or not for a man of those years. For myself, on investigation I found what the Speaker has stated, that there is no complaint in regard to fixed that there is no complaint in regard to food, that there is no charge of unkindness on the part of the attendants; but they are in a room in itself unhealthy, with certain attached parts to it not necessary to mention which are calculated to increase the impurity of the atmosphere as I am informed. Be that as it may, the simple fact is that both gentlemen have become sick. Both are old men, and in the nature of things the absence of fresh air and of God's sunlight must be injurious to the health of any men, especially of men sixty and seventy years of age.

I desire to say this much, sir, in order to avoid any occasion for delay touching what is called official information. For, I think, if gentlemen will simply look at the room themselves with the facts before them which are patent to their eyes they will say that it borders on cruelty to confine men of that age in such a place. And the character of the punishment seems unduly severe when you remember that it is not a refusal to testify to facts for which they are held, but a refusal to communicate papers which by State right they say they cannot and ought not to be compelled to produce. It is not, therefore, mere contumacy in the ordinary sense for which they are held, but because they stand on a right which is prima facie valid.

Mr. HALE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan,

[Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, allusion has been made here to the fact that other witnesses have been confined in former times in this same room. If that were so, and if the room was then equally bad with its present condition, when the matter is called to the attention of the House, such an evil should be remedied. I recollect most distinctly the complaints that were made by the gentlemen on that side of the House now present, when the majority belonging to another party sent witnesses to that room, and sent them to the jail in Judiciary Square. I remember, too, when witnesses have been sent by the party now in power to another jail in this city the complaints and the appeals which were made to this House and to the American morphism were to the great to the great to the great to the strenger to the contract of the con people in regard to the cruelty of such a transaction. But gentlemen will remember that those witnesses were confined in the sultry days of summer, when, if ever, the coolness of such rooms might have made them passable if not desirable when they were not damp, and when the air was not confined as now; when there was a very great difference in the time, and in the condition of the rooms. But whatever party or whomever inflicts such smaller transactions and the summer ever party or whoever inflicts such cruelty upon old men, upon sick men, upon witnesses before this House—witnesses, but citizens—cannot justify it to the American people. There can be no pretense of right or of justice or of humanity in such a proceeding as that.

The mere statement of this to the common American mind would produce the conviction of infamous wrong in this House; and no man would attempt or dare to attempt to justify any such conduct toward an American citizen when here simply as a witness—no man would dare attempt to justify it, as has been said by my friend from Iowa, if exercised upon the vilest criminal in the land. The days of owa, it exercised upon the vilest criminal in the land. The days of dungeous and thumb-screws and the torture of the rack, thank God, have passed away from the civilized world even for criminals. How far shall an American Congress approach those old means of torture of the body and now torture both body and mind? That is the question for us to consider. I lay no blame upon officers. I lay no blame upon the House in its action heretofore. But to-day the facts have appeared, and been spread before the House; the age of the prisoners, the sickness of one of them; the condition of the room, its filth, its dampness, its want of light and want of air. And whoever may have been confined there before, or by whatever authority they may have been confined there before, or by whatever authority they may have been confined there before, the record now is made up, and in my judgment we should be unworthy of our positions here if we fail to provide at the very first moment a suitable remedy.

Mr. HALE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. CLYMER. I will not require so much as five minutes. I desire to say on behalf of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and he desires it to be understood by this House and by the country, that he has exhausted all the power in his hands for the purpose of rendering these persons more comfortable than they seem to think themselves at this moment. He states further that all the other places in this Capitol ordinarily under his country are now in the respective of the He states further that all the other places in this Capitol ordinarily under his control are now in the possession of the committees of the House. And even if this resolution should be passed, it would not be within his power, without some action of the House, to better their condition. He assures me that in his judgment the rooms they occupy are well heated, well ventilated, and well lighted, save that one of them is not well lighted. He assures me that they are free from dampness, and he alludes to the fact in justification of his action, if it needs any justification, that this room was prepared by one of his predecessors, and is the one uniformly occupied heretofore by prisoners of the House. They are visited constantly by their friends and political associates and have all they require to eat and drink, and in the latter respect there has been no limit to their desires.

Mr. CONGER. Many members and other persons have sought access to these gentlemen and it has been denied.

Mr. CLYMER. I know nothing of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to state that the words "close custody" in the resolution have been construed by the Ser-

"close custody" in the resolution have been construed by the Sergeant-at-Arms to cut off such intercourse.

Mr. CLYMER. In that respect the Sergeant-at-Arms is but obeying the order of the House. And I beg further to suggest to the gentleman who makes these complaints, that it is clearly within the power of these persons at any time to unlock the door of their cell. They are there in contempt of the order of the House, and if they are the resolution in the power of the confort, it is suffer some little inconvenience, either as to health or comfort, it is their fault and not the fault of the House. They are contumacious witnesses, and while no member of the House upon either side would be guilty of inhumanity toward prisoners or toward any one in distress, yet when the persons in confinement have the power to release themselves, I say that, if they are not released, the blame rests upon them and not upon us.

Mr. HALF. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question right there. Would the gentleman himself, who is a humane man, by sickness and prostration and a reduction of the system bring these men to a condition where they would do what he wants them these their to a condition where they would do what he wants them to do in giving up these papers?

Mr. CLYMER. I would not. But if it be not in the power of the House to treat them differently, the Sergeant-at-Arms should not be thus proceeded against. And when I reflect that by the action of these men hundreds of thousands of people in this broad land have been brought to want and distress, I have no very warm feelings regarding these individuals, no matter what my opinion may be in regard to the treatment of prisoners generally.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire of the Chair at what time the hour expires? The SPEAKER. Fourteen minutes from the present time.

Mr. HALE. I yield then five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Banks.]
Mr. BANKS. The resolution which has been read states very clearly what the order, and of course what the intention, of the House was. It was that these men should be kept in "close custody." Custody was what the House required. That was all it did. It does not confer upon any officer, nor was it the intention of those who voted for it, of whom I believe I may have been one, that an inquisition should be established, which should compel them by punishment or cruelty to disclose what they thought they ought not to disclose. Still less was it the intention of the House to do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just said, to punish them for the indirect consequences which might follow from their act, to punish them for the wickdrays of which they may have been equility.

wickedness of which they may have been guilty.

Now, I think there is no precedent in the history of the House authorizing the execution of this order in the way in which it is now being done. I do not think the close custody, not with standing what the Speaker has said, means anything more than that these men should be kept in safe-keeping.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he mentioned that fact as an indication of what the Sergeant-at-Arms construed to be his duty.

Mr. BANKS. It is a question of construction. I do not censure the Sergeant-at-Arms. I know the difficulty of his position, and how delicate a thing it is for him to arrange matters of this kind. But the resolution requires nothing more than that these men shall be in the start happing of the House. Now they have not been in close construction. the safe-keeping of the House. Now they have not been in close custody. I understand that they have been taken from day to day before a committee and have given testimony, and there has been no order of the House allowing them to be taken out of custody and brought before a committee of the House, and how is it possible that the House can say that these men are to be punished when every day they are brought before a committee and required to answer the questions put

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the gentleman know that when before the committee they are constantly in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms? Mr. BANKS. I do not.
Mr. SPARKS. Well, I do.
Mr. BANKS. That is not close custody. I say that when a witness is before a committee he is not in custody; while before a committee he is a free man. And it would degrade the House of Representatives and the members of the committee when the witness was a prisoner to put questions to him and demand answer from him. In a prisoner to put questions to him and demand answer from him. In that moment he is a free man in the custody or in the keeping of the committee alone, and not in the custody or in the keeping of the Sergeant-at-Arms. But I will not debate that point.

Sergeant-at-Arms. But I will not debate that point.

What I want to say is this: When that room has been appropriated to the keeping of prisoners it has been in extreme cases. I remember very well the first occasion when it was so used. It was when some man had been accused of bribing the Senate in an impeachment case, accused of the use of a large sum of money for that purpose. He was asked what he did with the money that he had and he refused to answer. He could have answered that question, but because he refused to do so extreme men on this side of the House, who find their acts now coming hock to plague their inventors or who find their acts now coming back to plague their inventors, or-dered him to be put into the worst place they could find.

A single moment just to complete this statement. They put him in the worst place they could find. After a day or two, not wishing to give the information himself, another witness was brought forward who satisfied the committee what use was made of the money in question, and then he was released.

Now, these men cannot give an answer to the inquiry made of them; they cannot produce the papers that are demanded of them. And if they could, while they refused to do so they certainly ought not to be brought before any other committee of the House and re-leased from the safe-keeping in which the House has placed them by its order. Neither the committee nor the Sergeant-at-Arms has any right to disobey or disregard the order of the House in this matter.

Mr. HALE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio,
[Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. It seems to me the House is laboring under some misapprehension as to the real facts in this case some misapprehension as to the real facts in this case. These witnesses were summoned before what was known as the Morrison committee in New Orleans, and they were directed, by a subpæna duces tecum, to bring with them the records relating to an election. They had not completed the count for State officers when they received that summons to produce before a committee of this House papers which were essential to enable them to complete the count. For not producing those papers they are now in custody.

Since they were required to produce those papers before the complete.

which were essential to enable them to complete the count. For not producing those papers they are now in custody.

Since they were required to produce those papers before the committee at New Orleans the papers have been delivered up to the secretary of state of Louisiana, in accordance with a State law, and they are now in his custody. It is impossible that these witnesses ever can produce these papers before any committee of this House or before any authority in the world.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that he is now discussing a question not before the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am endeavoring to relieve the House of a misapprehension of the facts. One word more. Since that time these witnesses have been brought before another committee of this House, the committee on privileges and powers of the House. They have answered every question which any member of the committee desired to put to them. I know that for a time Governor Wells refused to answer some questions. But I think I am not mistaken when I say that finally all questions were answered that any member of the committee desired to have answered. Here is our respected acting chairman of the committee [Mr. Sparks] and he can correct me if I am mistaken. These witnesses have answered everything that has been asked them, and, it being out of their power to produce any papers, shall we, ought we to keep them in custody any longer?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentlemon allow me to ask him a

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentlemon allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Did not these witnesses themselves put it out of their power to comply with the order of this House to produce these papers?

Mr. LAWRENCE. They were required by law to deposit the papers where they have deposited them. They never refused to permit pers where they have deposited them. They never rerused to permit an inspection of the papers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the gentleman from Ohio does not intend to misstate the facts.

Mr. COX. Certainly not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg to assure this House, as a member of that committee, that he has misstated the facts in two important particu-

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. They did flatly refuse to submit these papers for personal inspection. And the law of the State of Louisiana did not require them to turn over these papers to the secretary of state at all. The returns were to be made to the Legislature of the State when convened, which was on the first Monday in January. For three weeks they were in contempt of this House. The law of Louisiwhen convened, which was on the first Monday in January. For three weeks they were in contempt of this House. The law of Louisiana does not require the returning board to deliver these papers to the secretary of state, to the Legislature, or to anybody.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The secretary of state takes the papers for the Legislature; that is all there is of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE. I do not think I can yield further. In order to obviate the difficulty about the power of the Sergeant-at-Arms, I will modify my resolution by adding to it these words; "and the Speaker shall designate a room to be used for such purpose." I now call the previous question on my resolution, as modified.

Mr. COX. I hope that the previous question will not be seconded, and that this resolution will be referred to the Louisiana committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he has anything to do with this matter. All he has done has been done in the direction of having the situation of these gentlemen made satisfactory. The Chair does not want this power.

having the situation of these gentlemen made satisfactory. The Chair does not want this power.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Unless this is done the House will have to designate the room or the Sergeant-at-Arms will be in as great a difficulty as ever. I think the Speaker ought to take this responsibility. The Sergeant-at-Arms has no power to take a committee-room, and I think the Speaker should assume that power.

Mr. HALE. The suggestion in my modification was simply to get rid of the difficulty, and it did not occur to me that the Chair would object, if the House should pass this resolution, simply to designate which room should be taken for this purpose. He would be simply acting under the order or direction of the House. I see no other way of meeting the difficulty as to the power of selecting a room.

The SPEAKER. The point with the Chair was that he did not want arbitrarily to go to a committee and say "You must give up this room."

Mr. HALE. I understand that many of the committees are through with their business. The Committee on Education and Labor, I am told, has not had a meeting for weeks, perhaps for months. I am told that the Committee of Elections is also through with its busi-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] demands the previous question upon the resolution as modified.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to the modification, but I propose, if the previous question be voted down, to move the reference of the resolution to the committee charged with the investigation of the Louisiana election.

Mr. HALE. Lock that the resolution

Louisiana election.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the resolution, as modified, be read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. HALE. Now I appeal to gentlemen not to vote down a resolution going no further than this does.

The question being taken on seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 88, noes 119.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. COX. I propose that this resolution be referred to the committee on the Louisiana election, with instructions to investigate the allegations therein contained and report at once to the House. I wish to add a word in reply to what fell from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

They have given a wrong impression to the House and the country as to this matter. They only speak two minutes and then call the previous question.

as to this matter. They only speak two minutes and the country as to this matter. They only speak two minutes and then call the previous question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Will not my colleague before he proceeds yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. COX. O, yes; let my colleague speak first.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. My colleague yields to me; and in continuation of his introductory remarks I say that the effort to mislead this House and the people upon this question is certainly, to say the least, not defensible upon any grounds of law or equity. Gentlemen here know very well, especially those who were members of the last and preceding Congresses, that we have had cases, in which they acted unitedly as a party, where witnesses for simply refusing to answer questions touching the appropriation of the public money were committed to the public jail; and when they asked to have their place of imprisonment changed to this Capitol, and produced in support of the application medical certificates from professional men of the highest standing, gentlemen on the other side voted unitedly to keep those witnesses in the common jail notwithstanding.

Now I ask the Clerk to read the proceedings in the case of Irwin in regard to which the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa were calculated unconsciously to mislead the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Speaker laid before the House a petition from Richard B. Irwin, praying that his place of imprisonment may be changed from the common jail of the District of Columbia.

The same having been read,
After debate,
Mr. Benjamin F. Butler moved that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Pending which,
On motion of Mr. Tremain,
Ordered, That the petition be laid upon the table.

Mr. Tremain moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now ask the Clerk to read further proceedings of the House as given on page 145 of the volume I have sent up. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Dawes presented a letter from W. P. Johnston, M. D., and Alexander Y. P. Garnett, M. D., physicians in attendance upon Richard B. Irwin, representing that his confinement in the common jail of the District of Columbia would be attended with results pernicious to his health.

The same having been read,
After debate,
On motion of Mr. Dawes,
Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.
Mr. Benjamin F. Butler submitted the following resolution, namely:
Resolved, That pending the examination and report of the Committee of Ways and Means upon the said subject the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and is hereby, instructed to retain said Irwin in his own custody, and not in the common jail.
And the question being put, it was decided in the negative—yeas 34, nays 160, not voting 94.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Among those voting in the negative on that question were some of my esteemed friends who now seem exceedingly exercised upon this case.

A MEMBER. Who are they?

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the names be read.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is not necessary. I do not wish to individualize gentlemen on the other side; but if they will look at the record, they will see that their position then was antagonistic to what it is to-day.

Now let me state the difference between that case and this. Mr. Irwin, a witness before the Committee of Ways and Means, was asked to testify as to the disposition of a certain amount of money which he had received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to dis-tribute in Washington to accomplish the purchase of a subsidy from Congress. He declined to answer. He was brought to the bar of the House and committed to the common jail of the District, after being allowed to remain at a hotel for several weeks.

allowed to remain at a hotel for several weeks.

Now in that case the contempt related merely to a matter of money. This case I submit is one of far greater magnitude, calling for more decisive and decided action on the part of Congress. These recusant witnesses refused to produce papers which, if in our possession, might have disposed of this presidential question and set this nation at peace. By their refusal to produce before the Committee in New Orleans the evidences of the shameful frauds perpetrated by that returning board they have produced a condition of things which is simply lamentable, our country being placed in such a position that the whole civilized world is filled with wonder and shame that under any possible circumstances the popular vote of this great nation should be determined by four men who stand before the world convicted of crime. victed of crime.

I assume that in the case of these persons the Sergeant-at-Arms has done his duty, and his whole duty. I cannot believe that there is anything in the elements of his character that would induce him to anything in the elements of his character that would induce him to perpetrate cruelty and inhumanity upon persons placed in his charge by the House. Hence I dismiss as entirely unfounded any accusation that the things stated here to-day have been done to these men. I will only say that, in my judgment, this subject should be presented in the proper form, and if there is anything wrong in the mode by which these men are held as prisoners, we should modify it so as to insure that no inhumanity shall be inflicted upon them.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to reflect upon the intention of any gentleman, but I wish to say that it looks to me very much like lionizing this returning board and making a pretense, in one sense, of humanity in doing it; in other words, making the old argumentum ad misericordiam when every other argument fails.

If these men were aggrieved why did they not come to the proper channel of communication, the Speaker of the House, instead of making their complaint to my distinguished friends from Maine and Iowa, [Mr. Hale and Mr. Wilson ?]

Mr. HALE. They had been there.

Mr. COX. I mean by petition in the ordinary form to be laid before

Mr. COX. I mean by petition in the ordinary form to be laid before the House

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They did not make any complaint to me. Mr. COX. The gentleman seems to have had some complaint made to him.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It was merely an act on my part of com-

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It was merely an act of my part of common humanity.

Mr. COX. O, yes, the gentleman seems to have had a complaint of some kind. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. An act of humanity, that is all.

Mr. COX. Again let me call the attention of the House to another fact, that the House has already adjudged the question of contumacy. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] well stated the proposition when he said these men had put it out of their power to allow these records and proofs to be produced; and I say that they have added crime to contumacy. They are in the possession of the House now, and my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] thinks that thereby the days of the inquisition have returned. I thinks that thereby the days of the inquisition have returned. I have no doubt when he occupied the chair as Speaker oftentimes he had to discharge the unpleasant duty of sending witnesses to the common jail; and this committee-room is a palace compared to the common jail of this District to which so many were consigned by the order of these "humanitarians" on the other side of the House.

Now what is this room? It is not a cell, it is not a dungeon, it is not a bastile; it is a committee-room of the House, eighteen by twenty feat in size.

Several Members on the republican side. O, no!
Mr. COX. O, yes! it is a room changed from an old committeeroom. It was changed or fixed up for the purpose of confining just or in the purpose of confining just such prisoners by a republican Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, Mr. Ordway. It is the same room where Mr. Wooley, of Ohio, was kept for three weeks uncomplainingly, and others since then. It is well lighted; it is well ventilated, and well heated, and over a cellar.

Mr. HALE. No; it is neither.

Mr. COX. I wish to close this debate now, sir. [Great laughter.]

It is well ventilated. It is heated until eleven o'clock at night. It has the attendance of one or two men, firemen and others. It is comfortable.

But my friend from Massachusetts thinks the confinement is too "close." Others complain these men have been too much enlarged; so as to go before a committee to testify. So they did thus go; but it was at their own request. They went before this committee to rebut certain testimony in the presence of their minute clerk, at their own

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. They were brought before the committee. Mr. COX.

Mr. COX. At their own request. Mr. CAULFIELD. They demanded it. Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, rose.

Mr. COX. The gentleman had better keep his seat; we have all the facts. [Laughter.] If we have not; my resolution sends this question to the proper committee to get the true state of the case, and you are one of the committee.

and you are one of the committee.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Then do not judge it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The members were subpœnaed, and after Governor Wells had partially testified—

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the rule requires gentlemen shall speak by consent of those baving the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COX. Of course the gentleman can do that.

My friend from Ohio said they never refused to submit those papers for inspection. I read from the record on page 44, Forty-fourth Congress, second session, Miscellaneous Document 34, part 1:

Hall of Chamber of Commerce, New Orleans, December 20, 1876.

Not waiving the demand for production of papers, documents, records, &c., mentioned in subpoens served on each member of the returning board, the committee desire at the present time immediate production for examination by the committee and inspection only of the following papers.

One, two, three, and four, and so on.

These papers, records, &c., were never produced for examination and inspection only. But that matter, as I state again, is foregone. These gentlemen were accused and convicted of contempt. It was not merely like Irwin's case for refusing to develop the stealing of a subsidy for which be was put in the common jail, but this case concerned the stealing the vote of a State and changing the result of the presidential election! And yet they come here after such grand, magnificent larceny, and ask favor of this House of the people; and the advanced republican side of the House say "O, the inquisition has come back!" [Laughter.]

come back! [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I deny that these men were badly treated. The gentleman from Maine has not properly stated it. He says they are going into decline because of bad food and confinement.

Mr. HALE. I said nothing—begging the gentleman's pardon—of cod. I made no complaint about that.

Mr. COX. The gentlem en said something about their systems being reduced by reason of their not being properly cared for.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. COX. I never interrupt gentlemen on the other side, and I do not desire to be interrupted by them. It is said that their systems are being reduced in this well-ventilated, well-lighted, well-heated room; and every day your champions of republicanism, your returning board, at their own request, are marched to the restaurant, where such provision is made for them that if they die they will die from repletion. [Laughter.] But why do gentlemen on the other side try to give the House and the country the impression that these men are becoming as thin as "Death the skeleton, and Time the shadow?" Let them answer the questions and produce the records, and they Let them answer the questions and produce the records, and they will be well. Gentlemen on the other side know that they have the power to do it. Why do you not advise them to do it now, eo instante, when the great trial is depending?

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me—
Mr. COX. No, sir; no, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York declines to be in-

Mr. HALE. Let me ask him just one question.
Mr. COX. No, sir.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York declines to be interrupted.

Mr. HALE. I yielded to gentlemen on that side to interrupt me.
Mr. COX. The gentleman occupied his hour and called the previous question. It was voted down. I have the floor now and I hope I will be protected while I am on the floor before I call the previous

Mr. HALE. I divided the hour with that side very c Mr. COX. I have no favors to ask of the gentleman. Mr. HALE. You have had them already. I divided the hour with that side very courteously.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. You have some poor men in prison and the gentleman is ranting over them.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for a few moments

for a few moments.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKS. As something has been said about these witnesses coming before the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House, of which I am a member, I would state that originally as I understand they were subpensed, and were examined in the committee as witnesses; but they have come before that committee repeatedly—that is, the various members of the returning board have were their own demand frequently come there—to offset or answer. apon their own demand frequently come there—to offset or answer testimony that had been given against them. No later than yesterday the examination of a witness then upon the stand was delayed because of the demand of the members of this board to be there and hear the testimony. They have been before that committee on their own request, and the committee is now delayed at this moment on account of the demand of these parties to be before the committee while other witnesses were being examined. These are the facts in the case so far as the action of that committee is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] demands the previous question.

mands the previous question.

Mr. COX. Before doing so I desire to say just one word more.

I want to correct wrong impressions. If the matter be properly investigated by the Louisiana committee, to which I desire that the resolution shall be referred, wrong impressions will be corrected.

These gentlemen seem to think that great harshness has been used by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I said awhile ago that they have all the benefit of the cuisine below; and as was said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Frye] sometime ago one of them at least was such a hearty Union man that he was driven into the swamps to herd with the alligators, but had such a staunch constitution that he survived the alligators, but had such a staunch constitution that he survived it. And now he lives down here below us in a style equal to that of any of our members. Besides, as I hear, they all are marched around the Capitol in custody with cigars in their mouths to enjoy a promenade in the salubrious evening air.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if it had not been for certain threats, if it had Why, Mr. Speaker, if it had not been for certain threats, if it had not been for the miscellaneous arsenal carried by one of these witnesses about his person, if it had not been for threats made (which can be proven) to kill, these men might long since perhaps have been allowed the free privileges which the gentleman from Maine enjoys in his abundance of riches. But, sir, we cannot treat these men just as we treat members of Congress. They are in contumacy toward this body. We cannot do, or rather we refused to do, in these cases this body. We cannot do, or rather we refused to do, in these cases what we did in the case of Pat. Woods, who thrashed a member of Congress in Richmond, far away from here; for we sent him to the common jail for three months on bread and water, like a common common jan for three months on oread and water, like a common criminal. We have not done that; we were too humane to do that. O, yes! We simply did what was done by you gentlemen on the other side, again and again and again in other cases; and now you complain of it. This complaint has no foundation, and so the committee will find out if they examine it. I hope the resolution will be I would like to have the bill of fare of these gentlemen made a part of my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. MILLS. Let the bill of fare be read.

Mr. COX. I send it up to the Clerk's desk to be read.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is that paper about?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I thought I heard something said about a bill of fare.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the bill of fare.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing about the bill of fare.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Did not the gentleman from New York ask to have it included as part of his remarks? I know of my own knowledge, in regard to Mr. Wells, that he cannot eat anything.
Mr. COX. I withdraw the paper and demand the previous question.
The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being upon the reference of the resolution to the special committee on the Louisiana election.
Mr. WILSON of Iowa. Upon that question I call for the year and

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. As that is only putting off and delaying a decision on the question, I also call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COX. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LYNCH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and it is whether all the members of the Louisiana returning board are not confined in

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GUNTER asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of John S. Ray and others, owners of the steamboats Champion Nos. 3 and 5, filed in 1867 and 1868, there being no adverse report thereon.

LOUISIANA RETURNING BOARD.

Mr. CARR. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The preamble and resolution will be read, after which it will be in order to object to their present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the electoral commission established by an act of Congress and invested with full powers to decide and determine all questions which might or could be raised before them relating to the presidential election held in the several States have declared and decided that no evidence could be used in counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President touching or relating to the manner of conducting such presidential election, and have further decided that it was not competent for Congress to inquire into the conduct of the returning boards of the several States, whereby the evidence sought by the committee of this House, of which William R. Morrison is chairman, to be adduced from the members of the returning board of the State of Louisiana is rendered and declared to be irrelevant, immaterial, and entirely useless for any purpose pertaining to the recent presidential election:

And whereas that question is now settled by competent adjudication for all future time, and Congress will hereafter be debarred the right to inquire into and correct all frauds which may hereafter be perpetrated by like returning boards, whereby the testimony of said witnesses will be of no future utility to this country; And whereas this House does not desire to inflict unnecessary and useless punishment for a refusal to disclose a crime which itself cannot be punished, but is rendered lawful: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That James Madison Wells, Thomas J. Anderson, Louis M. Kenner, and G. Casanave, members of the Louisiana returning board, now held in custody of this House for contempt of its powers and privileges in rendering to said committee such testimony as has thus been declared irrelevant, immaterial, and useless, be, and they are hereby, released from custody.

Mr. HOOKER and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the preamble and resolu-tion are not before the House.

U. S. BOON.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4623) for the relief of the estate of U. S. Boon, late of Hinds County, Mississippi, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4624) to revise and amend an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. BRITTON.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Some time since the petition of William A. Britton, for re-imbursement of moneys expended by him while marshal of the west district of Arkansas in 1872, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. The petition was improperly referred to that committee, and I now ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SETTLEMENT OF INDIAN ACCOUNTS.

Mr. GOODIN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table at this time and referred to the Committee on Indian Speaker's table at this time and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs Senate bill No. 1142, to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Interior to adjust and settle the accounts of the Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask consent to report, from the Committee on the Judiciary, a bill for consideration at this time. It is important that it be passed at once.

Mr. WALDRON. I rise to a privileged motion, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I do not think the gentleman would object to this bill if he will hear it read; it is a very short bill.

Mr. WALDRON. I must insist upon my motion.
The motion of Mr. WALDRON was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Eden in the chair.) and resumed the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the second section of this bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. TERRY. Before the committee proceeds to the consideration of that portion of the bill, I desire to renew the amendment which I introduced yesterday, and which I think was ruled out upon a misapprehension. I move to amend by inserting at the close of section 1, after line 242, the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To make up deficiency in appropriation for Capitol police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; For captain of police $98; three lieutenants, $200 each, $600; thirty privates, $184 each, $5,520; in all, $6,208.

Mr. WALDRON. I raise the point of order upon the proposed amendment, that it is not in pursuance of any existing law; and I raise the further point, that the same amendment was offered on yes-

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. It is due to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Terray,] as I made the point of order upon his amendment yesterday, that I should make a statement. I made the point of order supposing that the time covered by the amendment was the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. I learned afterward that it referred to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. I find in the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, that $2,000 were appropriated for the captain of the police and the same amount for the privates and lieutenants, as is proposed in this amendment. Now I would like to know whether there is any law fixing the salary of these men, or whether it simply depends on the estimates made by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Vir-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from virginia [Mr. TERRY] on the point of order.

Mr. TERRY. This amendment simply conforms to the action of the House on several occasions. I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read a brief exposition of the law which was given in a debate that took place in 1872 upon an amendment precisely similar to this, which was then offered to a deficiency bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Beck. I desire to offer, by way of amendment, an additional paragraph, to come in at this point, as follows:

"To make up deficiency in appropriation for Capitol police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1871, $11.544, as follows: For one captain, $288; two lieutenants, $300 each, $600; twenty-five privates for twelve months, at $384 each per annum, $9,600; and three privates for eleven months, at $384 each per annum, $1,636; making a total of $11.544."

Mr. Speaker, this matter was referred to me by the Committee on Appropriations to examine and report upon it, and after a very full examination I find that we have cut down the number of the Capitol police one-half, or thereabouts, but their pay is not proportionately cut down; it is cut down beyond the amount provided by law.

is not proportionately cut down; it is cut down beyond law.

Mr. Lawrence. There is no law for this apppropriation.

Mr. Beck. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is: By the act of May 2, 1828, the presiding officers of the two Houses were authorized to fix the compensation of the police at the Capitol. (Statutes at Large, volume 4, page 266.) By virtue of that authority the pay of the captain was fixed at $1,740; private, $1,100. By act of April 23, 1854, 20 per cent. upon their present pay was added thereto. (Statutes at Large, volume 10, page 276.) By the act of July 28, 1866, 20 per cent. upon their present pay is allowed. (Statutes at Large, volume 14, page 324.) The effect of the proposed amendment is simply to appropriate a sum sufficient to pay the compensation now due under existing laws, the appropriation at the last session of Congress being that amount less than they are entitled to. This being the law, I was compelled to recommend the amendment which I have offered.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. TERRY. I think that from the statement just read the Chair Mr. TERRY. Ithink that from the statement just read the Chair will be satisfied that there are statutes authorizing the payment to these police of the amounts this amendment proposes. In the deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, an amendment precisely like that now offered was adopted. But in the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1876, only $2,000 was appropriated as the salary of the captain of police, whereas any gentleman who will make the calculation will find that the 20 per cent. addition upon the salary of $1,740 increases it to exactly $2,088; and addition upon the salary of $1,740 increases it to exactly $2,088; and a corresponding addition was made to the pay of the other officers. By this amendment we seek to give to these police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the same amount which Congress gave them for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875—nothing more, nothing less.

The CHAIRMAN. Did not the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1876, provide what pay these officers should receive?

Mr. TERRY. Yes sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And they have received the amount provided for in that act as passed?

Mr. TERRY. I presume they received the amount provided for in the deficiency bill of 1876 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875. But this amendment relates to the next year, which has not been pro-

But this amendment relates to the next year, which has not been provided for by any law.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. With the permission of the Chairman, I will call his attention and that of the House to an amendment which I offered to the deficiency bill in 1875 covering this same point. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells,] says that the amount appropriated was the amount estimated for. I presume that is true; but the estimates had been continuously wrong commencing with 1873, the time when Mr. Beck procured the adoption of his amendment, and running on year by year. In 1875 I made a similar motion to that which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Terray] now makes; and this amendment was then adopted paying the captain of police at the rate of $2,084 and privates at the rate of $1,584. The matter was looked into at that time. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] had charge of the bill, and after his attention and the attention of had charge of the bill, and after his attention and the attention of the House was brought to the law the amendment was adopted without further discussion.

I want to say further that I have looked into this matter fully, and I want to say further that I have looked into this matter fully, and I have no doubt that the law as it applied to the fiscal year ending last June entitled the captain of police to $2,084 a year, and the privates to $1,584; whereas only $2,000 was appropriated for the captain of police and $1,400 for the privates. The addition proposed to be given by this amendment is due under the law. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Wells] desires it, I can send up to be read the amendment which was adopted on my motion in 1875. That amendment involved the same question as the amendment now pending and the amendment referred to in the remarks of Mr. Back for ing and the amendment referred to in the remarks of Mr. Beck, for-amendment involved the same question as the amendment now pending and the amendment referred to in the remarks of Mr. Beck, formerly a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which have been read. I also have before me the sessions laws of 1875 showing what these appropriations are.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the difference? Where does it arise? Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The law allows $2,088.

Mr. BLOUNT. For what?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. For the captain of police the appropriation was $2,000 made by the act of 1875, which I hold here in my hand. The law allows a lieutenant $1,800, while the appropriation was only $1,600. The law allowed privates $1,584, while the appropriation was only $1,400.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois send up the appropriation act to which he is referring?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What volume is it?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Volume 18, page 385; that is the appropriation under which they received their pay.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think there is a later law than that.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, there was no later law. This is to pay them for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1876, passed in 1875. There was an effort made to legislate for them on the legislative, exceutive, and judicial appropriation bill at the last session for the present fiscal year. Whether it succeeded in changing their salaries then it is not now necessary to discuss. We are now only seeking to pay them what was their pay prior to that attempted legislation.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is too important a matter to act on at the present time without fuller information. It is a proposition to go back ten years to pay them balances of salary alleged to be due. In 1860 the captain received $860 and the lieutenant $620 and now we have a claim that the salary of the captain should be $2,088 and that of the lieutenant $1,800. It is important ant $620 and now we have a claim that the salary of the captain should be $2,088 and that of the lieutenant $1,800. It is important for us to know how these salaries have grown up to be more than double what they were formerly. It is certainly necessary we should have that information before acting on any such amendment as that now proposed. For myself I do not believe there is any law to govern the amendment. As I stated before, the Book of Estimates for the year ending June 30, 1876, showed the salary of the captain of police was ending June 30, 1876, showed the salary of the captain of police was $2,000, of the lieutenant $1,600, and of a private $1,400, and the appropriation made was precisely what the estimates called for at that time.

The gentleman from Illinois, as well as the gentleman from Virginia, stated that in 1873 20 per cent. had been added to the salary of these officers. But gentlemen do not know where to refer to the law by which such increase of salary has been provided. They merely refer to appropriations in the appropriation bills by which additions were made to these salaries for a certain period of time. As I have been informed by gentlemen more familiar with this subject than I am, there has been no other law on this subject than that contained in appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to say in reply to that, with the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, there was a resolution fixing these salaries. I will refer the gentleman to a report made by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, on this subject, in which he will find the law quoted in reference to the pay of officers and privates of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. When was that law?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Eighteen hundred and seventy-three.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. It is important that law should be read to the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well, then I will have it read.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. As I understand the law to which the gentleman refers, it is the provision of the appropriation bills increas ing from time to time these salaries, but those provisions of appropriation bills from time to time fixing different sums for these officers are not considered as the law fixing these salaries. They are liable to be repealed or changed in every following appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report made by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, which states the law at different times, and how it was successively amended. I hold that report in the property of the report in the call for the resulting of the report in the call for the report in the report in the call for the report in the

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. That refers to appropriations made from year to year to pay these officers and privates of the police. Those provisions only apply for the time being, and are not such law as is demanded in this case to allow the amendment to come in.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois any law fixing the compensation of these officers different from what is fixed in the appropriation bill of 1875?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. It is not fixed at all in the law of 1875.

The CHAIRMAN. It provides what is compensation for that year, and makes appropriation for it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to call attention to the fact while the Committee on Appropriations appropriated so much money to pay these parties, it does not say that shall be their compensation. The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any law fixing any other or

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any law fixing any other or different compensation?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what is it?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I send it up to the Chair, and ask the parts I have marked in the report made by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations of this House, be read.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the gentleman read the statutes himself.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot; they are scattered through half a dozen volumes of statutes, but I will if it is desired.

Mr. ATKINS. That seems to me to be the important point.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I presume when Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, made his report to the House, from the Committee on Appropriations, made his report to the House, and it was followed for consecutive years, that should be conclusive as to what the law is.

Mr. ATKINS. I think the statute is conclusive if the gentleman

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will send and get the statute if the gentleman desires it. Mr. ATKINS. Certainly; I would rather see the statute than any

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly; I would rather see the statute than any reference to provisions in the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in some doubt about the point of order. He supposes these officers have received the amounts appropriated in the act of 1875; and the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Terry] is to give them additional compensation.

Mr. TERRY. Certainly not. The amendment is to give them for the year ending 30th of June, 1876, precisely what was given for the year ending 190, 1875.

year ending June 30, 1875.

The CHAIRMAN. The appropriation was made in the legislative appropriation bill of 1875 for the year ending June 30, 1876, and the Chair supposes they have received that compensation fixed in the appropriation bill.

Mr. TERRY. Congress, for the year ending 30th of June, 1875, made a certain appropriation falling short of what the police were entitled to under the law. Then the next Congress added to the deficiency appropriation bill an amount to make their compensation up to what the law gave them. And the Court of Claims has decided that if Congress makes an appropriation less than a party is entitled under the law to receive, he has a right to go to the Court of Claims and get a judgment for it, or he can get it in the way proposed here, in a deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the gentlemen from Virginia if these officers did not get the amount that is provided for in

Mr. TERRY. We do not say that they did not get the amount provided in the appropriation bill. But what we say is that the appropriation bill did not give them what they were entitled to under the

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Virginia refer to that Mr. TERRY.

Mr. TERRY. I believe I can.
Mr. BLOUNT. I think the Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman is in error in regard to that. By one of the statutes referred to by Mr. Beck, of Kentucky, Statutes at Large, volume 14, there is an increase of 20 per cent. on what these officers had got before in an appropriation bill. This is a sample of the references that have been made. Therefore, so far as we can gather from this, I think we will be very unsafe in acting upon what has been previously done. An examination of the statute shows that it was done on an appropriation bill, and the practice has been, I think, always for it to be done on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. What is the language of that statute?

Mr. ATKINS. The Chair could hardly rule the amendment in order unless there is a statute to justify it.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is some statute that gives these officers a different compensation from what is given them in the appropriation bill the Chair will rule the amendment out of order.

priation bill the Chair will rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read section 1822 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1822. The Capitol police shall consist of the following members, to be paid at the following rates, respectively, per annum, on the order of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, or of either of them, namely: One captain, at $2, 401.20; three lieutenants, at $2,070 each; twenty-seven privates, at $1,821.60 each; and eight watchmen, at $1,150 each.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. That law was passed when we increased

This increase was made at the time the salaries of members of Congress were increased from $5,000 to $7,500, and the subsequent Congress repealed the law increasing the pay of officers, and it was repealed at that time as regards the increase of pay of these police.

Mr. WALDRON, Lamburit that the Chair head area described.

Mr. WALDRON. I submit that the Chair has already sustained the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to say that one of the acts referred to as authorizing this increase of 20 per cent. is the act of April 22, 1854. By that act the pay of certain employés therein named, among whom were the Capitol police, was increased 20 per cent. upon their then salary, which was $1,740. But by a provise to the fourth section of this act it is expressly provided—

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making an appropriation for any period beyond the 30th day of June, 1854.

Mr. FRANKLIN. State the law of 1866 and acts passed since that date in relation to the salaries to which this amendment applies. The law of 1854 does not apply in this case.

Mr. CLYMER. Now it seems clearly to have been the intention of the Legislature at that time that that should be a temporary increase during that session of Congress of 20 per cent., and not to continue as a permanent salary of the employés of the House.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to ask if the Chair has not decided that the amendment is not in order? If so, there is nothing before the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet decided the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. An inquiry was made for the repealing act alluded to by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Wells.] I send it up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

An act repealing the increase of salaries of members of Congress and other officers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874," as provides for the increase of the compensation of public officers and employés, whether members of Congress, Delegates, or others, except the President of the United States, and the justices of the Supreme Court, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the salaries, compensation, and allowances of all said persons, except as aforesaid, shall be as fixed by the laws in force at the time of the passage of said act: Provided, That mileage shall not be allowed for the first session of the Forty-third Congress; that all moneys appropriated as compensation to the members of the Forty-second Congress in excess of the mileage and allowances fixed by law at the commencement of said Congress, and which shall not have been drawn by the members of said Congress respectively, or which having been drawn, have been returned in any form to the United States, are hereby covered into the Treasury of the United States, and are declared to be the moneys of the United States absolutely, the same as if they had never been appropriated as aforesaid.

Approved January 20, 1874.

Mr. ATKINS. I suppose that embraces the Capitol police?

Mr. ATKINS. I suppose that embraces the Capitol police?
Mr. TERRY. This just remits them back to their salaries as they were prior to this time.
Mr. ATKINS. I simply presented that to show that the law read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] had been repealed.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the amendment is not before the House.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Surveying public lands in California: Amount due John Goldsworthy, deputy surveyor, for surveys executed under contract of October 3, 1873, with the surveyor-general of California, being for the service of the fiscal year 1874, $1,407.15.

Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut. I offer the following to come in at the close of that paragraph:

To pay Henry W. Olcott for services rendered as assistant messenger in the library of the House for ninety days, at $3.60 per day, $324.

Mr. WALDRON. I make the point of order that we have passed the paragraph to which that could refer, and cannot go back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

Surveying public lands in Oregon: Amount due Jeremiah M. Dick, deputy surveyor, for surveys executed under contract of July 2, 1873, with the surveyor general of Oregon, being for the service of the fiscal year 1874, $2,094.69.

Mr. McFARLAND. I offer the following amendment to come in at the close of that paragraph:

For the payment of the amount certified to be due to Elizabeth  $\Lambda$ . Walker, by the accounting officer of the Treasury Department, being the amount due her as the only heir of Samuel J. Tinsley, deceased, a soldier of the Mexican war, the sum of \$34.30.

Mr. WALDRON. The gentleman should add that this a re-appropriation.

Mr. McFARLAND. This claim is supported by the Auditor of the Treasury, who certifies that this amount is due to this lady on account of services rendered by her father in the Mexican war. I understand that the balance of the appropriation made for claims of this description has been covered into the Treasury, and the object of the amendment is merely to authorize the payment of this sum out of the fund heretofore appropriated for the payment of such claims. I have in my hand a certified statement of the Second Auditor of the Treasury that this balance is due.

Mr. WALDRON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut. I now offer my amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The amendment is as follows:

To pay Henry W. Olcott for services rendered as assistant messenger in the library of the House for ninety days, at $3.60 per day, $324.

Mr. WALDRON. We have passed the portion of the bill to which that would apply, and I must object.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LANDERS] will understand that these appropriations are for deficiencies, to be paid out of sums heretofore appropriated but covered into the Treasnry.

Mr. ATKINS. This amendment will be in order on the sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the following paragraph:

Surveying public lands in California: Amount due John Goldsworthy, deputy surveyor, for surveys executed under contract of October 3, 1873, with the surveyor-general of California, being for the service of the fiscal year 1874, $1,407.15.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this provision of the bill ought to have some explanation. This clause provides for payment to a deputy surveyor. We have hundreds of as meritorious claims as this is upon the Private Calendar. I am unable to distinguish this from a great mass of claims against the Government. I have noticed that this bill provides for the payment of a great many claims. Now, if a deputy surveyor from the State of California has a claim, it certainly ought to come in here through the surveyor-general. The surveyor-gento come in here through the surveyor-general. The surveyor-general, it seems, made a survey contract with a deputy of his, and he has failed to pay that deputy. I know that in the case of the collector the Government refused to treat with deputy collectors, and it has nothing to do with the deputy surveyor. The Government does not know him. He is responsible to the surveyor-general. I would like some explanation of this class of deficiencies, and I cannot see why this deficiency should arise, or why it should be provided for in this bill.

Mr. WALDRON. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Minne-Mr. WALDRON. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from minne-sota [Mr. Dunnell] that this appropriation is made under the act of March 3, 1873, for surveys of public lands in the State of California, amounting to $90,000. Under the operation of the law of June 20, 1874, $4,700 of that money was covered into the Treasury. After that amount was covered into the Treasury this claim was audited and allowed for $1,407 to a deputy surveyor, but, as the money which had been appropriated to pay it when audited had been covered into the Treasury it became necessary that it should be paid by a re-apthe Treasury, it became necessary that it should be paid by a re-ap-

Mr. DUNNELL. I would ask the gentleman whether I am to un-derstand that this claim of the deputy surveyor has been audited and allowed?

Mr. WALDRON. That is stated in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I hold in my hand.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I offer the following amendment:

Arizona Territory:

This is an appropriation to provide for contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Interior with the surveyors-general of the sev-eral Territories for the survey of public lands. The contracts have eral Territories for the survey of public lands. The contracts have been approved and the surveys have been done and the accounts audited, and you will find in the Report of the Commissioner of the Land Office for the year 1876, on page 1845, that this amount is recommended by him to be paid. Now here is a contract made with gentlemen in good faith. They have performed the labor of the surveys named in their contracts, and their accounts have been properly audited at the right Department. I can see no objection to the payment of these claims. This is similar to an amendment which was offered any resterday by my friend from Tayas. [Mr. HANGOCK I and which of these claims. This is similar to an amendment which was offered on yesterday by my friend from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK,] and which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication sent by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Williamson, to the Secretary of the Treasury, in connection with the items included in my amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The foregoing estimates for surveying public lands are submitted in order to liquidate balances due to the deputy surveyors for surveys executed under their respective contracts entered into with the respective surveyors-general of the States and Territories. The deficiencies were caused by said surveyors-general underestimating the cost of the work embraced in the contracts; but, as the surveys have been approved and are available to the Government, the respective sums are submitted for appropriation by Congress.

The deficiency of $344.42 was incurred by the surveyor-general of New Mexico Territory in continuing Messrs. Huggins and Irwin in the needful employment in subserving public interest.

The sum of $299.94 is submitted to refund the expenses incurred by Mr. Cartee, surveyor-general of Idaho Territory, in investigating and examining certain surveys in the field, pursuant to instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated November 19, 1868, the contingent fund of the surveyor-general's office not admitting at the time of liquidating the amount due him. This estimate was formerly submitted for appropriation, but not eventuating in any provision for the purpose, and the claim being a just one, is herewith submitted again, with recommendation that it receive favorable action.

The six following estimates of deficiencies have been caused partly by diversions of certain sums assigned by the late Secretary of the Interior to the respective surveyors for the purpose of liquidating surveying liabilities of a different surveyor, after the several contracts had been entered into and the parties had gone into the fields of their respective operations, and partly by executing work in excess of the terms of their contracts. The surveys, however, as well as the triplicate plats and field-notes of the Indian reservations, having been returned to this office and found correctly executed and available for Indian purposes, the several deficiencies are submitted for congress

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, September 30, 1876.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The Government has received the benefit of the labor performed by these surveyors, and I cannot see why any member should raise an objection to the payment of these honest claims, as recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in

Mr. HANCOCK. I would like to ask for information a question in regard to these amendments. I understand that these different items are made up of balances due on contracts entered into with the items are made up of balances due on contracts entered into with the Government for surveying lands, which contracts amounted to more than the money appropriated for the purpose.

Mr. WALDRON. The items contained in the amendment moved by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] are items embraced in Executive Document No. 19, being the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, containing an estimate of balances of deficiencies and dated the 6th of January last. Last week by an order of this House the items contained in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] were taken from the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee of Claims, and they are now in the possession of that committee.

are now in the possession of that committee.

I desire to say further, without raising any question as to the propriety of paying these claims, that this is not the proper time to introduce such an amendment. We are now considering that portion of this which relates to the re-appropriation of money from the Treas ury. This amendment contains items for appropriation or for defi-ciency; and in either case the amendment should have been offered when the first section of this bill was under consideration. I raise the point of order that it is now too late to move this amendment to this bill.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the wording of the amendment which has just been read at the Clerk's desk. It is not similar to the amendment adopted yesterday by the Committee of the Whole on motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Reagan.] This amendment embraces items due upon contracts. By reference to the bill making appropriations for the year to which these items relate, it will be found that a limited sum of money was appropriated for the surveys in these Territories and placed under the control of the Surveyor-General. That officer had no authority to make a contract that would involve more money than was contained in the appropriation. Consequently these claimants, if they made a contract with him, made it with him in his character of private citizen, as he was not authorized to make a contract that would bind the Government beyond the amount appropriated for the purpose. Consequently I hold that this class of claims should be referred to the Committee of Claims and investigated by that committee, and not come before the House at this time. tee, and not come before the House at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

Indian affairs:
Pay of superintendents and agents: For payment of amount certified to be due
W. P. Callon, late Indian agent, by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1873 and prior years, $178.86.

Mr. WALDRON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move an amendment to come in after the paragraph just

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

For payment of amount certified to be due T. J. Galbraith, late Indian agent, by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1873 and prior years, $2,391. 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to an after the amendment just adopted the following: I move to amend by inserting

For this amount, to pay James M. Roane balance due for supplies furnished the Indian agent in California in 1858-'59, $39.34.

I believe there will be no objection to this amendment. here a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but I do not here a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but I do not think any one will object to the amendment. It is of the same nature as the amendment just adopted. This account has been audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department and certified by them to be due, and all that is needed is an appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I would like to be heard on the point of order. What is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order to be that this is a private claim and under the rule is not in order on an appropriation bill.

an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not object to this in any captious spirit. am informed that of the large number of claims that were attached to this bill on yesterday quite a number are merely estimates of a class of claims that have heretofore been referred to the Committee on War Claims that have heretofore been referred to the Committee on War Claims. It is found that that amendment embraced not only claims audited, but claims to be audited. I therefore must object to this class of claims.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I would ask for the reading of the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and then I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, the Chair has no discretion in the matter.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I would like to address myself to the Chair upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already made his decision; but, if the gentleman from North Carolina wishes to be heard very briefly, the Chair will hear him.

the Chair will hear him.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I will be very brief. I think that this is not a private claim. As will be shown by the letter which has been sent to the desk, it is embraced in the accounts of N. B. Lewis, Indian agent in California. It stands exactly on the same ground as these appropriations in the bill "for payment of amounts certified to be due W. P. Callon, late Indian agent." The item embraced in my amendment was included in the accounts of Mr. Lewis, and the accounting officer of the Treasury certified that the amount was due to Mr. Roane. This is not a private claim. There is no bill pending for its payment. The matter was once presented to the Committee on Appropriations; but for some reason the appropriation was not on Appropriations; but for some reason the appropriation was not made. I see that this bill is intended by its title to provide for deficiencies "for prior years, and other purposes." I think, therefore, the ciencies "for prior years, and other purposes." I think, therefore, the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The deficiencies for prior years relate only to the payment for service authorized by law, and which was not paid for because the appropriation was exhausted. Unless there is some law of the same sort covering this claim, the Chair must rule it out.

Mr. ATKINS. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina to reserve this amendment and offer it to the sundry civil appropriation bill. That will be the proper place for it, and no doubt it will then be accented.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the follow-

Buildings at agencies and repairs: For payment of amounts certified to be due W. P. Callon, late Indian agent, by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1873 and prior years, $9.61.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to reserve all points of order on the amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

To make up deficiency for Capitol police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as follows: For one captain, $57; for three lieutenants, at $200 each, $600; for twenty-seven privates at $184 each, $4,968; and three privates in charge of Botanic Garden, at $184 each, $552; making, in all, $6,208.

Mr. WALDRON. I raise a point of order on that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained a point of order on this amendment

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to be heard on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained a point of order on the amendment

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This amendment has not been offered before.

Mr. WALDRON. But my objection is that we have passed the only portion of the bill to which it would be appropriate.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This is a new amendment; and I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will ask the Chair not to do that. This being a new amendment, the amount being changed, so that it is not the same that was named in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TERRY I] ask the Chair not to rule moon the point of Virginia, [Mr. Terry,] I ask the Chair not to rule upon the point of order till I have been heard, for the reason that I have here the law, section by section and year by year, showing that this amount of money is due to these men. Therefore, I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I hope the gentleman will be confined to the point of order, and not allowed to discuss the merits of a proposition which has been twice ruled out.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This is another and a different amend-

Mr. CLYMER. I trust the gentleman will confine his discussion to

Mr. CAINMER. I trust the gentleman will comme in a discussion to the point of order, and not go into the merits of the proposition.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I propose to do that.

Mr. WALDRON. I rise to a point of order that this is not the proper time to offer the amendment; that we have passed the portion of the bill to which it relates, and can only go back by unanimous

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order is evidently well taken.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I submit that I have a right to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order now made is that the amendment is not appropriate to this portion of the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I submit that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] reserved all points of order before the amendment was read.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Well, if I cannot be heard, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. That question I desire to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that there can be no debate in Committee of the Whole on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Very well; then I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last line in the bill; and I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting a statement made do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting a statement made by the Speaker of the House the other day when upon the floor, in relation to the receipts and expenses of the Government for the present fiscal year.

I notice his statement has been commented upon by some of the papers of the country, and I think now he himself would be willing to modify it.

First, I call attention to the statement he makes that "We," speak-First, I call attention to the statement he makes that "we," speaking of the democratic House at the last session, "reduced the expenditures of this Government about $30,000,000." This statement, no doubt, he made believing it to be true, but the fact is, as officially ascertained by the Treasury Department, that the reductions made in appropriation bills last year and in other appropriations, compared with the year previous, is about twenty-three million dollars and a half. From this must be deducted the appropriations made at this session of Congress for deficiency and other appropriations to be paid during the present fiscal year, estimated at six and one-half million dollars. So, in fact, the real reduction made at the last session of Congress will be about $17,000,000.

Ie next makes the statement that "we have".

He next makes the statement that "we have"—
Mr. FORT. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will state how much was the reduction made the year before.
Mr. FOSTER. About the same as during the present fiscal year; that is to say, the reduction, when the year is ended and the books are closed and officially ascertained, will from present indications, in my judgment, be about the same as the reduction made by the preceding republican Congress for the preceding fiscal year.

He makes the further statement that the decrease in the public debt up to the present time is $5,000,000. That, I have no doubt, is an oversight on his part.

Mr. RANDALL. Not in the public debt, but a decrease in the revenues below what was estimated.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the Clerk to read just what the gentleman did say. No; perhaps I had better read it myself, and I will do so. This is his language:

Nay more, where would your Treasury have been to-day but for these reductions? Where would your deficiencies have been? Instead of the expenditures being five millions behind the receipts at this time, they would have been twenty millions behind; and at the rate you are going now, if the receipts are not increased you would have had at the end of this fiscal year forty millions of deficiency with but one resort to meet it, and that resort, additional taxation. That we have at least protected the people from.

I presume this is an oversight on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He intended to say, and I so understand him now, but for these reductions there would have been a deficiency to-day of but for these reductions there would have been a deficiency to-day of $20,000,000. Seven months of the year have expired and we are eight million dollars and a half ahead; that is to say, the receipts of the Government are eight million and a half more than the expenditures. About four months and a half belong to the appropriations made at the last session of Congress. Under any conceivable circumstances if the appropriations had remained at what they were last session, we would probably have been about even at this time instead of twenty millions behind, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have the fact but for democratic economy.

The gentleman further says, but for the action of his committee

The gentleman further says, but for the action of his committee and the House at the last session at the end of the fiscal year, we and the House at the last session at the end of the fiscal year, we would have been forty millions behind; in other words there would have been a deficiency of $40,000,000. I find from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the estimates of receipts for the present fiscal year are $264,000,000, while the estimates of expenditures are $237,000,000, and on those estimates there would be a surplus of twenty-six million six hundred and odd thousand dollars, not counting the sinking fund. I find the appropriations made at the last session were $147,700,000 or thereabouts. (I speak in round numbers.) From these we must deduct $30,000,000 receipts of the Post-Office Department, because we simply appropriated the deficiency. The full sum appears in the tables which have been made up. Deducting these $30,000,000 it leaves $117,000,000 as appropriations made by the last session. I estimate the interest on the public debt, including interest I estimate the interest on the public debt, including interest payable on the Pacific Railroad bonds, &c., at $100,000,000. I estimate the permanent appropriations at $20,000,000; and this makes a total of $237,000,000 for our expenses this year. The receipts are estimated by the Treasury Department at $264,000,000. I called this morning at the Treasury Department and found the receipts have been fully up to the estimates—that is, up to this date—and that we may confidently expect $264,000,000, the full amount estimated, and perhaps more. This leaves a surplus of $27,000,000 at the close of the year ending June 30, 1877.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I yield my time to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. The actual reductions made by our democratic friends at the last session when the year closes, probably being about $17,000,000, show conclusively that instead of having a deficiency of $40,000,000 at the close of the year, if the appropriations had gone upon the scale of expenditure of the previous year, there would have been a surplus of $10,000,000.

been a surplus of $10,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee, and the present Speaker of the House may possibly insist that he includes the sinking fund in his statement. Of course the sinking fund of 1 per cent. of the debt is a liability to be met by the Government annually. Nevertheless everything we pay into the sinking fund is so much of a decrease of the public debt. His statement has gone to the country as if but for the action of his democratic friends there would be a deficiency of $40,000,000, without any explanation whatever in relation to the sinking fund.

would be a deficiency of $40,000,000, without any explanation whatever in relation to the sinking fund.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew the pro forma amendment.

The gentleman from Ohio may endeavor by the use of a great number of figures to confuse this question; but the substance of what he complains of is this: that I declared that but for the action of last session we should have been behind this year about $40,000,000, taking into consideration the fact that we reduced the appropriations of last year thirty millions and that the deficiency upon the estimates of the receipts is ten millions, as compared with the previous year.

The appropriations for the year 1876, as I showed clearly at the end of the last session and as the gentleman states them to be to-day, were $177,303,000. And as I have recently, since I made the statement, found out, the receipts for this year will fall behind the estimates somewhere from twelve to fifteen millions of dollars—quite mates somewhere from twelve to fifteen millions of dollars-quite twelve millions-and it may run to fifteen millions under the previous

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken on that point.
Mr. RANDALL. The receipts will fall behind, in my judgment, quite twelve millions.

Mr. FOSTER. Behind last year. You said behind the estimates. Mr. RANDALL. Behind the expectation of what the receipts ould be.
Mr. FOSTER. They are fully up to the estimates to the present day.

Mr. RANDALL. So that the reduction of the appropriations by $30,000,000 and the probable falling off of the revenues of this year below what they were last year show more than forty millions that we should have had to provide for by increased taxation if we had not reduced the appropriations as we did to the extent of thirty millions.

Now, as the gentleman has brought this question up again, I want to go a step further in my statement, and show in connection what has been done by the action of the last session and what is likely to be done by the Committee on Appropriations and the House at this session, put them together and compare them with the appropriations session, put them together and compare them with the appropriations of the last Congress during its two sessions. The appropriations of the Forty-third Congress during its first session were $187,763,388.03. The appropriations during its second session were $177,303,280.71. So that the appropriations of the last Congress amounted in the aggregate to $359,066,668.74. On the other hand, the appropriations of the Forty-fourth Congress, according to your own books, made up by the Departments, were during the first session $148,451,573.78, and the probability is that if the Senate does not resist the appropriations recummended by the Committee on Appropriations as far as I am abla ommended by the Committee on Appropriations, as far as I am able to gather what they will be this session, they will be $142,286,597.50; making the appropriation bills of the present Congress during its two sessions for the two years aggregate $290,738,171.28. And the net result of the presence here of a democratic House is thus shown to be a saving to the people of $68,328,497.46. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLYMER obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. RAN-

Mr. RANDALL. Nay, more; if the policy of this House at its last session had not been resisted to the utmost by the Senate of the United States, the fact is that this Congress would have saved during its sessions more than $30,000,000 to the people of the United States. And that is a page in history to which every one of those who have been members of this Congress and have been instrumental in any degree in bringing about such a result as this can in all time point with great pride. And the people, too, can look back to this Congress and say to them with truth that they have come up in this respect to the full measure of the hopes they had when they sent them here.

Mr. WALDRON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say just a word.
Mr. WALDRON. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.
Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states one thing as his opinion and I state another. We will both be here six months hence.

Mr. RANDALL. If we live.

Mr. FOSTER. If we live. He states this democratic House at the last session reduced the expenses $30,000,000; I say $17,000,000. When the year closes the books will determine who is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I take the aggregate which, according to law, has to be put at the bottom of every bill, and I take your own books to show it.

Mr. FOSTER. I say that when the books are closed on the 30th day of next June they will tell which is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not keep the books, but I am book-keeper enough to detect the wrong, if wrong there be.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, we expect to keep the books.

Mr. RANDALL. If you do, it will be to the great injury of the people.

people.

Mr. WALDRON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer an amendment.
Mr. WALDRON. I yield to the gentleman to offer an amendment.
Mr. LANE. I offer the following amendment:

Amend by inserting the following for payment:

Survey of Indian reservations.

Arizona Territory:

For the survey and subdivision of the Colorado River Indian reservation, by Chandler Robbins, designated by the late Secretary of the Interior; assignment of $6,000 for the work; appropriation per act March 3,1875, (18 Statutes, 384).

Dakota Territory:

For the survey of that part of the Sioux Indian reservation in the Peoria Bottom lying east of the Missouri River, by T. B. Medary, designated by the late Secretary of the Interior; assignment of $5,000 for the work; appropriation per act March 3, 1875, (18 Statutes, 384).

For the survey of the Devil's Lake Indian reservation, in Dakota Territory, by Charles H. Bates, designated by the late Secretary of the Interior; assignment of $6,500 for the work; appropriation per act March 3, 1875, (18 Statutes, 384).

For the survey of a part of the Sioux Indian reservation located on the White River, west of the Missouri River, in Dakota Territory, by James W. Miller, designated by the late Secretary of the Interior, and under his contract, dated October 2, 1874; appropriation per act June 23, 1874, (18 Statutes, 213).

Idaho Territory:

For the survey of the Fort Hall Indian reservation, in Idaho, (treaty July 3, 1868,) by D. P. Thompson, designated by the late Secretary of the Interior; assignment of $10,000 for the work, out of appropriation of $292,680, per act approved June 23, 1874, (18 Statutes, 213).

Oregon:

For survey of the Malheur Indian reservation for the Snake and Pi-Ute Indians, in Oregon, by Thompson and Meldrum, under their contract, dated October 24, 1874, payable out of the $10,000, the amount assigned to them by the late Secretary of the Interior, and chargeable against the appropriation, per act June 23, 1874, (18 Statutes, 213).

Mr. WALDRON. I raise the point of order that this is the same amendment which was offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] and was ruled out of order.

Mr. LANE. I think this amendment is offered in the proper place at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that the amendment comes in not at the proper time.

Mr. LANE. I make the point that it comes in precisely where it should come in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I offer the following amendment:

To make up deficiency for Capitol police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as follows: For one captain, $87; for three lieutenants, at $200 each, $600; for twenty-seven privates, at $183 each, $4,968; and three privates in charge of Botanic Gardens, at $184 each, $552; making, in all, $6,208.

Mr. WALDRON. I raise the point of order that that amendment changes existing law, and that we have passed that portion of the bill to which it could apply.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Upon that point I desire to be heard a

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a right to pass upon the question

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has a right to pass upon the question of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I suppose I have a right to offer an amendment. This is a separate and independent amendment that I have offered, an amendment that has not been offered before, and in different phraseology, appropriating a different amount for this deficiency. Now, then, I suppose that upon the point of order I ought at least to be entitled to make a statement to show what the law is, because I have the law here in black and white.

white.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order; he is not making a parliamentary inquiry at all.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise, then, to ask whether or not it is not my right to exhibit the law when the point of order is made.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the gentleman from Illinois is not in order and will take his seat.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will take his seat.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have taken my seat and I now vice to

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will take his seat.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have taken my seat and I now rise to a parliamentary inquiry. In the first place I appeal from the decision of the Chair unless I can be permitted to state what the point of order is and cite the law in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a point of order. I believe that the rule requires that a gentleman in discussing a point of order shall merely state it and give the reason for his appeal.

requires that a gentleman in discussing a point of order shall merely state it and give the reason for his appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been ruled upon and sustained by the Chair.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. And an appeal is taken from that decision by manufactures.

ion by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 83, noes 13.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No quorum voted, and I call for tellers.

The Chairman ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, and Mr. CLYMER.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to ask the Chair if there is any such thing as an appeal from a decision of the Chair in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands; that has been the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands; that has been the practice of the House certainly.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is it in order to offer a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not while the House is dividing and the tellers are taking the count.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am inclined to think that there is no quorum in the House.

Mr. ATKINS. Then let us have a call of the House.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 115, noes 32.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WALDRON. I now move that the committee rise and report

Mr. WALDRON. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan who has charge of this bill that he allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. has charge of this bill that he allow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] five minutes to refer to the law upon which he bases his amendment. I think that far more time has been consumed already than would have been consumed if he had allowed the gentleman to state the law. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be allowed to state the law.

Mr. SAVAGE and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the objection be withdrawn and that the gentleman from Illinois be heard.

Mr. SAVAGE. I insist on the objection.

Mr. WALDRON. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

Mr. WALDRON. I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered upon the deficiency appropriation bill, and the amendments thereto reported from the Committee of the Whole.

mr. WALDRON. I will ask a separate vote on the amendment to the first section, which was adopted in Committee of the Whole on motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK.]

Mr. HANCOCK. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WALDRON] is in charge of this bill, and under the rule is entitled to the floor for one hour if he desires.

Mr. HANCOCK. I think that is very unusual on an appropriation

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. WALDRON. I will, after a time. The items involved in the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] amount in the aggregate to nearly half a million of dollars. The amendment never was read in full in Committee of the Whole. In order that the House may understand the character of some of the items embraced in the amendment, I will ask the Clerk to read such of the items as I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amount due to various parties for transportation furnished in the removal of the Indians of Whetstome agency, from White River, Dakota, to their new reservation in Dakota, in 1872 and 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.

Cole, late Indian agent, in conducting the affairs of the Tulalip Indian agency, in Washington Territory, as per statement of Samuel K. Ross, brevet colonel United States Army, and late superintendent of Indian affairs, on file in the Indian Office, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1873 and prior years.

Mr. WALDRON. I will ask permission to have printed in the RECORD the balance of the items I have marked, and not have the time of the House taken up by the reading of them at this time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. WALDRON. Then I will withdraw the request. A sufficient number of these items have been read to show the character of the evidence on which they are based. It is possible that these claims

The SPEAKER. Upon what ground?
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask that all the amendments may be

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask that all the amendments may be reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendment was not being read. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WALDRON] referred in his remarks to certain portions of an amendment that had been offered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I was under the impression that the amendment was being read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was mistaken.

Mr. WALDRON. As I was remarking, it may be possible that all of these claims are just and valid and should be paid. But it is not the business of the Committee on Appropriations to examine these claims, and consequently they could not insert them in a deficiency appropriation bill. On the contrary, these claims have been submit-claims, and consequently they could not insert them in a deficiency appropriation bill. On the contrary, these claims have been submitted to other committees of this House for investigation.

By reference to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, presenting these claims to the attention of Congress, gentlemen will find the character of the evidence upon which these claims are based. Some of them are based on vouchers on file in the Department; others are based upon mere statements of Indian agents or Army officers, and some of them are based upon the mere estimates of Indian agents.

It is on such evidence as that that this House is called to insert in a deficiency bill items of claims aggregating a half a million of dol-

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Eden.] Mr. ATKINS. Are any of these claims in favor of the Union Pacific Railroad; and, if so, to what amount?

Mr. WALDRON. I cannot state the amount. There are a large

Mr. WALDRON. I cannot state the amount. There are a large number of items embraced in this amendment for the benefit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, amounting to several thousand dol-

Mr. CLYMER. They amount to seven or eight thousand dollars. Mr. EDEN. I wish to submit a few remarks in regard to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Hancock,] for the reason that I happen to have some information concerning the particular document which contained the items embraced in his amendment. At the last session of Congress a portion of the items embraced in this same executive document was referred to the Committee on War Claims and a portion was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Were they in like form as those now submitted ? Mr. EDEN. They were in the same form as those here presented. The Committee on War Claims investigated very carefully the items referred to that committee. They were items in reference to the hire of quarters for officers on military duty, to barracks for horses in the cavalry and artillery service. In our investigation we found, in regard to about one-half of these items, that there was no proof in the Department to sustain these claims.

The document is simply an estimate of the Department as to what may be required to pay for the service that is embraced in the items referred to. It does not purport to be a document stating a list of claims found due by the Government, but as simply an estimate of what probably will be found due.

Of the items referred to the Committee on War Claims, amounting to about $130,000, we found that less than one-half the amount had been settled and adjusted in the Department. We reported to the House what we found had been adjusted and settled, and had the amendment covering them put upon an appropriation bill, which became a law. The balance of these claims I have not heard from since. I apprehend that many of these claims have never been passed upon by the Department at all. These are simply estimates of what may be necessary as the claims are proved up in the Department. Some of them filed a number of years ago are awaiting proof. The appropriation for this particular service having been covered into the Treasury under existing law, it becomes necessary whenever the accounting officers may decide that a claim should be paid, to come before Congress and ask a deficiency appropriation. But the fact that these estimates are sent in is no evidence that the accounting officers of the Treasury or anybody else has ever passed upon and allowed these claims. Of the items referred to the Committee on War Claims, amounting allowed these claims.

allowed these claims.

Mr. ELKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. I am informed that the claims of which he is speaking are not embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EDEN. The claims to which I refer are not in the amendment. Mr. ELKINS. Then they are not before the House.

Mr. EDEN. The claims of which I am speaking were disposed of at the last session of Congress. I only refer to them for the reason that on investigating those claims we found that more than half of them had notyet been allowed by the Department, but were only claims which had been filed and were awaiting further proof: the estimate which had been filed and were awaiting further proof; the estimate was sent in in order that payment might be made when the proof had been furnished.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand that the objection is made that these are mere estimates. Now let me call the gentleman's attention to an extract from the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as published on page 20 of to-day's Congressional Record. This officer states that

The vouchers covering the amounts estimated for have been examined and approved and are on file in this office, suspended, awaiting appropriations to meet the

That relates to the claims from New Mexico.

Mr. EDEN. I am not aware that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs audits these claims; I think they have to go through the Treasury Department. But I am not familiar with that subject.

Mr. BUCKNER. I simply wanted some explanation of that letter of the Commissioner.

of the Commissioner.

Mr. EDEN. I understand that the amounts of the claims as reported are simply estimates of what may be wanted to meet the claims when they are proved up; and it will be entirely safe to refer this document to some committee of the House that can make a thorough examination and ascertain which claims have been proved up and which have not. We ought to ascertain which of the claims are just and right, and which are not properly sustained. I think it is not safe to make an appropriation in the shape proposed in this amendment, without further investigation upon the part of some committee of this House.

Mr. WALDRON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mis-

Mr. WALDRON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STONE.]
Mr. STONE. I desire to call the attention of members to some facts in connection with this amendment. On the 30th of April, 1874, Mr.

Averill, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, presented in this House the following resolution, which was adopted

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the House a list of all the claims for losses through depredations committed by Indians, presented to the Department of the Interior for ten years past, giving in each case the date when and the place where the depredations were committed, the date of the presentation of the claim, the name of the claimant or claimants, and the full amount of the claim; also, the name of the tribe or band of Indians charged with the depredations, and the action of the Department upon each claim, and also the damage done by whites to Indians.

On the 5th of January, 1875, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reported to the Secretary of the Interior that he had performed the duty imposed upon him under that resolution; and on the 9th of January of the same year the then Secretary of the Interior transmitted to the Speaker of this House a communication giving a list of claims which will be found in Executive Document No. 65, Forty-third Congress, second session. It thus appears that the clerical force of that Department required about eight months in order to prepare this list of claims and to examine the evidence in the Department to establish

Now, I undertake to say without fear of successful contradiction that no committee created by this House can ever take up these claims and examine them. We have already made an appropriation for the investigation of these claims; and why should we ask any committee of the House to further investigate them? I know that a number of them were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who merely took up the evidence which they found in the Interior Department and reported the cases to the House

Now, Executive Document No. 151, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, is merely a repetition of Executive Document No. 65, Forty-third Congress, second session, wherein the then Secretary of the Interior asks for an appropriation to pay these claims.

Mr. EDEN. Is not the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] aware

Mr. EDEN. Is not the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] aware that before these claims can be paid they must undergo examination by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; that the action of the Indian Commissioner upon them is not final at all?

Mr. STONE. But the investigation already made establishes the claims as fully as the investigation of any committee of this House could do.

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman also remarked that no committee of the House would investigate these claims. I will state to the gentle-man that the Committee on War Claims did investigate all the claims of this class that were referred to them.

Mr. STONE. There is no question about that, because they were so very few that the Committee on War Claims could very readily investigate them.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter of March 24, 1876, transmits a list of these claims to Congress and asks for an appropriation to pay them. They have been so well established that if they were judgments hanging over the heads of members of this House I underjudgments hanging over the heads of members of this House I undertake to say that the sheriffs of the several counties would enforce their payment. But these claims against the Government cannot be paid in any other way than through an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. WALDRON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL.]

Mr. LUTTRELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of giving my support to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Han-

COCK.]
In the first place, in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WALDRON,] who reported this bill, when he says these are mere estimates made by Indian agents, I beg to differ from him. I have had occasion to examine several of these vouchers and they are made in due form of law, submitted to the several Departments, passed upon by the proper accounting officers, and in many instances where the appropriation was not exhausted payments have been made upon them; so the appropriation now asked for is merely to pay the balance which remains due.

which remains due.

Gentlemen upon this floor have complained of Indian "rings," of frauds perpetrated under Indian contracts, but they should also remember that just so long as we continue this system of legislation, refusing to pay honest claims when presented, just so long there will be robbery of the Government. When the Government defrauds its creditors of what is justly due them for goods furnished the Government, the contractors will rob the Government and attempt to justify themselves for so doing by alleging they have been refused the payment of their just claims.

Gentlemen ask me, how are they going to rob it \(^1\) I will tell you. Take the accounts made by some of these contractors and you will find they charge for beef-steers weighing from one thousand to twelve hundred pounds when in reality they only weighed six hundred.

Why do they put in such accounts? It is because Congress refuses to pay their just claims, and they charge double in order to secure full payment.

Mr. SAVAGE. How many of these are of that class?

Mr. LUTTRELL. If you will examine the reports they will answer each for itself.

Appropriation Committee, to which they were referred, refused to examine them.
Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. They were referred to the Committee on Appropriations in the first instance, and by that committee reported back and under an order of the House sent to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Yes; they were referred to the Committee of Claims.
Mr. BLOUNT. The House ordered them there.
Mr. BLOUNT. The House ordered them there.
Mr. LUTTRELL. Yes, sir. But let me call the attention of the House for a few moments to some of these claims in reference to which I know something, as they are made by parties living in my own district. I find here an amount due Mission and Pacific Woolen Mills, for clothing furnished under contract for the Tule agency in October, 1873, being a deficiency for fiscal year 1874, $499.25. That claim is for blankets furnished the Government and used upon this Indian reservation.

Amount due Hooker & Co. for hardware furnished under contract Amount due Hooker & Co. for hardware furnished under contract for the same agency in October, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $413.93. This amount is due for plows, and hoes, and harrows, required by the Indians on this reservation, and which have been used for several years although no payment has yet been made to the parties who furnished them.

parties who furnished them.

Amount due Murphy, Grant, & Co. for goods, &c., furnished under contract for the same agency, October, 1873, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $345.37. These goods I know were furnished, and that the Government still neglects to pay for them. Yes, I know it; because they were furnished to an Indian reservation in my own district with which I am well acquainted. Therefore, while these just claims, made under proper vouchers, audited, and certified to by the Government officers, remain unpaid I cannot refuse to give my support to this amendment, which merely proposes to do them justice. I know these men have furnished these articles, and they should be paid for every dollar's worth.

Throw these men have furnished these articles, and they should be paid for every dollar's worth.

There are a large number of claims for supplies furnished for the Hoopa Valley reservation in the county adjoining the one where I live. Amount due A. Brizzard for supplies furnished the Hoopa Valley reservation, California, in March, April, May, and June, 1874, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1874, $1,999.71. He furnished those supplies and his accounts have been audited. This balance remains unpaid although due and audited upon the vouchers already presented to the Department.

Gentlemen simply object that this amendment should not go into this bill. If this amount were due to gentlemen who smile, and the attempt were made to rule it out of this appropriation bill, I think

We have here, amount due Marcus C. Hawley & Co. for hardware furnished the Hoopa Valley agency, California, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, being a deficiency for the year 1874, $121.72. That is a claim for plows and other hardware furnished to an Indian That is a claim for plows and other hardware furnished to an Indian reservation at the lowest market price, at the same price they were sold to farmers generally, yet the Government refuses to pay for those goods, and refuses payment year after year when the bill is presented, although the necessary vouchers have been sworn to and the account has been properly audited by the officers of the Government. I need only call attention to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, as well as the letter of Commissioner Smith, in favor of the payment of these claims.

A MEMBER. Read them.
Mr. LUTTRELL. I will send them to the Clerk's desk and ask they be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLYMER. Before the gentleman from California takes his seat I should like to ask him whether there are not items amounting to $9,683.18 for the Union Pacific Railroad embraced in this amendment, and whether it is not also proposed to pay that amount to that railroad corporation ?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I am only speaking of those claims I have knowledge of. Mr. CLYMER. Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman propose to pay the Union Pacific Railroad Company—for pay them he will if he votes for this amendment—when it is well known that corporation is indebted to this Government to the extent of millions of dollars?

Mr. HANCOCK. They will be held back if any money is due to that railroad.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The law directs that amount shall be withheld if anything be due the Government.

Mr. WALDRON. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have a few remarks to make on the amendment now under consideration. The fact just alluded to, that there are some items here found due the Union Pacific Railroad Company, does not occur to me to be a reason why an appropriation should be made to pay those items, nor any just reason why the other items going to make the aggregate of this amendment should be withheld from the parties entitled to the amounts due them. If that corporation is indebted to the Government of the United States, the money Mr. SAVAGE. That is what we say, that such is the character of these claims, and therefore they ought to be referred to the Committee of Claims for careful examination.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Your committees refused to examine them. The adjust matters of account with that corporation any more than with These various items are yet due as shown by Executive Document No. 151, sent to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury, purport-ing to be an estimate of deficiencies in the various Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and embracing deficiencies for all of the Departments, but in the Interior Department the amount, or nearly the amount, embraced in this amendment. They are not of the character of claims alluded to by the gentleman from Illinois, recently the presiding officer of the Committee of the Whole. The view that he expressed with reference to those claims was of course the proper one. They do not purport to be any other than the estimated amount necessary to pay a supposed indebtedness; and I believe it is usually the case that where amounts are estimated for, they are estimated for probably more than is supposed to be necessary. But these items are not of that character, and the gentleman's argument is totally inapplicable to them; for these amounts are found to be due by the accountcable to them; for these amounts are found to be due by the accounting officers, and the vouchers for them, they state, are on file. They have gone through the regular process. The claims have been found to be correct for the amount stated. They have been allowed, they have been audited, estimated for, and a requisition made upon this House to make appropriations to pay them. It is true, sir, that some of them are pretty old. They run back as far as 1861, a few of

Mr. STEELE. I will say to the gentleman that none of them are older than 1872 or 1873.

Mr. HANCOCK. The great body of them belong to the years 1872 and 1873, and some of them to 1874. The larger proportion of them had not been brought to the attention of Congress before this executive document was sent in, but some of them had been brought to the attention of Congress previously.

Now I submit that there is no committee of this House in existence, and I doubt very much whether one can be raised, as competent to make these investigations as the accounting officers in the different Departments where we have to look for information. If the Commit-Departments where we have to look for information. If the Committee on War Claims got any information, no doubt the data on which they formed their opinions were received from the very places that the accounting officers would go to for information if they were required to make up the accounts. It is as I understand a very peculiar thing indeed for the Secretary of the Treasury to present an estimate for an amount stated to have been found due to an individual for which he helds accounts. vidual for which he holds a voucher, as was the case in many of these items. But, when presented, the funds appropriated have either been exhausted, or because of the delay in some instances, as I before stated, the amounts had been covered into the Treasury under the act of 1874, and the vouchers could not be paid.

Now I submit with all respect the question what there is in in-debtedness of this character which should require its reference to the Committee on War Claims or the Committee of Claims. What can they do with it? They can go and look over again the vouchers in the various Departments and bureaus of the Departments, and they can employ a practical and experienced accountant to add up the items, and see whether the clerks have made the proper computation; and that is the end of their power, their capacity, and their jurisdiction. The reference to the Committee of Claims was a matter of expediency. A presidential election was coming on, and we did not pediency. A presidential election was coming on, and we did not want to appropriate any needless amounts of money just at that time. The Committee of Claims had no power over this thing. They could do nothing with it except what they did; let it remain in their pigeon-holes until this session, when they reported it back, that it might come before the House, and it is now properly here for consideration and appropriation. These amounts, belonging to a multitude of people, although individually small in amount, aggregate, it is true, a considerable sum. But if it were a great deal more, is that a good reason for repudiating the indebtedness? The Pacific Railroad, I believe, has an amount here of between six and seven thousand dollars. I do not know just what the amount is, but it is an inconsiderable sum, and it is just like anybody eles's claim against the Government—or debt rather for these are not claims; they are found due by the officers intrusted with the duty of ascertaining the found due by the officers intrusted with the duty of ascertaining fact, found due by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by the Commissioner of the Land Office, by the Secretary of the Interior, and passed up to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him placed before Congress. Do gentlemen mean to intimate that these functionaries will make a false statement and will assert that an amount has been found due here when there is no such fact, and it is only an amount estimated for? So far as I have examined these reports, they invariably contain this distinction: where there is an amount estimated for, it is so stated; but where there is an amount found due, it is stated that a certain amount is found due to A, B, or C.

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. HANCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HANCOCK. Certainty.

Mr. EDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Texas if the Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter, has stated that these items are due?

Mr. HANCOCK. No, sir; some of them are estimated. The accounts were incurred under the Interior Department, and the amount due has been ascertained by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. BUCKNER. I would ask the gentleman whether he is claiming the payment of claims which have not yet been certified or allowed by the proper department of the Government.

Mr. HANCOCK. The amendment does not embrace all the claims in Executive Document No. 151. All are embraced in this amendment that have been shown to be due by the officer to whom the accounts were referred. The amount of these claims, as I was proceedcounts were referred. The amount of these claims, as I was proceeding to remark, should constitute no reason for the repudiation of the indebtedness of the Government. We might just as well repudiate the whole indebtedness of the Government, and it might be economy to do it in one form, but in another view it would be extravagant. I hold that the Government should deal with its citizens in the same way in which it requires its citizens to deal with one another, and when an amount is found due to any individual, however small the amount may be, whether it be three or four or fifteen or fourteen amount may be, whether it be three or four or inteen or fourteen hundred dollars, as in some of these cases, if the sums are found to be due and owing, an appropriation should be made to liquidate that debt on the part of the Government, so that it may discharge its obli-gations to the citizens as it is the duty of the citizen to discharge his objection toward his fellow-citizens.

Mr. WALDRON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. Belford.]

Mr. Belford. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that on yesterday we had an animated discussion on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Hancock,] and that this House voted by 97 yeas to 53 nays in favor of the amendment. I know of no circumstance in the meanwhile that would justify a change of this result. Now, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to this charge for transportation by the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

That charge is for transporting supplies to the Weeminuche band of Ute Indians in Southern Colorado. Those Indians for months past have been levying contributions upon our people—horses, feed, and all the supplies necessary for their support—because the Government has failed to supply them and in so doing failed to protect the people of Colorado against their spoliations and depredations. are now compelled to supply them and to sustain them; and that demand on the part of these Indians will continue till the Government of the United States either furnishes adequate protection to our people or furnishes supplies to these Indians.

It is very nice for gentlemen living here in the East to talk about an Indian policy, a peace policy, and a Christian policy. I believe that I am as much a Christian as is the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Seelye,] but before he can induce the people of the West to observe a peace policy in reference to the Indians he must be willing to stand on this floor and advocate a measure which will induce the Government to furnish to these wards of the nation the supplies they need. It has not been done heretofore. When we come and ask that these claims for supplies furnished to the Government shall be paid we are met with a statement that they have not been aljudicated or properly audited. I say that they have all been considered by the proper Department. They have undergone judicial inspection and inquiry. They have received the approval of one of the great Departments of this Government and they received the approval of the House yesterday and should receive the approval of the House to-day. It is simply a question whether or not this House intends to repudiate any horast dalt of the Government of the United States for it diate an honest debt of the Government of the United States, for if you repudiate these debts you will be no more justified than you would be if you repudiated the general debt of the nation incurred in the prosecution of the late war.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to another matter. In Executive Document No. 151, there are a large number of claims of ranchmen who performed duty in Colorado and Idaho, and in Da-kota and in other Territories belonging to the United States west of us. They rendered the service under a law established by the Govern-ment, and yet we are told that their claims, although small in amount, ment, and yet we are told that the shall not be paid.

People who inhabit the State of Colorado and the Territories surrounding it are generally poor people. They have earned all the money they possess. They need these small sums due them by the Government to help them to tide over this period of depression and want, and I call upon the House to-day to do justice to them.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. WALDRON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT.]

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise merely for the purpose of putting this matter correctly before the House, as I understand it. And let me first say a word as to the reference of these claims to the Committee of Claims. They were referred to that committee at the last session; but let me to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] that the committee say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] that the committee did not decline to act upon them in consequence of the pendency of a presidential election, but because they found it entirely impracticable to give their attention to these claims.

Mr. HANCOCK. I made no such charge as that.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then it is all right. They found that these claims had only been in part audited and that they would therefore require further investigation, and in consequence of the accumulated business on the hands of the committee it was impracticable that they could be disposed of. That is all I have to say upon that point. could be disposed of. That is all I have to say upon that point.

I would state what I understand to be the condition of these claims. I believe that in the main they are just claims; at least they are vouched for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as being just vouched for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as being just claims as far as he has investigated them. But the proof to sustain these claims is not yet matured and perfected. As I understand from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, these claims have been filed with the Department, but have not yet been thoroughly and fully investigated. There are three Departments which they must pass before there can be a final adjudication of the validity of these claims. First, they have to undergo the scrutiny of the Interior Department; second, the scrutiny of the executive commisties of Indian commissioners; and third the scrutiny of the accounting offician commissioners. dian commissioners; and, third, the scrutiny of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. If either one of these Departments condemns or rejects a claim it cannot be paid under the law unless there is provision made in this bill absolutely making an appropriation to pay it.

Mr. ELKINS. They have all been approved, and here is the evidence before the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask that the Clerk read a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which will explain the nature of these claims, and I call the attention of the House to the information therein communicated. We seem to have been in dumb confusion while these claims were being considered, and I think this letter will disentangle any misconception that gentlemen may have entertained in relation to these claims. If they will give attention they will perhaps know how to vote more intelligently.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. O., January 12, 1877.

SIR: * * By reference to House Executive Document No. 151, first session of the present Congress, it will be observed that those of the items embraced therein belonging to this Department are for supplies furnished either under contract or by open market purchase, and for services rendered by various employés in the Indian service, all of which accounts, so far as I am able to ascertain, are just and honest accounts, and should be paid.

In the event of an appropriation, which I trust will be made, all of the accounts named in said document are subject to the scrutiny of the examining clerks of this bureau, of the executive committee of the board of Indian commissioners, and of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department before payment can be made; and in no case could payment of any one of them be procured unless it be found correct and just and to correspond with the information in regard thereto contained in the records of this office and of those of the Treasury, through which all accounts must pass before payment.

For these reasons I recommend that the estimate of the accounts of this bureau embraced in the document named be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for proper action.

for proper action. Very respectfully,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

Hon. J. M. BRIGHT, Chairman Committee of Claims, House of Representatives.

Mr. WALDRON. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] my colleague on the Committee on Appro-

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask to have read the telegram which I send to the Clerk's desk, simply to illustrate the truth of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] has said.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 8, 1877.

The items referred to in your telegram were reported as deficiencies by the Interior Department, and I cannot say whether or not they all have been audited and allowed by the accounting officers.

C. F. CONANT,

Mr. WALDRON. I now call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, to which there are no objections, may be passed upon by a single vote of the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Let the amendments be read, and then if no objection is made they may be considered as agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments; and the first upon which a division was called was the following:

After line 154, section 1, insert: Topay W. H. Bliss, of Saint Louis, $1,500 for extra services as assistant attorney To pay W. H. Blis in the whisky cases

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. This is recommended by the Attorney-General.

Mr. ATKINS. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendment re-ported from the Committee of the Whole; and upon a division there were—ayes 38, noes 87.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. Wells, of Missouri, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. RUSK. No quorum voted.

The SPEAKER. That point of order was not made at the time and is now too late.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House now take a recess until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 63, noes 68. The next amendment upon which a division was called was the amendment moved by Mr. HANCOCK and adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask that the reading of this amendment be disensed with.

There was no objection.

[For amendment see proceedings in Committee of the Whole of esterday.]

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 43, noes 69.

Mr. LANE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HANCOCK and Mr. STONE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WALDRON and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there wereayes 67, noes 86.

Before the result of this vote was announced,
Mr. STONE called for the yeas and nays.
Mr. LANE. Pending the call for the yeas and nays, I move that the House now take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, with the understanding that a further recess be taken from that time until five minutes of twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The latter part of the gentleman's proposition would require unanimous consent. The Chair desires the indulgence of the House a moment. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] has all day been seeking an opportunity to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary touching the rules of this House in re-lation to the conduct of the business of the House. The Chair would ask that he now be allowed to submit the report so that it may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. For reference to the Committee on the Rules.

Mr. CONGER. No action to be taken to-night on the report?

The SPEAKER. That is all the Chair asks. The Committee on Rules desire that this report may be received, in order that they may conform their action to it in the future as to the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to save the right to object to the report. The SPEAKER. Certainly.

LEGISLATIVE DAYS-ADJOURNMENTS.

Mr. KNOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to submit the report which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read the following:

The Clerk read the following:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the rules of the House be, and are hereby, so amended that pending the count of the electoral vote and when the House is not required to be engaged therein, it shall on assembling each calendar day after recess from the preceding day proceed at and after twelve o'clock m. with its business as though the legislative day had expired by adjournment"— would respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration and find nothing in said resolution which in any manner conflicts with either the letter or spirit of the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, "approved January 29, 1877. On the contrary, they are of opinion that the adoption of the resolution would materially aid in carrying out the manifest intent of the provision in that act that while any question is being considered by said commission either House may proceed with its legislative or other business, in order to do which each House may make whatever rules and regulations, consistent with the Constitution, which it may think proper. They would therefore recommend the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER.— I object to the report at this time.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the report at this time.
Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman whether he will not consent that this report and resolution be referred to the Committee on

Mr. CONGER. Not to-night. That would give the committee the right to report on it at any time.

The SPEAKER. They already have that power.

Mr. CONGER. I say that I do not wish to consent to the reference of the report to a committee which has the power to report on it at any time

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules already has that power and probably will report on the subject without regard to this reference, because the question is already before them in a different

Mr. CONGER. Then my objection cannot hinder their action. The SPEAKER. No, sir, it does not.
Mr. CONGER. Then I insist on the objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, had asked a conference with the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WINDOM, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. WALLACE.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 824) for the relief of Hannah L. Lloyd, as executrix, and George W. King, executor, of William Lloyd, deceased.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Lane] that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. ATKINS. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that at ten o'clock to-morrow a further recess be taken till five minutes before twelve.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The motion of Mr. Lane was then agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess till tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated: By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of 13 citizens of Franklin County,

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1877-10 a. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate take a further recess until twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate re-assembled at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Byron Sunderland, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 8, was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of MATT W. RANSOM, elected by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4198) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 4611) to remove the political disabilities of Dabney M. Scales, of Memphis, Tennessee, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament there-of, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes. Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask a conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PADDOCK a member of the Committee on Agriculture in place of Mr. HARVEY excused. He also appointed Mr. HARVEY a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in place of Mr. PADDOCK excused.

COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 1271) amendatory of an act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1871, was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, in favor of the passage of an act authorizing coinage at the mint at Denver, and praying an appropriation therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petition of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the petition of the Iron and Steel Association, the petition of the Stevens Institute of Technology, and petitions of various scientific associations and colleges, with reference to the commission appointed by an act of Congress for the testing of American iron and steel. The documents accompanying these petitions are of considerable importance. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move also that extra copies be printed, which motion I ask to have referred to the Committee on Printing, which I believe has under consideration the President's message on the same subject.

Mr. DAVIS. What documents does the Senator desire to have printed?

Mr. ALLISON. Resolutions of scientific associations, colleges, &c.,

Mr. ALLISON. Resolutions of scientific associations, colleges, &c., in relation to the mode of testing iron and steel.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print extra copies will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. INGALLS presented a memorial of the Kansas State Horticultural Society, praying Congress to adopt some effective means to prevent the destructive invasion of the Rocky Mountain locusts; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying the removal of the limitation to arrears of pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KELLY presented a petition of a large number of settlers in the Des Moines Valley, Iowa, praying Congress to redress their grievances in relation to the lands occupied and claimed by them; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a memorial of the State grange of the State of Missouri, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, so as to insure cheaper rates of transportation of freights from the West to the East and to the Old World; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS. I present two petitions, one from citizens of the State of West Virginia and another of the same character signed by nearly all the members of the Legislature of West Virginia. As the petitions are very short and relate to pensions, I ask that the one signed by a majority of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Forty-fourth Congress:

We, the undersigned, do most earnestly urge upon Congress the passage of the act allowing pensioners the amount of arrears to which they would be entitled by a removal from the statutes of the unjust limitation which has debarred many from receiving their just dues, and that they shall be entitled to receive in all cases pensions from date of discharge of the soldier. That a limitation act of the kind in force is unjust, and that the representatives of the people had no right to take advantage of the accidents and incidents which have occurred in many ways to prevent those who have made the most extreme sacrifice for the country from receiving the full measure of justice to which they are equitably entitled.

The petitions were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DENNIS presented a petition of citizens of Somerset County, Maryland, praying for the establishment of a post-route from West-over to Heckman's Store, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BARNUM presented a petition of citizens of Connecticut, pray ing an amendment of the pension laws, so as to allow arrearages of pensions; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHYTE presented a petition of the faculty of St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland, praying the passage of the bill for the repeal of the import duty on books; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, Maryland, in favor of the repeal of the law imposing Federal taxes on the deposits, circulation, and capital of all banks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, to report it back with various amendments, and I ask that the bill, as amended, be printed. I desire to give notice that I shall call up this bill some day in the early part of next week and ask the Senate to pass upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the amendments, will be printed of course under the rules.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims to whom was re-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the amendments, will be printed of course under the rules.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John D. Foster, praying compensation for his services as colonel of the Twenty-second Regiment Missouri Volunteers from September 1, 1861, to February 19, 1862, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1217) to incorporate the Metropolitan Life-Insurance Company of the United States of America, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1271) amendatory of the act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1871, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3163) to authorize the Ocean City Bridge Company to maintain and operate a bridge heretofore erected over and across Sinepuxent Bay, in Worcester County, Maryland, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1126) regulating street paving and repairs in Washington and Georgetown, District of Columbia, reported adverselythereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

HAYDEN'S SURVEY OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print extra copies of Professor Hayden's report of geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1875 and 1876, reported it without amendment; and the resolution was concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be prepared 4,500 copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1875 and 1876; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the office of the survey.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1236) to authorize and equip an expedition to the arctic seas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1237) to remove the political disabilities of

H. H. Lewis, of Baltimore, Maryland; which was read twice by its

Mr. Lewis, of Batchiore, Maryland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1238) making an appropriation for the expenses of the electoral commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COOPER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1239) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds

Mr. SPENCER. At the request of several clergymen of this city I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1240) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia and to clear the title of the trustees to such property; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1241) granting a pension to Frank A Moriarty, guardian of the minor heirs of Peter Moriarty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1242) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers," approved August 11, 1876; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. In presenting this bill I wish to say that it was forwarded to me by Governor Shannon, the attorney for the settlers upon those lands, and I introduce the bill at his request. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1243) to repeal the statute forbidding appointments and promotions in the staff of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes: which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. GRAHAM.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 431) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham be recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

on Patents.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I trust that motion will not prevail. The bill was reported nearly a year ago, and has been on the Calendar that time. It passed the House a year ago.

Mr. WALLACE. I think not.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It passed the House on the 20th of March, 1876. It came here and was referred to the Committee on Patents and reported to the Senate on the 9th of June. The bill was before the committee from the 20th of March to the 19th of June, and the committee had every opportunity to examine it. It has been upon the Calendar from the 20th of June to the present time. To recommit the bill now at this stage of the session of course would defeat it. Parties contesting have had abundant opportunity to do so, not only when the bill was pending in the House, but for three months before the Senate committee and since it has been on the Calendar here. This motion, if agreed to, would undoubtedly defeat the whole measure now at this stage of the session, and I trust it will not prevail. If it is in order to speak to the merits of the case on this motion, I should like to be heard. like to be heard.

like to be heard.

Mr. WALLACE. I only wish to say that parties interested in this patent ask to have a hearing. I did not know that this bill had been so long before the Senate as the Senator from Virginia states. It appears, therefore, that parties contesting are in default, and I of course withdraw the motion.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania who the parties contesting are?

Mr. WALLACE. The vice-president of the American District Telegraph Company, Philadelphia, is interested in this subject. I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

LANDS IN KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. KELLY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1316, to adjust the claims of the owners of lands of House bill No. 1316, to adjust the claims of the owners of lands within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation in the State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this motion?

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. JOHNSTON. How long will it occupy?

Mr. KELLY. It will occupy, I think, only a short time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It will take all the morning hour, I fear.

Mr. KELLY. No; I think it will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been before the Scnate heretofore, and amended by the Senate. The Secretary will report the bill as it now reads.

The CHIEF CLERK. As amended, the bill reads:

The CHIEF CLERK. As amended, the bill reads:

Be it enacted, de., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to issue scrip for quantities of land not less than one section to the legal owners of the land granted to the State of Oregon by act of Congress approved July 2, 1884, to aid in the construction of a wagon-road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State, authorizing them to select and locate, of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States, not mineral, and which are then subject to entry under the homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States, and in tracts not less than one section, as provided for in the United States land laws, and if unsurveyed when taken, then to conform when surveyed to the general system of the United States land surveys, a quantity of land equal in amount to the lands within the limits of said grant embraced in the Klamath Indian reservation designated and set apart by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as lands in place, the quantity of said lands to be ascertained by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. And the said Commissioner shall issue patents for the lands so selected: Provided, That no scrip nor patents shall issue patents for the lands so selected: Provided, That no scrip nor patents shall issue patents for the lands so selected: Provided, That no scrip is sued in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or any act of Congress amendatory or supplemental thereto, shall be located upon other than the public lands lying within the said State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this motion? The Chair hears no objection. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a report accompanying this bill? If so, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. KELLY. The report has already been read and the bill discussed at the last session, when several amendments were adopted by the Senate. The Senator from Iowa will remember that there was quite an elaborate discussion on the subject at the last session, especially by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I think it has been fully discussed.

Mr. MERRIMON. Does it appropriate any lands?

Mr. KELLY. It simply gives other lands to the owners of certain lands on which was located the Klamath Indian reservation. The lands on which was located the Klamath Indian reservation. The lands had been conveyed to those owners by patent and the bill provides that they shall reconvey to the United States all the title they have to those lands lying within the Klamath reservation, and then they are to get other lands in lieu of them. If it be desired I shall not object of course to the reading of the report; it is brief.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no report

Mr. KELLY. There is a House report.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Oregon perhaps can explain it best. As I understand, there was a grant made some years ago to the State of Oregon to build a wagon-road through that State.

Mr. KELLY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. This wagon-road as located passed through an Indian reservation.

Mr. KELLY. No, sir; it did not. I will explain the bill, if the

Mr. KELLY. No, sir; it did not. I will explain the bill, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have an explanation.

Mr. KELLY. I will give a brief statement of the facts as they exist. On the 2d day of July, 1864, Congress granted certain lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of Oregon. On the 24th day of October, 1864, the State of Oregon conveyed all its rights and interests in those lands to the Oregon Central Military Wagon Road Company. Immediately afterward that company began the construction of this road, which was built from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State of Oregon, a distance of four hundred and sixty-one miles, at an expense of probably nearly $300, hundred and sixty-one miles, at an expense of probably nearly $300,-000. Afterward land was granted by treaty for an Indian reservation, which took a part and the best portion of these lands. That treaty was dated the 14th of October, 1864. It was ratified on the 2d day of July, 1867, or at least it is reported that the ratification was "advised" at that time; but it was not proclaimed till the 17th of February, 1870. That treaty contains the following article:

This treaty shall bind the contracting parties whenever the same is ratified by the Senate and President of the United States.

Before the ratification this road had been built. The reservation. Before the ratification this road had been built. The reservation, however, was laid upon these lands, and as was likely, it produced difficulty. If the report of the House committee is read, it will be seen that Agent Dyer strongly recommends that Congress grant other lands in lieu of these which were patented to this company. All they ask is simply that they shall have other lands in lieu of them. They have earned all these lands; they have earned them at a very costly price to them. They have paid taxes on them to a large amount; and whatever may be the result, if Congress grant them these lands, they will still be the losers, because the lands they have earned will not pay them for their outlay.

they will still be the losers, because the lands they have earned will not pay them for their outlay.

The Klamath Indian reservation was, as might have been supposed, laid upon the lands that were most valuable. The Indians will not leave them now; and yet the assignees of the gentleman who constructed this road have a perfect title to them, but they do not want to disturb the Indians in them. The bill is equitable and just in every respect, and indeed it will be a breach of faith if the United States begins induced these gentlements are expended their review in States, having induced these gentlemen to expend their money in this work for the receipt of public lands, shall, after they have earned them and received patents for them, allow an Indian reservation to take them away. It is but just and nothing but justice that they should have these lands in lieu of those taken away. They might go on and try their title by insisting in the courts that possession should be given to them; but they do not want to put the Government to that expense, nor do they desire to dispossess the Indians. This is the substance of the bill. I might elaborate it, but I do not care to take un time.

This is the substance of the bill. I might elaborate it, but I do not care to take up time.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the report made by Mr. LAFAYETTE LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands, in the House of Representatives, on the 25th of February, 1876.

Mr. INGALLS. I dislike to interpose any objections to a measure that seems on its face to be purely local in its character; but this bill involves a question of very considerable interest, and may establish a very injurious precedent. It appears from a law passed on the 2d day of July, 1864, that the United States granted "to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road, " * alternate sections of public land, designated by odd numbers, for three sections in width on each side of said road." The act provided further:

That the lands hereby granted shall be exclusively applied in the construction of said road, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses; and the same shall be applied to no other purpose whatever.

There is an additional provision:

That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by act of Congress or other competent authority be, and the same are, reserved from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be necessary to locate the route of said road through the same, in which case the right of way granted.

By the treaty of October 14, 1864, the reservation that is now occupied by the Klamath Indians was established. At that time the definite route of location of this wagon-road had not been established, and there had been no definite location of the road so far as the public lands are concerned, no map of withdrawal had been filed. There had been no reservation of any portion of the public domain under this act for the benefit of this corporation. While it is true that this treaty was not proclaimed until a subsequent date, yet it is a fact that by the regulations of the executive department the treaty under which the Klamath Indians now hold this reservation is recognized to have been established on the 14th of October, 1864.

The conveyance by the State of Oregon of its rights under this act to the wagon-road company in question was not made until a date subsequent to that when the treaty was ratified. It is a matter of fact that it was not until a very much later period that there was any work done by the corporation under which they became entitled to fact that it was not until a very much later period that there was any work done by the corporation under which they became entitled to locate any lands by virtue of this, and meanwhile this reservation had been established in the language of the provise to the bill "by competent authority," that is, by the treaty-making power of the United States Government. Now the question arises whether or not the subsequent act of this wagon-road corporation in constructing their road authorizes them to indemnity or lieu lands in the place of what they would have received in this Indian reservation had not those boundaries been established. I do not know what the amount that the company would have received in the reservation would have been. The entire area of the Klamath reservation is 1,056,000 acres. I therefore assume that the term of the act granting "alternate sections of the public land designated by odd numbers for three sections in width on each side of said road" reserved to this corporation a very considerable amount of the public domain.

The Supreme Court, in a case which was recently before it, in the suit of the United States against the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston, and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroads, has established the proposition that corporations that are endowed with grants of public land do not take within Indian reservations, even when these are subsequently extinguished, that those reservations are in of public land do not take within Indian reservations, even when these are subsequently extinguished, that those reservations are in no sense whatever public lands of the United States, so as to entitle the companies to receive a grant in them by virtue of an act endowing them with public lands for the purposes specified in this or any other similar act. In this case this is an existing Indian reservation to which the title has not been extinguished. If the company would not be entitled to indemnity lands or to lands within the limits of this reservation if the reservation itself were extinguished, can it he held that we shall say that this corporation shall be entitled to its of this reservation if the reservation itself were extinguished, can it be held that we shall say that this corporation shall be entitled to indemnity lands in an existing Indian reservation whose boundaries were established prior to the date when the grant inured by virtne of the terms of the actitself? It is establishing a very novel proposition, and one that, in view of the great number of Indian reservations through which railroad corporations have run their lines, may be of very considerable importance to this Government hereafter.

Mr. KELLY. I think I can explain the matter to the entire satisfaction of the Senator from Kansas and the Senate. The grant made to the State of Oregon was on the 2d day of July, 1864. It uses the words that are common in land grants to corporations, "that there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Oregon" a certain quantity of land, and it is a present grant.

Mr. INGALLS. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. KELLY. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. Does he understand that the terms of that act constitute a present grant of specific tracts of land to the State of Oregon?

stitute a present grant of specific tracts of land to the State of Oregon ?

Mr. KELLY. I will answer thus: it constituted a specific grant of certain lands to the State of Oregon, and when they are definitely located then the title relates back to the time of the grant. That is as I understand the decision of the Supreme Court. It is a present as I understand the decision of the Supreme Court. It is a present grant to be ascertained thereafter by the actual location of the land. Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator answer me this question: When the title either of the State of Oregon or of the corporation which is the assignee of the State vests in any specific tract of land along the route of that road ?

Mr. KELLY. The title to the lands vests in the company at the time of the location of the road. That is the time they become fixed and certain, although the grant relates back to the time of the act of Congress; but that, as I will show, amounts to little or nothing. That is the proposition I contend for.

That is the proposition I contend for.

On the 24th day of October, 1864, as I stated, the lands were granted by the State of Oregon to this company. Ten days before that time a treaty was made with the Klamath Indians. It was not ratified until two years afterward. Whether it was ratified or not I can hardly say because the treaty itself says "ratification advised on the 2d of July, 1866."

Mr. HAMILTON. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I will ask him if the ratification of that treaty did not relate back to the making of the treaty?

making of the treaty?

Mr. KELLY. If one relates back, the other relates back. If the location of the road relates back to the date of the grant by Congress, it is possible that this ratification may relate back to the time of the date of the treaty; but I call especial attention to the twelfth article of the treaty, which says:

This treaty shall bind the contracting parties whenever the same is ratified by the Senate and President of the United States.

It bound nobody until it was ratified. Therefore I contend that at the time of ratification these lands had become vested in the company. But if that were not so, if I am even deceived in this, these men built the road in good faith upon the pledge of the United States. The Indians were not located on the land at that time nor for several years after. They were taken on to the reservation long after the road was constructed; and it is simply an act of good faith to give them this land. If they were mistaken, if there was doubt about it is it not right and proper that this matter should be settled about it, is it not right and proper that this matter should be settled amicably and peaceably, and that these gentlemen who have built this road for the benefit of the Government should receive lands elsewhere ?

While speaking on this point I would say that the very supplies for these Indians are carried over the road that has been constructed by these men. Everything that is taken there is carried over it. It was a wilderness; it was impossible to get there, and it would be impossible now to get to that reservation and carry the Indian supplies except for the road built by these men. They have justice, and I believe they have law in their favor.

For these reasons I do hope the bill will pass before the morning hour expires.

hour expires.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a very strong impression that at the last session of Congress the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made very decisive opposition to the bill, and made statements which impressive transfer. I am not able now to turn to the debate.

very decisive opposition to the bill, and made statements which impressed me very strongly. I am not able now to turn to the debate.

Mr. KELLY. I can turn the Senator to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the book. I think that under the circumstances, especially during the morning hour, as this involves a private claim to land for a considerable amount, we ought not to act on it until the Senator from Vermont can be in his seat. Taking up bills in this way and passing them in the morning hour when we are not prepared to point out objections to them, is not safe except as to minor bills of an uncontroverted character.

My friend has just handed me the RECORD with the debate. I see that the Senator from Vermont made a long speech against this bill, and I listened to him at the time and it made a decided impression on my mind; but the facts which control the case I am not prepared on my mind; but the facts which control the case I am not prepared on my mind; but the facts which control the case I am not prepared to enter into now. I think, therefore, it would be better for the Senator from Oregon to let the bill go over. The attention of the Senate has been called to it now and I ask the attention of Senators to the debate of the last session, which is now before me, on the 19th of July, 1876, when the Senator from Vermont gave very good reasons against the passage of the bill and for the time defeated it, or at least it was put over until the present session. I think my friend from Oregon, as there are but five minutes left, had better let it go over.

Mr. KELLY. I beg the Senate not to do that. Last session, I was going to say it was talked to death but not exactly that, but twice at the expiration of the morning hour this bill went over. It is a measure of very great importance. If I could only have the time of the Senate after the expiration of the morning hour I would not hesitate a moment to let it go over and be discussed fully and fairly by every Senator in the body; but I know what will be the result. The same thing was said before, "let it go over" and it is now said "let it go over." The upshot will be that in the end it will be defeated; in the end it will go over for good and all.

over. I do not want to say a word against it without having the exact facts in my mind refreshed, but I know when the matter was discussed at the last session I made up my mind very strongly against the bill, and here is a long speech before me containing a great deal of information. As a matter of course I am not prepared to repeat that unless I send it to the Secretary to have it read and I do not want to consume time in doing that. I submit to the Senator under the circumstances that he had better allow the bill to go over unless the cumstances that he had better allow the bill to go over unless the Senate is willing to extend the morning hour. Then I am perfectly willing to go into the merits.

Mr. KELLY. I would make this suggestion then: I desire to accommodate every Senator, but I do not wish that this bill shall lose its place; and if it be the unanimous consent of the Senate that it shall be taken up to-morrow after the morning hour, so as to give the Senator from Ohio time to examine it, I shall be perfectly satisfied. I want to get a fair consideration of the bill; I never desired anything else; but it must be apparent to every Senator that the session thing else; but it must be apparent to every Senator that the session is fast approaching its close and if I do not insist on it now, necessarily a failure will take place. I certainly cannot be blamed for that. The Senate certainly knows that I have not occupied much of its time in debate, and I do not think it is asking very much if I simply ask the favor of the Senate that it take up this bill to-morrow after the morning hour shall have expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this sugges-

Mr. INGALLS. I have previously given notice that at the first opportunity after the disposition of the pending order, which I believe is the Pacific Railroad bill, I should feel it to be my duty to ask the consideration of the bill relating to the pensions of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the existing limitation upon the pension laws; and I must therefore object to any unanimous understanding, so far as I can do so now, that will interfere with that previous

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. KELLY. I shall ask for the consideration of the bill to-morrow morning after the morning business is disposed of, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon gives notice that he will ask for the consideration of the bill to-morrow morning after the morning business is over. The bill will go over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriations for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Henry Waldern of Michigan, Mr. J. L. Vance of Ohio, and Mr. Charles B. Roberts of Maryland managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 824) for the relief of Hannah L. Lloyd as executrix and George W. King executor of William Lloyd, deceased.

A bill (H. R. No. 4284) authorizing the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to buy in certain real and other property, and to sell the same at public or private sale, and for other purposes: and purposes; and A bill (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan and making an appropriation therefor.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 3748) to provide for the redemption of real estate sold under judgments and decrees in the courts of the United States be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senate to indulge me during the residue of the morning hour in taking up Senate bill No. 1141.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes Ferdinand C. Latrobe, William F. Frick, and Robert Garrett, of Maryland, to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph, or submarine cables, on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines. marine canies, on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines, wires, or submarine cables. At least one cable shall be laid and operating between Europe and the Atlantic coast of the United States within three years; and the present tariff rates of messages are to be reduced to one-third, or one shilling British currency, per word, over the new cable or cables. No amalgamation, union, or sale of cable interests established under the act is to be made to any existing European or other cable companies.

Any telegraphic line or cable laid is to be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations:

First. The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines, or cable or cables, as there may, by law; agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever.

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privi-leges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nations.

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the fol-

Infrdy. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

Fourthly. The lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as Fifthly. Before extending and establishing any such line or lines, or cable or cables, in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the said company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for five minutes to pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Let it be subject to a call for the regular order. Mr. WEST.

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.
Mr. WEST. Very good.
The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 16, after the word "interested," to insert "the rates not to exceed those charged to individ-uals;" so as to make the clause read:

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23 of section 2, to strike out the word "hereinafter" and insert "hereinbefore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM A. GRAHAM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 984, in relation to the Pacific Railroad acts.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senator from Louisiana to allow the regular order to be laid aside informally that I may call up a bill which I do not think will occupy time.

Mr. WEST. If it will meet the convenience of the Senator from Continuous Continuous necticut, [Mr. EATON,] who I understand desires to address the Senate on the regular order, subject to a call for the regular order, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 431) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That bill will give rise to debate, no doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusette object? setts object?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir, I object.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As it is beyond the morning hour, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate. One objection will not put it over.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It will give rise to debate inevitably; but I am as willing the bill should be considered now as at any other time. I as withing the bill should be considered now as at any other time. I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is subject to a call for the regular order. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

The bill was read.

Mr. WEST. I yielded to the solicitation of the Senator from Virginia to have that bill brought to the attention of the Senate; but I am satisfied from the notice that has been given by the Senator from Massachusetts, and also from the fact that the Senator from Nebraska who is not now in his seat [Mr. PADDOCK] has expressed a desire to be heard on the bill, that it will lead to a prolonged debate; and therefore, although I should be exceedingly glad to oblige the Senator from Virginia, I feel it my duty to call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana calls for the regular order, which is the railroad bill.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate long upon the bill under consideration. There has been a very unnecessary amount of legal learning, in my judgment, thrown into the discussion of this bill. I had supposed that the States of New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, together with other States, as well as the legal action of the Government, if I may say so, lead a hown what the paramount law of the Legalature was in cases States, as well as the legal action of the Government, if I may say so, had shown what the paramount law of the Legislature was in cases of this character. The ordinary term which is found in nearly all acts of incorporation reserving the power to alter, amend, or repeal is not an omnipotent governing power in the hands of an assembly, either the Congress of the United States or the Legislature of any State. I had supposed that without a list of authorities such as has been brought before the Senate in the discussion of this question the power was well understood by every intelligent lawyer in the land. That the Congress of the United States to a certain extent has power to amend, no one doubts: that the Congress of the United States for to amend, no one doubts; that the Congress of the United States for good and sufficient reasons has the power to repeal, no one doubts; but there must be a reason, there must be a violation of duty upon the part of the corporation that will warrant action of that character on the part of Congress

I do not propose to go into a legal discussion. So far as that is concerned, the discussion by the distinguished Senators from New York [Mr. CONKLING] and Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] has closed this matter, in my judgment. I do not propose to go into a legal discussion on that point. But has any contingency arisen that would warrant the action of Congress in this matter? The Congress of the United States have once before undertaken to act in this matter.

United States have once before undertaken to act in this matter. They have undertaken to say that interest should have been paid. The Supreme Court said that Congress was wrong in that respect.

I do not propose, either, to be drawn into a discussion with regard to the propriety of the original legislation on this subject. That is another matter. Whether it was wise or unwise for the Government to enter into this contract, whether the fact of their being a party to and connected with a corporation of this sort was unwise legislation, is something which I am not about to speak of. But we have the thing right before us in this way: Here is a large amount of money, some say eighty, some ninety million dollars, that has been or will have to be paid by the people of the United States. The Judiciary Committee, by the bill which they have offered, undertake to mark out a course by which this money can be saved to the Government and the people. Now, in my judgment, the Judiciary Committee have failed, and will utterly fail, and Congress will utterly fail if they permit that bill to become a law.

In the first place, that bill undertakes to determine what net earn-

In the first place, that bill undertakes to determine what net earnings are. I say that it is not competent for the Congress of the United States to determine a commercial matter of that character. There will be no net earnings that can be touched by the law of the United States if that bill shall become a law. It would be like a contest that there was once in New York; the Senator from New York will remember it well; a good many years ago there was a certain ferry company in New York that when its net earnings amounted to a certain percentage all over that was to take a certain course. It never arrived at that. Why? Because there was boat after boat, steamer after steamer built; their ships were full, there never were any net earnings to exceed the certain percentage, 8 per cent. I think it was a proposed these here. it was; nor would there be here.

it was; nor would there be here.

Now, sir, these railroad companies should be treated properly; and what is proper? Here is a large debt to the United States. Then there is some fifty or sixty millions of dollars of prior indebtedness to that to the United States. That must be paid. The United States occupy the position of second mortgagee in this matter. Now in my judgment what is to be done is as business men to do what we best can, both for the roads and for the Government. My honorable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] in a word or two which he said in favor of the Judiciary Committee bill, stated that he thought it was proper that the Law Committee of this House should determine this matter. I beg leave to differ with him. I am not very clear that the Railroad Committee is the proper committee, although I am a member of it. I am not very clear that the proper committee who should have had this matter in charge is not the Finance Committee of this body. But no matter about that. In my judgment it is clearly of this body. But no matter about that. In my judgment it is clearly any other than the Judiciary Committee. This is a business matter. The Government of the United States has become involved here, wisely or unwisely, to the tune of $100,000,000. How shall we get out of this difficulty and in what manner? By enacting a law that will cripple these companies? I beg to say that that is not the way. By enacting a law that would induce these companies to throw their property out of their hands? That is not the way; and the Government cannot protect the people by legislation of that character. In my judgment, it would result in injury, and therefore I am opposed

The Railroad Committee had before it a bill offered by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] I am very frank to say that, although I voted for the bill in committee, it hardly meets my entire commendation; but it is before the Senate. If there are objectionable features in it, those features can be amended. The principle of this bill, in my judgment, is right.

A Senator upon this floor who has made this matter a subject of study says that by the terms of this bill, if the payments were all anticipated and the money due to the United States from the railroad companies was to be paid to-morrow, it would amount to more than 50 per cent. of the amount due the United States. It was suggested here by certain gentlemen, rather by the questions of certain Senators, that there would be an overwhelming loss to the Government by the terms of this bill. My friend, the honorable Senator ernment by the terms of this bill. My friend, the honorable Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Chaffee,] has given this matter a great deal of attention, and I have great confidence in his arithmetic. His opinion is that the Government of the United States, if prepaid to-day, with all the advantages of discount, &c., would receive more than 50 per cent. of the amount of money which it has paid out; and if the Government of the United States has paid out $100,000,000 for the benefit of these railroad companies and could receive back today $50,000,000 it would be amply repaid, rather than wait twenty years and take the full amount, for the Government is going on every year semi-annually paying a certain amount of interest.

I submit, therefore, to the Senate that the true principle is to be found in the bill of the Senator from Georgia, which is not to cripple the roads. I am not an advocate of corporations. I presume had I been a member of this body when the road was chartered the act would not have received my vote. I have no idea that I shall vote for any charter of that character while I am a member of this body. But the faith of the Government has been pledged to these companies. I respect that pledge. I would not be part and parcel to any legislation which tended to bring dishonor upon the Government, and I verily believe that the legislation contemplated by the bill of the Judiciary Committee would be injurious to the character of the Government of the United States. Somebody said it would involve us at once in a lawsuit, expensive, tedious, and doubtless one that in the end would be unsuccessful so far as the Government is concerned. Of course I make this suggestion with great deference when the distinguished lawyers of the Judiciary Committee have aumounced that in their judgment that bill is a bill that will stand the test of the Sutheir judgment that bill is a bill that will stand the test of the Supreme Court of the United States; but still I express my own judgment, and, therefore, I will have no part in this legislation. I think the very worst policy that either men or Government can get into is to buy into lawsuits. I have never known an individual who bought into a lawsuit that did not suffer pecuniarily. I have no doubt that if the Government is forced into a lawsuit it will suffer as we have the Government is forced into a lawshit it will suner as we have before by being forced into such a suit.

Honesty requires, fairness requires that such legislation should be had as will tend to pay the debt; and it is averred here—and I have no doubt of it, though I have not gone over the figures myself—that this debt will be entirely paid by 1912 by the operation of the bill of the Senator from Georgia if it should become a law. Now I submit to Senators that if this great transaction can be ended in that way, it ought to be adopted. I have heard no Senator who has advocated the bill of the Judiciary Committee who has pretended to give cated the bill of the Judiciary Committee who has pretended to give the date when this payment will be made. No Senator has examined this question with sufficient thoroughness to be able to tell the Senate and the country when there will be an end to this matter by the bill of the Judiciary Committee. If the other bill be imperfect, amend it, but with this we can see an end of this matter in thirty years; and in thirty years, in the opinion of gentlemen who have given this and in thirty years, in the opinion of gentlemen who have given this subject thorough consideration, the people of the United States will be repaid for the money which they have advanced.

I say again that the legislation of the United States with regard to these corporations should be liberal, fair, and just. It should treat these corporations precisely as we would treat individuals. One would suppose, to listen to the arguments of one distinguished Senator on this floor with regard to this bill, that these companies ought to be punished, because the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the interest was not due until the principal matured. Why punish the companies for the legislation of the United States, if that legislation was improper, unwise, or wrong? That is we have been told on the floor of the Senate that these corporawe have been told on the hoor of the Senate that these corpora-tions had violated their charters in that they had not made their re-ports as the law demands. That honorable Senator was entirely mistaken in making a charge of that character. When he examines the statutes of the United States he will find, as the distinguished Senator from New York said, the error that he has fallen into; that is to say, Congress has ordered the reports to be made, not to the Sec-retary of the Treasury, but to the Secretary of the Interior and these retary of the Treasury, but to the Secretary of the Interior, and there these reports are filed and are to be found to-day precisely as the law requires. Therefore if that reason formed one of the arguments why legislation of this character should be forced upon these companies, it falls to the earth. That is not a reason any longer, because it is not the fact.

Mr. President, not to detain the Senate longer, I believe the temper of this body is to legislate in such a manner as will protect not only the people of the United States, but this great railroad interest that deserves protection at the hands of the Legislature. Believing as I do that such is the temper of the Senate, such the temper of Congress, I trust that the bill which has been brought before the Senate by the Judiciary Committee will be voted down, and that the bill of the Railroad Committee will be substituted in place thereof; and then, if the principle in that bill is right, as I firmly believe it to be, if there be any errors in the text of the bill, let those errors be amended, and, in my judgment, the honor of the country will be maintained, the honor of Congress will be maintained, the honor of the people will be maintained, and justice to the corporations will be had.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments on this measure, as I desire to say a few words on the principles which govern the vote that I shall give. The attitude of the public and of the Legislature to this enterprise illustrates, I think, public and of the Legislature to this enterprise Hustrates, I tank, almost as much as anything in our history the uncertainty and fickleness in legislation upon important subjects. Those who have here before and during the progress of this work up to this time, and have watched its attitude and the attitude of the public, and legislation toward it, can hardly fail to wonder at the difference between now and then. For a long time the idea of a railroad to the Pacific was treated as a mere fancy, utterly impracticable, and it arrested the and then. For a long time the idea of a railroad to the Pacific was treated as a mere fancy, utterly impracticable, and it arrested the thought of no legislator of practical common sense for year after year. It was only when the war broke out and we began to feel that there was in the topography of the country, as well as in the social institutions of the country, an element of weakness that this project, among others, of binding together the different parts of this country treated the attention of these who were willing to undertake any arrested the attention of those who were willing to undertake any and everything for the accomplishment of that end; and in the progress of the effort to bind together parts of the Union the determina-tion to spare nothing of effort or of treasure or of enterprise to accomplish that end so grew upon the people that it has no parallel in the history of any other nation—the undertaking of such a great en-terprise in time of war, when all the energies of the nation seemed to be taxed to their utmost for the preservation of the peace of the country, peace being the question in the minds of many; but all hastened to the undertaking of this great work.

Then it was that we chartered these companies. Then it was that we waited one or two years to see if this enterprise could be undertaken upon the terms that were first proposed; and failing in that, determined that this road should be built as a national enterprise, without regard to cost, we undertook a new plan, advertised to the public new terms for the accomplishment of this great work, and we advertised for many months and we presented to capitalists and to engineers new inducements before they could be enlisted in this work. When it was undertaken we watched it with very much the zeal, no, far more, than we do the great enterprise that so enlisted the attention of the Senate yesterday, the opening of the mouths of the Mississippi to free navigation. So we watched every step of this work. We had offered our terms, men had accepted them and had undertaken the work; and as every section of the line became so completed as to entitle them to call upon us for the fulfillment pro tanto of our part of our obligations, we were only too willing to respond and to demonstrate to the parties on the other side how glad we were for the opportunity. So it went on twenty miles, forty miles, one hundred miles, two hundred miles, and we put our hands into the Treasury without asking any questions.

Then we invited them from the other side to make haste and to see which of these two competing corporations would accomplish this work the soonest, and we told them that all we had offered to them was ready in an open hand to that corporation which should first accomplish this work. We made no complaint; we did not say to these corporations in the middle of their work, "We made an improvident bargain with you." We never stopped to inquire whether it was improvident or not. We urged on the undertakers of this enterprise; we stimulated them to the utmost of our ability in every inprise; we stimulated them to the utmost of our ability in every inducement we could hold out to them; and when the two companies joined hands in 1869 at Ogden and bound together the continent in this iron bond, the whole nation, instead of uttering complaints against these corporations for the manner in which they had executed their part of the contract, instead of charging them with misappropriating the funds with which we had furnished them, with full knowledge of all that it had cost us, the nation and its Legislature united in a public rejoicing that one of the greatest enterprises in history, undertaken in a time of war, had been so rapidly and so completely accomplished.

When we made the offer we knew as well as we know to-day just how much it would cost. No new element of cost has entered into it. We knew the number of miles; we knew the number of thousands of dollars per mile that we had engaged to give these corporations for this work; we knew the number of acres of land which we had donated to them. We knew at each stopping place in the progress of the work that we had just as much power as we have to-day to stop it. We knew then just where every dollar that had come out of the Treasury for this purpose up to that hour had been placed. But we told them to go on and complete another section, and when that was done, with eyes just as wide open as they are to-day, we turned over to them what we had promised in the beginning to them, and then we told them to go on and make haste, and six or seven years before they had obligated themselves to us that they would complete this work they had it so substantially completed that we were enjoying to a great extent the benefits of it. Not until three or four years after that, when we had begun to feel the beneficial effects of it all over the country, was a single whisper of complaint heard in the land that we had entered into an improvident obligation on our part with these roads. But the necessities and the exigencies of a political campaign in 1872 involved these roads in the bitterness of a party conflict, and all at once parties in this country rivaled each other in seeing how far they could go in making war upon one of our own children.

Now, after it is all over, after it is accomplished, after the performance by these corporations cannot be taken back, after so far as they are concerned there is no retreat, after the fact and after the demonstration, it is discovered on the part of the other contracting party, or it is thought by the other contracting party that they have discovered that they did then make an improvident contract with these corporations. And that is the attitude to-day of the Legislature of this great nation toward this great work; an after-thought; a war got up after the fact, when it is not in their power to retreat; and the study and the effort to-day is not to discover whether this can be done rightfully or not, in the forum of good morals and of fair dealing, but whether we have the power to do it.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] yesterday, in discussing another subject, gave us a good lesson:

I do not understand that in this question we have anything to do with the grand-eur of this improvement. I do not understand that we have anything to do with the question as to whether these bonds are above or below par. * * * The ques-tion is: What is a fair construction of this statute!

I do not understand that we have anything to do to-day, any more than yesterday, with the question whether when we made this con-tract we made an improvident one or whether if we had known then what we know now we should not have endeavored to make a better what we know how we should not have endeavored to make a better one; but I understand, in the language of the Senator from Iowa, the question is, what sort of a contract did we make? It is all summed up in a fair and honest paraphrase of this Judiciary Committee's bill in these words: I have entered into some negotiation with you, Mr. President, [Mr. BURNSIDE in the chair,] the result of which is that I hold your note for a thousand dollars to be paid ten years hence. I do not complain, nor do you, that I hold this note franchestly or that I have obtained if they want done and followed. fraudulently or that I have obtained it from you under any false pretenses. You are capable of managing your own affairs and so am I; not so capable as you are, but for the purpose of the illustration as capable as you. We have entered into this contract and you have ven me your note payable ten years hence for a thousand dollars, and I have taken such security as I deemed sufficient. After it is all over, somebody whispers in my ear that that was a very improvident contract for me to make with you, the vicissitudes of ten years are such, the uncertainties are so great that I ought not to have made any such contract with you. What do I propose to do? I propose to write something across the face of that contract. bear in mind, Mr. President, that it is I who propose to do it, who hold this contract in my hand. deut, that it is I who propose to do it, who hold this contract in my hand. I do not propose to invite you into a court of justice that has jurisdiction over you and me and abide the judgment of that court between you and me; but I, holding this contract, propose to write two things over that contract; the first is that you shall pay me interest on that thousand dollars and pay it now, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wallace] say that if you do not pay it now and wait until the end of ten years you must pay interest on that interest. That is what I, holding the contract, and thinking that because I have it in my hand I thereby have the power, will ing that because I have it in my hand I thereby have the power, will write across that contract the new stipulation that you shall pay interest on the thousand dollars year by year, and at the end of ten years it shall be compounded. That is the proposition advocated by the Senator from Ohio, sanctioned by the interrogatories of the Senator from Missouri, and involved in the calculation submitted to us here by the Senator from Pennsylvania. And that is not all. Not quite satisfied with the security which I agreed to take—

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to make a little correction there, and also to ask a question?

Mr. DAWES. By and by. If it be just as convenient for the Senator not to mix it up with this, I should prefer it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. By and by the Senator shall have the opportunity of asking me questions, and if I forget it I hope he will remind me.

That is the one proposition. The other is that, not being satisfied with my security, I will take 25 per cent. of all you earn in addition to that security year by year and I will put it in my pocket. I will with my security, I will take 25 per cent. of all you earn in addition to that security, year by year, and I will put it in my pocket; I will hold it there. I will not pay myself before it becomes due, because I cannot; the United States Supreme Court says I cannot pay myself before it comes due. But I will take it; I will put it in my pocket; I will keep it in my pocket, year by year, until the end of the ten years, and then I will pass it over into the other pocket, and give you the paper! That is the other proposition; it is all bound up in that. It is not wor'h while for me to discuss the question whether I have the power to do this, holding the paper. The Senator from New York and my colleague have disposed of that so far as my poor, feeble comprehension is concerned; and if I knew I did have the power, there is something back of the power which troubles me dreadfully, that is, whether it would be decent to do it or not. whether it would be decent to do it or not.

The Senator from Pennsylvania admits that the question whether I would have the power to change this contract that you have made with me is a doubtful question; but he says that in this doubt he has submitted the question to the best lawyers in the Judiciary Committee, and they have devised a way by which that can be done, and he has resolved his doubt in favor of doing it. In my opinion, when the question comes up, Mr. President, whether I have the right without your consent to change myself the contract which you and I made, whether I have the right in the forum of conscience and of decency, I submit to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the ten commandments would be of a great deal more service than the brief commandments would be of a great dear more service than the inter-of a lawyer. Let us put the case to ourselves in our dealings with our fellow-men. Suppose we had induced them to undertake and to accomplish a great work like this upon certain terms, clear and distinct, and though those terms after the fact appear to have been too generous, could we turn our backs upon that contract, and force other terms and other exactions out of the other side? The answer to that question is not to be found exclusively in the opinions of courts, but is to be found in a law higher than the judgments of courts, and which is to govern us whatever they may be. And, sir, the attempt on the part of the Judiciary Committee—I say it with all due respect—to tell tell these companies what was the nature of the agreement with us when they said they would pay 5 per cent. of the agreement with us when they said they would pay 5 per cent. of the net earnings, I think is not justifiable. These parties say to us, "We will go into the highest tribunal of the land, you and we, on equal terms, as everybody else does in a controversy, and we will abide the judgment of the highest court in the land;" and in that condition of affairs the party who says, "I will not go there, but I will say what is the meaning of my own contract," stands condemned before the world; and whether he has the power or not, I do not care.

What do the Judiciary Committee mean when after they could before the world; and whether he has the power or not, I do not care. What do the Judiciary Committee mean when, after they enact what these railroad laws shall mean, when they enact what shall be done in addition to what they then said was enough to do, then they say we will go into court? And how shall we go into court? When we get into court "it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter." I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what that means; what is the difference between that and any other right of the matter? I appeal to the Senator from Missouri as the last resort in philology. We are to go to "the very right of the matter." When we get into court, after the United States, the party of the first part, have stamped across their own agreement, their own interpretation of the agreement, the judgment of the court is invoked, not in the ordinary way, not to the ordinary extent, and not with the ordithe ordinary way, not to the ordinary extent, and not with the ordinary function of a court; but they are to go some way they would not go if it were not for this law, and that is to go to "the very right of the matter," and they are to go in a queer way, "without regard to matters of form." This whole thing is without form and void, and to matters of form." This whole thing is without form and void, and darkness is on the face of it, as is suggested by my colleague. "Without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties," they are to go to "the very right of the matter," no matter who is a party. He may be a party sufficient to send this court to "the very right of the matter" and bind somebody else. Why, sir, under this I can let myself for that business to parties in the Supreme Court to be for the purposes of each case a party when they are going to "the very right of the matter." But that is not all. "Without any regard to matters of form," without any regard to who are parties, and "without any regard to multifariousness." That is to say, you can try one form of action, and another form of action, and two or three forms of action all put into one crucible and stirred up without regard to who will be affected or what may be the nature of the rights, whether they are in equity or in law, provided only this court get at that which they in equity or in law, provided only this court get at that which they never got at before without the aid of a statute, I suppose, the necessity of a statute being evidenced by the fact that this bill imposes upon them what they could not otherwise do. They can go "to the very right of the matter," no matter who is in court or how he is in court or what is in court, and no matter whether "multifariousness or other matter" be alleged. And that so relieves the Senator from Pennsylvania on this question of doubt, drinking at this fountain of legal lore and forgetting the other fountain to which he ought to have gone first, that he is willing to vote for it. It seems to me that, regardless of that which alone the Judiciary Committee have turned their attention to, namely, the power, he should have drank from that fountain that would have told him what was the right; and, sir, can there be any question upon that point of what it is right for us to do? Can we hope to get around the question by the contrivance that we do not appropriate the money of these companies to the payment of their debts before the debts are due by the simple contrivance of saying we keep their moneys for them until they are due.

The complaint against the companies and against the bill which is offered as a substitute, raised by the Judiciary Committee, is that, if the bill offered as a substitute should pass, the corporations would be relieved from all obligations thereafter to keep their roads in repair.

(Thereafter) was a first the Livited States have accessed to have "Thereafter" means after the United States have ceased to have an interest. "Thereafter" means when the interest of the United States in these roads is precisely like the relation of the United States to any other railroad in the land. "Thereafter" means precisely when the relations of the United States to these roads are the relations of the United States to the Boston and Albany Railroad, or to the New York Central Railroad; and is it a subject of complaint here in Congress that there is no provision of the laws of the United States by which Congress can compel the New York Central Railroad Company which Congress can compet the New York Central Railroad Company to keep its road in repair? By what process is it that the United States can assert any right over these roads to keep them in repair, when all their obligations toward the United States have ceased and they have completely fulfilled them all? Where does the Senator from Ohio then get ground for any such proposition as that?

Now, sir, the objections which I have to the bill of the Judiciary Committee are summed up in brief in the very illustration which I Committee are summed up in brief in the very illustration which I have used solely for the purpose of illustration. Whether the substitute is the wisest and the best for the accomplishment of a common purpose—I mean by a common purpose a purpose in which the contracting parties to an existing obligation are to bring about the fulfillment of that obligation in the best and safest and the most just way—I am not prepared to say. The desire of one of the contracting parties is to protect itself against loss and the public from inconvenience. The desire of the others is to fulfill at the earliest possible moment the obligations which it has assumed to the conpossible moment the obligations which it has assumed to the contracting party on the other side. Any policy that arrays the one against the other will either come to naught or will involve the country in an attempt which will be disastrous.

Country in an attempt which will be disastrous.

Therefore, it seems to me that, rather than spend our efforts on discovering some loop-hole through which we can escape from the performance of our obligations on our part precisely as we entered into them, and not as we are disposed now either to interpret them, to make them anew, we should address ourselves to what ought to be the duty of Congress, to co-operate with these parties, so far as the public interests will justify and no further, in providing, if it can be done, a better security for the debt and for the performance of the unexecuted parts of this contract. When that is done, and in counting the dollars and cents at the end it will be found that we have made or lost, the public will have little concern or care, provided they shall be satisfied that we kept our faith, and in keeping it one of the greatest public enterprises in the land was accomplished, and the loss will be trifling compared with what will be gained thereby. But in the main features and purposes of the substitute there is no chance for loss. It is possible for us to obtain perfect security after all the indebtedness to us if we are willing to postpone for a dozen or fifteen years the time to us if we are willing to postpone for a dozen or fifteen years the time when the repayment shall be completed, without loss to us of a penny, without placing upon these companies a single pound of burden not already undertaken, without jeopardizing the public interests in any particular; but securing in 1912 what in 1898 may be due, everything that the nation can by possibility ask for at their bands.

Therefore, sir, I ask, is it not wise for us to take up some such bill as this substitute and perfect it rather than to turn our attention in legislation to running just as near what the Senator from New York calls the border line of our power without regard to the other quesion whether in so doing we keep our faith?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I have only taken part in this debate so far as it related to the question of constitutional power proposed to be exercised by the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee and to some objections to the bill reported by the Railroad In fact, but for the absence of the Senator from Ohio Committee. In fact, but for the absence of the Senator from Onio who has the bill from the Judiciary Committee specially in charge and who is at present engaged in another field of action, I should not, probably, have said a word upon this bill, more especially as his arguments do not seem to me to have been answered. I gave my own views the other day upon the question of constitutional power and pointed out some objections to the bill presented by the Railroad Committee. I only propose to show now that the brief argument I made the other day has not been successfully answered as to the question of power to amend, and that no answer has yet been made question of power to amend, and that no answer has yet been made or attempted to the objections I then urged to the bill of the Railroad Committee.

As to the question of the power to amend the railroad acts of 1862 and 1864 so far as the bill from the Judiciary Committee would operand 1864 so far as the bill from the Judiciary Committee would operate to amend them, I endeavored to show that the acts of 1862 and 1864 were, in effect, to be construed since the passage of the act of 1864 as one act, except so far as the power of amendment and repeal was concerned; but that as to this power, the act of 1862 giving but a qualified power and that of 1864 giving an unrestricted power, the latter in effect superseded the qualified provision in the act of 1862 and applied to both acts, rendering both amendable or repealable, according to the discretion; and save of institute of Congress; and that cording to the discretion and sense of justice of Congress; and that this power extended to the alteration, so far as relates to the future, of the terms of the contract created by these acts and their acceptance by the companies. I shall not here repeat but merely refer to that argument.

The only serious attempt to meet that argument has been made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] and I submit that he has not succeeded in the attempt. He cites (and it is the only case he cited) the case of Holyoke Company vs. Lyman, 15 Wallace, where the question was, as stated in his own language:

Whether a grant having been made to the Holyoke Company to build a dam across the Connecticut River, and there being no provision in the charter that the company should maintain a fish way, the Legislature was competent to compel the company, under the general reservation of power, to construct a fish-way through the dam at Holyoke; and the court held that the power of the Legislature was sufficient for that purpose; but the court did also say that if in the charter there had been a provision that the company should not be required to construct a fish-way through the dam the Legislature would not have been competent to compel them to do it.

I agree fully in that decision. The decision is right and covers the full extent of power which I claim here; but the judge giving the opinion did utter a dictum which related to a question not then before the court; and that was, what would have been the power if another provision had been inserted in the charter or if the charter had been different from what it was? The court had no authority to decide a question of that kind; it is mere dictum. But, whether a decide a question of that kind; it is mere dictum. But, whether a dictum or not, let us apply that case to the present. There was no provision that this company should maintain a fish-way; yet, as there was no express provision that they should not be required to maintain the fish-way, the Legislature had the power to amend so as to require the company to construct such fish-way. Here the act of Congress did provide that the company should pay within a certain time, but did not declare that they should not be required to create a sinking fund to secure that payment; and therefore, within the very a sinking fund to secure that payment; and therefore, within the very

a sinking fund to secure that payment; and therefore, within the very reasoning of that case—allowing the dictum on which the Senator relies to be a part of the decision, which I deny—Congress has the right to require the company to create that sinking fund, because the act did not declare that they should not be required to do so.

If it be said in reply to this that the requiring the company to make payment in a certain time did, without negative words, imply that they should not be called upon to pay anything before that time, even by way of a sinking fund for security, then I reply that when the Holyoke Company were authorized to build a dam without requiring a fish-way, it was just as clearly implied that they should not be required to construct one. But, sir, while I fully agree in the decision of the court in the Holyoke Company case upon all it decides I reject, as I have a right to reject as wholly unsound, the dictum which says that if there had been in the charter a provision that they should not be required to construct the fish-way, it would not have been competent for the Legislature to require it by an amendment. amendment.

I speak of this dictum with entire freedom, and with a high respect for the court. No court ever insists that the mere dictum of the judge who writes the opinion, upon a point not involved in the case, and, therefore, never argued or considered by the court, is to be treated as law or as a point decided. And no court or judge, much less any of the eminent judges of our Supreme Court, will ever take offense at any criticism upon its mere dicta upon a point not involved

But the Senator from Massachusetts puts one question which he thinks every advocate of the bill of the Judiciary Committee will be obliged to answer in a way to show that Congress has no such power as that attempted to be exercised by this bill. I refer to the Record. The Senator says:

Now if I put one question to those who advocate this bill, I think they will be obliged to so answer it as to show that it is not competent for Congress to pass this bill; and that question is this: When one of these roads had constructed forty miles and the commissioners appointed by the Government had examined it, had approved it, had reported that in every particular it answered to the requirements of the act of Congress, would it then have been competent for Congress to say "We will not issue these bonds; we have got the power to repeal this statute, to amend it, to alter it, and we will not issue these bonds, notwithstanding your part of the agreement has been performed to the very letter?"

To this question I answer just as the Senator from Massachusetts supposes every man must, that it would not be competent. And yet that answer in no way tends to show that Congress has not the power attempted to be exercised by this bill.

Why would it not be competent to do what the question supposes?
Because, and simply because, in legislation acts do not operate retrospectively but prospectively, not upon the past but upon the future; because the forty miles of road were built on the faith of the law as it then was, which though subject to amendment had not been amended, and though it was a part of the contract that Congress might amend it, it was equally a part of the contract that until they should see fit to amend it it should stand as it was, and the rights of the company and of the Government should be decided by the law as it was. And the right to the bonds and the lands had become vested before Congress saw fit to make any amendment of that contract.

I do not contend and have not contended that the power of amendment extends to divest rights or property already vested before the amendment, nor the rights of third parties accrued on the faith of the act prior to an amendment.

the act prior to an amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator from Michigan will yield I should like to make an inquiry touching the subject from which the Senator appears to be now passing.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. No, I have not passed it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I shall put the question.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will wait until I get through I will answer his question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] and the Senator from Massachusetts who last addressed the Senate, [Mr. DAWES,] have been eloquent in their appeals to the honor and good faith of Congress to abide by the contract made with these companies. I believe as firmly as they do in the propriety of abiding by that contract with the utas they do in the propriety of abiding by that contract with the urmost fidelity and good faith, and go as far as they do in adhering with unswerving fidelity to all the *terms of that contract, and am opposed to the obliteration of any of them. But one of the terms of that contract was, and is, in the act of 1864, that—Congress may, at any time, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

That is a very important term of that contract.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand by that that Congress means to say we will be bound by this contract as long us we have a mind to and that we will not any longer.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will wait until I get through he will find out precisely what I mean. This is the most important and the only provision of that contract by which the Government can secure the public interest

But the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Indiana, and the Senator from Louisiana, while they are very earnest in enforcing the stipulations of the contract which operate in favor of the companies—all of which, as I have endeavored to show, are conditional, being subject to amendment—they seem equally earnest and determined that the stipulations in that contract in favor of the Government, and the only one by which the Government can protect it-self, shall be wholly ignored, nullified, and in effect stricken from the contract. And the Senator from Illinois expressly insists that this power of amendment only extends to amendments which shall power of amendment only extends to amendments which shall operate in favor of the companies—giving them greater rights—but not to impose any greater obligations. Now all such amendments as he admits may be made under the power could have been made just as well without as with this reservation of power, and that reservation becomes utterly nonsensical. And this argument of the Senator from Illinois seems to me to treat this power of amendment and these railroad acts as a kind of trap by which it is easy for the Government to get into difficulty, but impossible to get out; by which more and more powers and privileges may continually be granted to the companies, but not one can be taken back—operating upon the principle of the mouse-trap which lets the victim in with seductive facility, but will not let him out or allow the slightest prospect of escape.

of the mouse-trap which lets the victim in with seductive facility, but will not let him out or allow the slightest prospect of escape. So much for this question of power. And now one other point of objection made by the Senator from Louisiana to the bill from the Judiciary Committee which defines "net earnings" to be what is left of the gross earnings after deducting the actual and necessary expenses of operating the roads and keeping them in repair. It is urged that this is not a ground definition of the gross part of the left. that this is not a proper definition of net earnings, but that the interest on the debt of the companies and the amount of all debts overdue should also be deducted from the gross earnings. I must confess that until this claim was gravely put forward here I had supposed that the debts and interest on the debts of a railroad company were entirely little to the amount of the company of the compa distinct from the question of the earnings or net earnings of the road, and that the net earnings of the road over and above running expenses and repairs would, it is true, in the absence of any other appropriation of them, constitute a sum which might be used in re-appropriation of them, constitute a sum which might be used in reducing its debts and the interest on its debts.

But the question of net earnings, as it seems to me, simply involves the question of earnings, and how much is left after deducting running expenses and repairs and possibly the supply of new rolling-stock. The rest of the debt of the company should, I think, be treated as chargeable to construction account. But whether this be the true construction or not we have in the power of small possible to construction account. construction or not, we have in the power of amendment the power to

I called the attention of the chairman of the Railroad Committee the other day specially to one of the provisions of the bill which I fear may operate as a snare; and I always fear there may be some fear may operate as a snare; and I always fear there may be some snare and must be something wrong in a provision which conveys to my mind no definite idea; and I put certain questions to him (now several days old) to which neither he nor any other advocate of this bill of his committee has yet condescended to give an intelligible answer, at least no answer intelligible to me, which of course may be owing to my own obtuseness or deficient apprehension. The first section provides for a single payment of $1,000,000 once for all by each of these companies and no annual payment.

I propose now to read the first and second sections of the bill, to repeat my observations upon them, and to repeat the questions I then

I propose now to read the first and second sections of the bill, to repeat my observations upon them, and to repeat the questions I then addressed to the chairman of the Railroad Committee, and which neither he nor any advocate of the bill has yet answered. The first section of the bill provides, in effect, for the payment, not annually but as a gross sum, once for all by the Central Pacific and by the Union Pacific each $1,000,000 for transportation, which might be due to the company up to the last day of December, 1876.

I will now read the second and part of the third section of the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. What bill does the Senator refer to ?
Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I refer to the bill reported from the Railroad Committee. Section 2 of that bill reads as follows:

That the said Central Pacific Railroad Company and the said Union Pacific Railroad Company shall each pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $750,000 per annum, in equal semi-annual installments, on the 1st day of April and October in each year, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1877, either in lawful money or in any bonds or securities of the United States Government, at par, until such sums shall, with interest thereon as hereinafter provided, be sufficient, when added to the other sums to the credit of said sinking funds, to pay off and extinguish the Government bonds advanced as aforesaid, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from their respective dates up to the date when they are so paid and extinguished as aforesaid. Interest on all sums placed to the credit of said sinking funds shall be credited and added thereto semi-annually at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

Now, note the proviso:

Provided, however, That if the foregoing provisions shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest thereon as aforesaid by the 1st day of October, in the year 1912, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such a sum as will be sufficient for that purpose.

Then follows the first clause of section 3, which is in these words: That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act, and the amendments thereto in relation to the re-imbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations.

It was, I think, sufficiently demonstrated by the Senator from Ohio the other day—and his position has not been successfully contradicted—that the annual payments of $750,000 by each of these companies would not pay the interest due to the Government. Yet section 3, as I suggested the other day, makes the payments required by the first and second sections operate as a payment in full of all obligations of the company on account of the bonds issued to it. The only provision, therefore, as I said the other day, which saves the bill from the charge of making a payment less than the interest oper-ate as payment of both principal and interest is that provision in the second section that-

If the foregoing provisions shall prove insufficient to extinguish the Government bonds and interest by October 1, 1912, the semi-annual payments shall be increased to such sum as will be sufficient for that purpose.

It being evident on the face of the bill that the sum appropriated will not extinguish the debt by 1912, I wish to know what is meant by this proviso and how it is to be enforced. I now repeat the question I once before asked of the chairman of the Railroad Committee, tion I once before asked of the chairman of the Railroad Committee, and which, though asked by another Senator the other day, of the Senator from Georgia, has not yet been answered: When, how, and by whom is it to be ascertained that the sums required by "the foregoing provision" have proved or are to prove insufficient to pay the Government bonds and interest by the day named, October 1, 1912?

Mr. WEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I am very nearly through.

Mr. WEST. I thought the Senator had been putting questions to me all the time.

me all the time.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I supposed the Senator would answer after-Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I supposed the Senator would answer afterward. I shall be through in a moment, and then will be glad to hear an answer. It is a question which has troubled me, and on which I shall be glad to receive some light. And how, without something more definite than this, can any one tell when the obligation to make increased semi-annual payments is to commence, and how will it ever be practicable to enforce it? One difficulty arises from the fact that it is evident on the face of the bill that the sum provided is insufficient now. Suppose a dispute arises between the officers of the Government and these companies as to the time when such increased semi-annual payment shall commence and what shall be the amount of it.

I will ask if the data furnished by the bill do not enable us to make just as good a calculation upon that as they will twenty years hence, and, if so, why not render the whole provision definite by fixing the additional sum which they shall pay and fixing it here in this bill? I ask the Senator to enlighten us upon these questions and explain fully the modus operandi of enforcing so indefinite a provision, and even of practically administering or giving any effect to such a law as this would be. I confess my inability to see just how it is to be done. I have not the slightest reason to doubt that the provision was inserted in entire good faith. But I think it altogether too blind to be blindly supported. Now I shall be very glad to hear an answer to the questions which I put to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. The Senator makes a proposition of his own and then asks me to answer his proposition. He states, first, that it is apparent on the face of this bill that this payment will not be sufficient to liquidate the entire debt at its maturity. I differ with him entirely on that proposition. I cannot answer his question; but, in response to what he says as to who shall determine it and how it shall be determined, I will say that it will certainly be determined by one sponse to what he says as to who shall determine it and how it shall be determined, I will say that it will certainly be determined by one of the contracting parties, and by agreement unquestionably of the other contracting party, because they entered into that agreement upon those terms. In other words, if this calculation which the Railway Committee have made is not adequate to pay the amount upon a further verification of the arithmetic of the case, and upon such statement as may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, the additional installments will be due at the very first payment and continued to the final one. I do not think there is any very great intricacy in regard to that point. That is not the question for Senators to consider now. That can be considered subsequently when we are considering that bill. It is amendable in any way that the Senate sees proper, and if there is anything deficient in it, I am sure the committee and I am sure the Senate will be glad to have the Senator's suggestion; but he is departing from the point. He has gone into the details of the question. The principle that the Railway Committee is contending for is that we shall have an adjustment with these companies. When we get that principle before the Senate by a vote upon the substitution, then we can consider the merits of the particular case, but not until then, I should scarcely think.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, when this subject was before the Senate a few days ago, I took occasion to explain my views very briefly, and be determined, I will say that it will certainly be determined by one a few days ago, I took occasion to explain my views very briefly, and a few days ago, I took occasion to explain my views very briefly, and I expressed my willingness to vote for the bill reported from that committee. I am yet disposed to do so, and no doubt will do so; but, at the same time, I am ready and willing to say that the bill does not meet my entire approbation. I have many objections to that bill. It is very cumbrons and, in many particulars, very obscure. It is very possible, also, that it may require from these companies more than they are able to pay and at the same time retain something like a fair amount of receipts for their own legitimate benefit. I see in the bill reported from the Committee on Railroads some very good features. It has the merit of very great Railroads some very good features. It has the merit of very great simplicity, of very great directness; and, although there are some provisions of that bill to which I object, nevertheless there are some very good things in it. I would myself prefer that the whole subject be postponed beyond this session of Congress, and that a committee from this body be appointed to confer during the recess of Congress with the railroad companies, to ascertain the best way possible how to adjust this matter; what they are able to pay and what it would be right for us to receive.

It is not worth while for us to legislate regardless of the rights of these railroad companies. They are great public institutions. Their proper maintenance as great highways of communication is very important to this entire country. It will not do to cripple them; nor would it be wise for us to destroy the value of the stock of the railroads, nor to do anything which would cripple them. I am afraid that the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary is a harsh bill. I am also fearful that it may lead to litigation; that the companies would resist it; yet, upon a fair comparison between the two bills, I shall vote for the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, hoping at the same time that neither bill will be adopted.

One of these roads created by the law starts from the western bor der of my own State, and extends to the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado. That enterprise was urged by some of the very best men in the city of Saint Louis, some of our most enterprising men. Gentlemen were ready to go into the enterprise from a broad spirit of enlightened enterprise, men of wealth, who did not go into it to make money, but who felt it a question of very great interest to connect the State of Missouri with that great western world which was then and is now growing so rapidly into importance. Yet after years of great labor and very large expenditures of money, owing to the course pursued by the Government toward that road, owing to the fact that the Government has, in violation of the law, retained for a long time all the amount which the Government should have paid for the transportation of Government freight, the Kansas Pacific road for the transportation of Government freight, the Kansas Pacine road has been so crippled that it has gone into the hands of a receiver, and if proper legislation is not soon applied to that road, it may prove that ultimately it will be in great danger of being bankrupt. I desire to preserve that road as I desire to preserve all the other roads.

I therefore think that the best and wisest way to dispose of this subject would be not to legislate at this session of Congress, but to appoint a committee from this body, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, in order to confer with these railroad companies, with a view of coming to some understanding as to what they are with a view of coming to some understanding as to what they are justly to pay and what amount the Government should justly claim from them. I am perfectly satisfied that an arrangement of that kind could be made. It is certainly to the interest of these roads that this question should be settled. Their stock can have no permanent value as long as this thing is hanging over them all the time. Their bonds are affected, all their assets are affected in value by the matter being the subject of legislation by Congress, and I am perfectly satisfied that they are willing to enter into a fair arrangement with the Government.

I shall vote against the substitute and I shall vote for the bill re I shall vote against the substitute and I shall vote for the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, notwithstanding that bill does not meet my entire approbation by a long way; but I prefer it to the bill reported from the Railroad Committee. I shall vote against the substitute, and I hope that neither bill will be adopted finally at this session, with the hope that this whole subject will be relegated to a committee with ample powers to investigate and to come to some arrangement with these railroad companies and to report to this body at the next session of Congress.

I am reminded by my friend from Colorado [Mr. Teller] of the fact that the Kansas Pacific Railroad has gone into the hands of a receiver, because the Government has withheld from it, and does now withhold, upward of a million dollars justly due that company according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; and these men are crippled by it, and it is doing that section of the and these men are crippled by it, and it is doing that section of the country a very great injury—Colorado, Missouri, Kansas, and all that vast world that lies back of it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Judiciary Committee bill crushes it still more.
Mr. WEST. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the very circumstance that he has stated, the bankruptcy of that company, would involve the Government in an irretrievable loss of $6,300,000, the amount advanced to that road upon the second mortgage.

Mr. BOGY. That would be the effect if that road should be so crippled as to be prevented from maintaining it in good order. We are impairing the security of the Government, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, to an amount of upward of $6,000,000. Under the present law they are required to pay $350,000, when their receipts are not sufficient now to pay the interest on their bonds and keep the road in order, and when they have been driven into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And yet the Senator has just stated that he proposes to vote for the bill which does this thing, which includes the very objection he has stated.

Mr. BOGY. It is Hobson's choice; it is that or worse. I am not wholly in favor of the bill of the Judicary Committee, because I think it is defective in many particulars. I will not detain the Senate by going into a history of the defects of the Railroad Committee's bill. I believe also there are some good features in the Committee's bill. I believe also there are some good features in that bill, but between the two I prefer the other. I might vote for the bill of the Railroad Committee, but I have committed myself to the other bill, and I am a democrat and therefore a consistent man. I have already said I would vote for the other bill, and I dislike to change the position which

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the Railroad Committee, considering the bankrupt condition of the Kansas Pacific Road, did omit to exact from that road any annual payment such as is required of the other road any annual payment such as is required of the other roads which they thought were able to pay. The Judiciary Committee bill insists upon the annual payment of $350,000 from this road, which is already in the hands of a receiver. Yet the Senator from Missouri proposes to vote for the Judiciary Committee bill in preference to voting for the bill reported from the Railroad Committee.

Mr. BOGY. While I have many objections to the bill of the Committee on the Judiciary, I have still many more objections to the other

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Christiancy] has this morning made some remarks in reply to observations made by me two or three days ago touching the right of Congress to pass the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. If the Senator had not ventured to announce an opinion different from that expressed by the Supreme Court, I should certainly not have ventured to entertain an opinion different from the one expressed by him. I think, if he will examine the case of the Holyoke Company vs. Lyman, he will find that the observations of the court, to which I called the attention of the Senate, were not mere dicta. The exact question was raised by the pleadings or by the counsel in the argument of the case, that by implication, and to some extent by the language employed in the charter, the company was relieved from all obligation to construct a fish-way through the dam; and the argument rested upon the fact that by the charter the company had been required to quiet the claims of riparian owners, both above and below the dam for the privilege from the most ancient times that had been enjoyed in the exclusive use of the fisheries upon the shores of the Connecticut River. A very strong argument, as the Senator from Michigan will see, could be based upon the fact that the corporation had been required to quiet, by the payment of money assessed by juries, all the claims of the riparian owners both above and below the dam. The court said that inasmuch as it was not ex-pressly stipulated that the Legislature would not afterward compel the company, at its own cost, to build a fish-way the act was within the discretion of the Legislature. Therefore, I have to say to the Senator from Michigan, if he will examine the case, that I said nothing except what the record of the case shows, and he will find that that exact question was before the court.

The point which I had in view in presenting the case to the Senate has not been exactly appreciated by the Senator from Michigan. It was for the purpose of showing that where in a State the broadest powers of reservation of legislative right to amend, alter, or change charter existed, the Supreme Court found that there were certain things which the Legislature nevertheless was not competent to do. That was the point to which I called the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. What things were they not competent to do?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The record in the case of the Holyoke Company vs. Lyman shows that the court held that if there had been in the charter a stipulation that the company should not be required to build a fish-way, the act of the Legislature requiring them to build a fish-way would have been void, and that in the presence of an act of the Legislature, a general law, which had existed since 1831 and antedated the act of incorporation. It provided that-

Every act of incorporation passed after the 11th day of March, in the year 1831, shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal at the pleasure of the Legisla-

There were words as broad, as comprehensive, as inclusive of power, as could have been employed; yet the court did say in this case, where a corporation was created in the presence of that statute, that there were some things which the Legislature could not do. I have said that the very question to which I called the attention of the Senate was raised and discussed. The court say:

Concede, however, that the power to make such a contract exists, and that it is as boundless as the theory of the respondents assumes it to be, still the court here is of the opinion that the decree of the State court is correct, and that it should be affirmed, as the charters under which the dam in this case was erected and is maintained do not contain any such exemption from the implied obligation to construct fish-ways for the free passage of the fish, nor any provision which prohibits the Legislature from imposing that obligation under the power reserved to amend, alter, or repeal the charter.

Such a charter may doubtless be granted to build a dam across a river whose whole course is within the State granting the franchise, with a provision exempting the corporation from all obligation to construct such fish-way for the free passage of the fish.

That the charter, in view of the fact that it contains no such exemption, is subject to the power reserved to the Legislature by the general law in operation when the charters were granted.—15 Wallace Supreme Court Reports, 3.2, 523.

The chief object, the sufficient object which I had in calling the attention of the Senate to this opinion of the Supreme Court was to show that where the most ample power of amendment, alteration, and repeal is reserved to the Legislature, the courts do hold that there are many things which the Legislature is not competent to do.

I will next ask the attention of the Senate to a consideration of the question whether this bill does contain, with reference to the Pacific railroad corporations, that exercise of power which it is not competent for Congress to exert. That is the real question before us. The Senator from Michigan has called the attention of the Senate to the question which I put the other day; and he answers it in the affirmative. I now submit to the Senate that that answer is a concession of the case as far as the Senator from Michigan is concerned. I said, suppose the corporation had constructed forcy miles of railroad in every respect answering to the requirements of the law, and that that forty miles had been subjected to the inspection of the authorized that forty miles had been subjected to the inspection of the authorized officers of the Government and accepted, would it then be competent for Congress by law, under this reservation of power to amend the charter, to interpose and say, "Notwithstanding you have done what you were required to do, as far as these forty miles are concerned, we shall neither issue to you the bonds of the United States nor issue patents for the lands;" and the Senator from Michigan says that it would not be competent for Congress to do that. Therefore he has admitted that there are certain things connected with this grant, or this contract between the Government and these corporations, which do not full within the scene of the nower reserved to Congress.

admitted that there are certain things connected with this grant, or this contract between the Government and 'these corporations, which do not fall within the scope of the power reserved to Congress.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I do not deny that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is a great difference between having denied a thing and admitting it. There are many things we have not denied and yet do not admit; but I am glad to have the admission in reference to this particular contract or charter, that the power of the Government of the United States is limited, notwithstanding the provision in the act of 1864. It being admitted that that power is limited, the question arises, where is the limit, where is the line between those things which legislative power may do and those things which legislative power cannot do? We have found by the admission of the Senator from Michigan one thing which it is not competent for the legislative power to do, and why? The Senator from Michigan says, because it is retrospective legislation.

What is retrospective legislation? It relates to something that has already taken place. Is there any provision of the Constitution that prohibits Congress from legislating in regard to things that have taken place? I know of none. I think the Senator from Michigan would be puzzled to find any limitation upon the legislative power of Congress which has its root in the circumstance that legislation is retrospective. We hold up retrospective legislation as a feature or practice not to be indulged in, and it is a very wise thing to avoid retrospective legislation; but why is it? Not because it is retrospective, but because legislative bodies are tempted to indulge in retrospective legislation for the purpose of touching what cannot be touched by the courts or by what is known as "due process of law." That is the reason of the prejudice, if you may call it a prejudice, or the general sentiment, against retrospective legislation, because for the most part it is never resorted to except to defeat an existing relation legislation. But I submit to the legal judgment of the Senator from Michigan that the real fact why he cannot sustain the proposition which I submitted to him is that it touches a contract. The reason which I submitted to him is that it touches a contract. The reason why we could not say to these companies when they had built forty miles, "You shall not have the bonds," when we had agreed they should have the bonds, is not because it is retrospective legislation, but because it is an act which the Constitution prohibits to a State, it is an act which, by judicial decision and by the general judgment of the people, cannot be indulged in by the country. In one sentence, it touches a contract.

I ask the Senator another question, whether when one of these com-panies had built forty miles or four hundred miles of road, completed it according to the terms of the charter and received bonds and patents for lands along the line of the road according to the quantity constructed, it would have been competent for Congress to step in and say, "We will have nothing more to do with this business; we will not issue bonds or patents for another mile of this road; we exercise our power of alteration, amendment, or repeal, and we end this contract, or this agreement, or this understanding, right here or

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Does the Senator wish a reply now?
Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have not the slightest difficulty in answering the question to my own satisfaction. I may not succeed in satisfying the Senator from Massachusetts. I will say that this is not the first time that I have said there were many things that could not be done by way of amendatory legislation. In everything which I have said heretofore I have made the exception of property already vested and rights which had already accrued before the amendatory That is precisely the exception which I make now, and it covers the entire case. I will admit that property vested before an amendment cannot be divested by it. The ultimate reason is that which the Senator from Massachusetts has very correctly stated, it would be divesting rights without due process of law. I did not go through the whole process of reasoning when I made my explanation, because I did not suppose it necessary to do so. We do not differ on that grand. When it wish the execution was a suppose it necessary to do so. that ground. When a right has vested under one of these railroad acts, before any amendment has been made to it, it is not a conditional right; but everything which has not yet been done does remain conditional and subject to the exercise of the power of amendment conditional and subject to the exercise of the power of amendment or repeal. They stand there as entirely different powers. There is no semblance between them. This is all the answer that I wish now to make upon that point; but if the Senator will allow me, inasmuch as he has again referred to it, I will state in regard to the case of the Holyoke Company vs. Lyman—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I prefer now to proceed that I have the answer, as this advances me one step further.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I was going to answer—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would prefer that the Senator should allow me to give direction to the course of debate while I have the floor. The concession made by the Senator enables me to advance one step farther, and with one step more we can cover the whole ground, and then I shall be able to understand the distinction that it will be necessary for him to make between the two propositions which I now submit. He admits that if the road had been constructed agreeably to the charter for a distance less than the whole, and the bonds and patents had been issued as far as required by law, under the power given to Congress in the charters to alter, amend, or repeal the charters, it would not have been competent to stop the work and say that no other bonds or patents should be issued. Now, why?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I did not make the statement in that way.
Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I misunderstood the Senator. The ques-

Mr. BOUTWELLE. Then I misunderstood the Senator. The question I asked was whether it would be competent to stop the work. Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I referred to the fact given in the Senator's speech the other day. So far as relates to the power of stopping any future operations, I have no doubt of it; but the legislative power could not undo the past. That is the principle; and now, if the Senator will permit me, what I wish to say in reference to the Holyoke case is simply this.

case is simply this—
Mr. BOUTWELL. I beg the Senator's pardon; I prefer to continue what I have to say. I misunderstood the Senator, then, or he misunderstood my question. He now claims that it would be competent for Congress to stop the work midway, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement, whether binding or not. There was an agreement between Congress, representing the country, and these corporations that, as they went on twenty miles by twenty miles, certain things should be done. It was stipulated that this road under that contract should be built from the waters of the Pacific coest to the waters of should be built from the waters of the Pacific coast to the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. That was either a contract or it was nothing. It was an agreement by the Government, or it was a breath in the air of which nobody could take notice.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will allow me, the ground which I take is this: that as to all future rights of the company which I take is this; that as to all future rights of the company whatever, they are conditional, covered by the power of amendment and repeal, but that the power of amendment and repeal cannot undo the past. That is all.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Well, Mr. President, if that be law, then the old idea that law is the perfection of human reason should be abandoned. If that be law, the idea which has been entertained that there is something ethical in law should be abandoned. Does the Senator from Michigan consider the extent of his proposition, that citizens of the Republic should be engaged by what appeared to be a pledge of the public faith—perhaps it was not, but what appeared to be a pledge of the public faith to invest their capital, expend their labor, consume their years of valuable time in creating this great highway between the seas, the Government of the United States would do what it had undertaken; that all that should pass for nothing, and that the Government of the United States whenever it chose should dissipate, under this power of repeal, all the pledges that it had made to its own citizens? Why, Mr. President, the words at my command fail to express my abhorrence of the morals of that law, whether legislative in its origin or judicial in its interpretation, which would permit a government to induce its citizens to embark their capital in an enterprise of this sort, and then by a power reserved, if it be reserved, annihilate their property, blast their prospects, and send them away desperate. Sir, there is too much morality in government, too much integrity in humanity, too much morals in the origination of law and in its administration, ever to permit in a civilized country such a doctrine to take possession of legislative bodies, of judicial tribunals, and above all, such is my faith in the people, that I am sure it can never take possession of the popular heart of have the least control over the popular judgment.

No, sir, we stand on something firmer than that. If the faith of this country was ever pledged in any particular to any body of men for any purpose, it was pledged to these men in the acts of 1862 and 1864, that if they would do certain things which were set forth in those acts, the Government of this country would respond by doing exactly and according to the terms of the bond what was written in the acts of 1862 and 1864, and I for one will never resort to any special size of the set of t cial interpretations, to any technicalities, to any doubtful proceeding, cial interpretations, to any technicalities, to any doubtful proceeding, in morals or in law to escape. If we have made a contract to our own hurt, let us keep it. The faith of this country is to ourselves inestimable; and if we have any regard for our own interest, as we stand before the world, the first, the chief Republic, the hope of mankind, the elementary principle of which is integrity in public affairs—if we have nothing but that, sixty, seventy, one hundred millions are too paltry to be counted even as the dust in the balance!

I say then or the agreement on the part of the Government, it is a contract binding, or it is nothing. If it is a contract compelling us to pay when forty miles are completed, it is because it is a contract, and because the conditions of that contract are written in the articles of agreement. There can be no other reason; and it is alike, and equally, and with the same substantial force written in the contract, that if they built this road from the waters of the Atlantic to the waters of the Pacific we would pay; and the violation of faith in one particular is just the same in moral principle, whatever it may be in law, as the violation of public faith in every particular. It stands as a whole, or it has no right to stand at all. It is either paper that we may blot out and hold in the fiery furnace, is either paper that we may blot out and hold in the fiery furnace, and extinguish the record, or it is written indelibly, and must stand until every feature and provision of it is made a living fact in the performance of the duties enjoined upon us.

What did we agree to do of the forty miles; I do not speak now of the whole? We agreed to give certain bonds; they were to run for a certain time, they were to bear a certain rate of interest; they were to be paid at a specific time, and in a specific way; and all and everything relating to those bonds was set forth in the agreement. If we were bound, when the forty miles were completed, to give the bonds, we were bound to give them of a particular sort; we were bound to observe exactly what was written on those bonds. The bonds for the forty miles do not differ from the rest; they are all in a mass. If we had stopped at the end of the forty miles, I ask The bonds for the forty miles do not differ from the rest; they are all in a mass. If we had stopped at the end of the forty miles, I ask the Senator from Michigan whether we could have changed the condition of the bonds after they were issued? That is what you propose to-day to do in reference not only to the forty miles but in reference to the whole mass that you issued. The Government were to be re-imbursed by these corporations at the end of thirty years; not before, but at the end of thirty years. You say, by this Judiciary Committee bill, that they shall re-imburse you before the forty years or else the bill is of no value. That is what it does say. It changes the terms; it alters the conditions on which the corporations were to re-imburse the Government. That is what it does, or it does nothing. Therefore if we consider only the forty miles, which the Senator from Michigan has asserted we were bound by the contract to accept and recognize and pay for, the proposition in this bill is to change the character of the bonds that were issued for those forty miles, and they are not different from the rest. are not different from the rest.

are not different from the rest.

Mr. President, let us look at this transaction just exactly as it is. We are in an agreement. I do not care whether it is a good bargain or a bad one. I did not help to make it, but I will help to keep it, because it is the bargain of my country. I will not violate it because it is a bad one. I have never done that knowingly in my private business, and I will never do it as a representative of the people of this country; and when I return to private life no man shall ever receive my support who does not keep the faith of his country, whether it be for weal or for woe. We have got nothing better. The Constitution is nothing when the public faith is gone; and all that rests upon it is "like the baseless fabric of a vision" when the public faith is gone; and it is just as much here in this debate and in this bill as it is in the hundreds of millions of dollars of public securities that are held by confiding citizens of our own country, and confiding that are held by confiding citizens of our own country, and confiding subjects of other countries, who have taken our bonds because they believed in our faith.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, the very eloquent speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] would have been very appropriate if any proposition was made before the Senate to do some of the enormous things which he denounces as very immoral, improper, and unjust; but there being no such proposition, the speech must apply to a case when it happens to arise. It has not yet arisen. The question that we have been discussing is one of power simply, a question of constitutional power under the acts relating to these Pacific Railroad companies. The ground which he takes in regard to the reservation of power to amend and repeal on the faith of which the last act was passed obliterates it entirely from these statutes, and makes this obligation, which Congress intended to be conditional and subject to the power of repeal, positive and unconditional, and subject to no power of amendment or repeal. That is his construction.

Now, I admit that under a power of amendment and repeal many unjust things might be done. I adverted to that the other day. But where is the limit of the power of amendment and repeal under such a clause? It is just where you find the limit of a very large number of powers given to Congress, and that is in the good sense and good discretion and sound judgment of Congress; and whenever they undertake to go beyond that, I will endeavor to stand with the Senator from Massachusetts; but as a question of power I submit he is entirely wrong.

When the act of 1864 was passed the company were asking extraor-When the act of 1864 was passed the company were asking extraordinary privileges and extraordinary powers, and they were granted; but they were granted with a provision which said to them, "We will place these powers in your hands and these funds in your hands; we will grant you all these lands; but, at the same time, you must take them subject to our power, at any moment when we deem it necessary for the protection of the public interest, to amend or repeal entirely the act under which you are acting." Every right granted by that act was granted subject to that condition, and is yet subject to it, with the exception which I have already mentioned, that of divesting property or rights already vested, and which depend not upon any condition, but where they were performed before the amendment was

But I do not mean to detain the Senate further on that point now; I may perhaps refer to it hereafter. As the Senator from Massachusetts has called my attention to the Holyoke case, reported in 15 Wallace, I again reiterate what cannot be denied, that the charter Wallace, I again reiterate what cannot be denied, that the charter then in question before the court contained no provision that the company should not be required to construct a fish-way, and therefore all that the court said upon such a charter was outside of the case and purely dictum, nothing else; and nothing else can be made of it. How can it be anything else than dictum when the court go on and decide what the right would be under a charter which is not before them and which is not in question before them, when there is no such provision in it. Whatever they say on a question of that kind is of no more authority than if any man in the street should say it—none whatever as authority. Such dicta, as every man knows who is acquainted with judicial proceedings, are never argued before the court and are never considered as the questions directly involved in the case are. Courts themselves would be never argued before the court and are never considered as the questions directly involved in the case are. Courts themselves would be offended if counsel were to cite to them a mere dictum as authority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Notwithstanding the Senate has been engaged more or less for a week or two in a debate on this railroad bill, in my judgment the Senate is not at all prepared for this important vote. If this was a vote on some formal amendment, on a proposition which did not involve the fate of the two main measures, I would withhold what little I have to say until that point had been reached. But this vote is the governing vote of this whole controversy. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is adopted, it defeats the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee and adopts as the text bill reported from the Judiciary Committee and adopts as the text before us, not amendable in committee at least, the bill of the Rail-road Committee as the governing law of the subject; and then, hav-ing defeated the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, we shall be left in the Senate only to adopt such amendments as the body may choose to the bill then before it or defeat it.

In my judgment, (and I have been studying this subject as carefully as I can since it has been brought before us,) the Senate is not now prepared for the final vote upon this question. Far from it. The amounts involved are so vast, the delicacy of the position is so great, that, in my judgment, this bill ought not to be voted upon until after the most thorough scrutiny and the most careful examination.

I listened to a good part of the remarks made by the Senator from New York [Mr. Conkling] the other day, and I do not propose to answer them, because he dealt with objections to the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. I also have some objections to that bill, but I intend to dismiss that bill entirely from consideration and call your attention to the bill now proposed to be substituted in its place; and I appeal to Senators, before they vote to put it before the Senate of the United States as the accepted basis of the settlement with the Pacific Railroads, to examine carefully the details of this bill. My friend from New York did not go into them, if I remember aright.

I wish to call attention to a few of the salient points of this bill, to show the Senate that it is not now prepared to adopt this proposition in lieu of the Judiciary Committee's proposition. It may be that the report of the Judiciary Committee will not meet the sanction of the Senate. I desire myself to offer amendments to it. It may be that it is too severe on the railroad companies, and that it might break them down, although I think some of the objections on that score are mistaken. So far as the Kansas Pacific Railroad is concerned, about which there has been some conversation, the bill of the Judiciary Committee is better than the bill reported from the Railroad Committee, strange as it may seem, because the bill reported by the Committee, strange as it may seem, because the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee would not apply to the Kansas Pacific Railroad until that road is able to pay the interest on its first-mortgage bonds; and I understand that its bankruptey or insolvency was caused by its failing to pay the interest on the first-mortgage bonds. While the earnings of either of these railroads are not sufficient to pay their operearnings of either of these railroads are not sunicient to pay their operating expenses and the interest on their first-mortgage bonds, the Judiciary Committee bill does not operate at all; but it would require the payment of one-half of the transportation to be paid directly to the companies, leaving the sinking-fund provision of the bill to operate only after there was a surplus over and above paying interest on the first-mortgage bonds.

But the bill reported from the railroad committee deals only with

But the bill reported from the railroad committee deals only with the two principal railroads, and they are after all the railroads to be affected. The Kansas Pacific and, I suppose, the other branch roads are comparatively unimportant. The Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad is interested to but a small amount. The whole amount of Government interest in that is $1,600,000, while in the two main roads it amounts to from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in each. To be precise, the whole amount of principal of the bonds advanced to the two great railroads is $55,092,192. Besides that there is due to the United States for interest from these railroads $21,535,102, making the amount involved in this bill reported to us $76,627,294, which is the great body of this debt.

Mr. PADDOCK. Now or at the maturity of the bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, to-day. When the debt matures it will be several times that.

several times that.

Mr. PADDOCK. Is there any debt at all until it matures?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will show you presently that there is a present obligation. Let us look a little further. The annual interest that is now being paid by the United States for the benefit of these two companies, or on its loan of credit to these two companies, is $3,305,531, making an important element in the expenditures of the United States. The whole interest on the public debt is now about $100,000,000; and the amount paid to these railroad companies or for their benefit is over 3½ per cent. of the entire interest on the public debt. That is paid now by taxation. This bill, as I will show you, abandons, practically surrenders, all the stipulations in favor of the United States to the railroad companies for the purpose of establishing a sinking fund to pay the debt of the railroad companies. After this bill passes, not one dollar can by any possibility go into the Treasury of the United States to aid us in paying the interest on these bonds, and there is the striking feature, the salient point of the bill. If this bill passes not one dollar of money can go from the treasury of these railroad companies to the United States to aid us in paying the interest on the bonds. The whole of it, all the money that is provided for by this bill, goes into the sinking fund to pay the debts of the railroad companies; and the money which is now confessedly reserved by law to aid the Government of the United States in carrying on the operations of the Government is diverted from the Treasury of the United States to a sinking fund and there applied, with interest at 6 per cent compounded in order to do whatf. To pay a debt of the railroad cent of the United States to a sinking fund and there applied, with interest at 6 per cent compounded in order to do whatf. To pay a debt of the railroad cent of the united States to a sinking fund and there applied, with interest at 6 per cent compounded in order to do whatf. states to a sinking fund and there applied, with interest at 6 per cent. compounded, in order to do what? To pay a debt of the railroad companies. That is the whole of this bill. If this bill passes, the United States gain nothing whatever except a provision for the ultimate payment in 1912 of a portion of this debt by the operation of its own sinking fund, while every stipulation made in favor of the United States by the railroad companies.

If this is so expect the Congress of the United States is not preverted into a stipulation in favor of the railroad companies.

If this is so, surely the Congress of the United States is not prepared for it. We cannot be prepared to surrender a property right of $77,000,000 to day, which has already created a burden on the people of the United States of $21,000,000 outlaid and paid, and an annual charge on the Treasury of three and a half millions of dollars, without any stipulation whatever, except a remote one to be re-imbursed a portion of this money in 1912.

Let us look back a little further. If we were dealing with an insolvent corporation, one rule would apply that does not apply now. We are dealing with a powerful corporation, whose revenues probably are greater than those of any railroad corporation in this or any other country in ten years after its road has been completed. If we were dealing alone with the Kansas Pacific or the other branch Pacific Railroads that are practically insolvent, unable to pay their cific Railroads that are practically insolvent, unable to pay their debts, then the rule of settlement with them would be to take what we could get; to take what the railroad companies were able to pay, and settle with them on liberal and honorable terms. I, for one, want to deal with these railroad companies in a very liberal, magnanimous I do not want to treat them in a carping, grinding, harsh way.

I am perfectly willing to make a settlement with them that may be considered liberal on the part of the people of the United States, but I am not prepared to deal with these corporations as if they were unable to pay because their own returns show that they are perfectly able to pay to a large extent, and, in my judgment, these railroad companies are to-day able to pay the entire interest accruing on the bonds issued to them, every dollar of it.

Therefore, Senators must dismiss from their minds the idea that we are dealing with broken-down corporations, that we are about to do a hardship to men who have invested capital in railroads, that we are taking away from them a fair interest on their earnings. Not at all. These railroad companies are able to pay 6 and even 10 per cent. on every dollar of their obligations, according to the sworn statement they have furnished, not only to the Government but to the public at large. The two principal railroad companies are the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific. Take first the Central Pacific, which probably is the more powerful corporation, because its earnings are the largest, and let us see what its actual condition is.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me, he has made a statement to the Senate that the two together make a line of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Mr. SHERMAN. We all know that, I think, and a great line, too, a line that can have no competitor for many years to come. I wish to show you that it is a powerful line, and able to pay its debts, and cannot appear before us in the light of an insolvent begging for easier terms. I have in my hand Poor's Manual of Railroads, which is regarded everywhere as authority, and is founded upon the sworn we are taking away from them a fair interest on their earnings. Not easier terms. I have in my hand Poor's Manual of Railroads, which is regarded everywhere as authority, and is founded upon the sworn statements of the officers of the various companies. I find here, under the head of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the ordinary tabular statements of its earnings and operating expenses. I find that during the year ending December 31, 1874, the actual earnings of the railroad were $13,868,952.93; the operating expenses of the road were $5,401,786. The payment in coin for taxes, interest on bonds, &c., amounted to $4,104,000. The net earnings, as they are usually classified by railroad men, were $8,467,186.98. Remember these are the net earnings, after deducting the operating expenses. But it is said that technically, or within the meaning of the railroad laws, these are not net earnings. Let us see. I may say something about that hereafter; but what are the net earnings according to their own admission? From their net earnings they claim to deduct the following payments in coin: Taxes, $327,000, which I think is a proper deduction: they ought to be deducted from gross earnings; interest on bonds, $3,184,350; exchange, discount on currency, $592,814; making a total of what they claim ought to be deducted from net earnings of $4,105,194.

Mr. WEST. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask, does he think that deduction is equitable?

that deduction is equitable?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is equitable, to ascertain the 5 per cent. of net earnings.

Mr. WEST. Does the Senator mean to say that the statements of the company as made there are not equitable in the light of deductions from their net earnings?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. I say that the meaning of "net earnings" is the gross earnings, less operating expenses; and when that case is tried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the autried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the supreme Court I have a confident belief. tried before the Supreme Court I have a confident belief, on the authorities I have examined, that they will so decide. But I am now taking the railroad argument. I think the 5 per cent. of the net earnings of this railroad would be about $430,000 a year. But take their own construction; they claim that they have the right to deduct from the net earnings the interest on their debt. Take that to be so. Take $4,104,000 from $8,467,000 and it leaves $4,363,000 over and above the expenses that they claim to deduct from the net earnings.

Mr. WEST. I may not be correct, but as I understand the Senator, he states the gross earnings of that road at $8,467,186. That is for twelve hundred and sixty odd miles of road, when only two-thirds of that length has been aided by the Government of the United States. Now I ask him in his calculation to deduct one-third from that and he has the basis of $5,644.791 to go upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no official statement before me; but I wenture to make the assertion, and I think I can find railroad men in venture to make the assertion, and I think I can find railroad men in my hearing who will bear witness to what I say, that the outside ventures of the Central Pacific Railroad do not pay expenses and do not yield profit, and that the profit is derived from the main line. That is what I have been informed.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will pardon me, I have an official statement that is different, and I will give it to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can do it after a while.

Mr. WEST. There is an official statement from the House of Representatives in their examination that these particular portions of esentatives in their examination that these particular portions of the road that run laterally from the main stem are very profitable.

the road that run laterally from the main stem are very profitable. I only quote his own authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not my authority. But if it is not so, it is the only railroad in the United States, I think, that can say that. As a rule the side roads, lateral roads, connecting lines, as they are called, are great contributing agencies to the business of the central road; but in themselves, as a simple investment, the receipts and expenditures generally show a deficit; but they make them pay by contributing largely to the general earnings of the main line. Even if there is a small profit, the Senator ought to be able to show exactly how much; the returns of the Central Pacific Railroad Company ought to show exactly how much is derived from the main line and how much from the lateral lines. But I will not go into that pany ought to show exactly how much is derived from the main line and how much from the lateral lines. But I will not go into that. I take their own figures. Here is a railroad that so far can not only pay the interest on its bonds, its taxes, and its operating expenses, but have a surplus revenue of $4,300,000 in gold. Is it hardship, is it dealing hardly with this railroad company to say, "Out of this four million of surplus earnings you shall pay a million and a half of dollars for the interest we are bound to pay for your benefit?" Is that hard? Is there any violation of the public faith in that? Is there anything wrong in that? The United States by its credit and its money built these railroads by the enterprise and skill and I may say great adventure, meritorious adventure of men that I would not say great adventure, meritorious adventure of men that I would not wrong to the slightest degree; but now they are in possession of a property which not only pays the interest on their bonds, not only pays their operating expenses with a reasonably fair allowance for wear and tear, but gives four millions of gold surplus; and the Government of the United States is now taxing the people of the United States $1,670,000 to pay interest on the very bonds and the very money that aided to build this road.

money that aided to build this road.

Mr. President, I say to you that if you surrender the rights of the people of the United States to be re-imbursed this money to railroad corporations that are thus able to pay, it will be a sorrier thing than to vote yourselves a million of dollars back pay; and these railroad companies must either comply with the law or they must show that they are unable to comply with the law before we can yield them anything but what the law demands. They are able to pay, and if I was the owner of the Central Pacific Railroad, this magnificent property the like of which there is none other, I would come forward to-morrow and say, "Thank God, this company, at least, is able to pay the interest on bonds loaned to it when it was important for the national interest as well as its own to complete this road." It is able to do it; it ought to do it; and any bill that surrenders that right so far as the law authorizes it to be enforced will be wrong and will meet with the popular condemnation.

will meet with the popular condemnation.

It may be that the rule adopted by the Judiciary Committee is too hard. I will not stop to reason on that point. It may be that the construction I have given in regard to net earnings is not correct, but I am willing to wait for the judgment of the Supreme Court upon that question before ever I will vote to surrender. This company is now able to pay and it ought to pay the interest on its bonds; and now when we are called upon to levy taxes, when everybody is feeling the burden of taxation and of diminished income, these railroad companies ought not to call upon us to continue the payment of their interest except either upon an inability on their part to pay or because they have a clear legal right to refuse payment, and upon either of these grounds they must act.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If the Senator from Ohio will yield I wish to move an executive session. ["No, no!"] We shall

Mr. WEST. We did that for you yesterday.
Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I want it to-day again.
Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer to go on further.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio declines to Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court recently rendered there is anything due by these companies in respect to interest or principal until the maturity of the bonds?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to that in a moment.
Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the Senator come to it im-

Mr. SHERMAN. I am a slow-moving coach; I must take my own

Mr. PADDOCK. No; a very rapid-moving coach.

Mr. SHERMAN. And sometimes a very stubborn one.
Mr. PADDOCK. It is best I think to look at this question exactly in its practical view, not in its imaginary or speculative view.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I want to say something on this subject. I cannot say it to-day and I am sure we shall not finish the bill to-day, and I have some executive business of importance to the country and I desire to make a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give way to my friend in few minutes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have spoken of the Central Pacific and shown that it is able to pay. I cannot reach in a hurried manner the obligations of the Government and the rights the Government has under the law, just at present. I cannot oblige my friend from Nebraska just at this moment. I want to take up the Union Pacific and show its condition.

Mr. PADDOCK. Taking up the Union Pacific, I should like to know if there is anything due here, if there is any premise on which the gentleman is making his remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. I first want to see whether they are able to pay; if they are able to pay, I will then present my bill of particulars.

I find in the same manual to which I have referred that for the same year the gross earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad were $10,559,880. We find that the expenditures for maintenance of way, $10,559,880. We find that the expenditures for maintenance of way, fuel, rolling-stock, transportation, and miscellaneous items, were $4,396,759, leaving a balance of surplus earnings of $6,163,121, or, less taxes, $255,555, leaving the net earnings $5,907,566. There are the net earnings. That is a very handsome income, six million dollars. What has it got to pay out of that? It has got to pay out of that the aggregate interest account for the year, $3,696,370, of which $1,632,780 is the amount of the interest on the first-mortgage bonds in gold. They have six millions of surplus revenue, and if you deduct the amount they pay on interest on first-mortgage bonds, they have the amount they pay on interest on first-mortgage bonds, they have $4,300,000 after paying interest on their first-mortgage bonds. That is a very handsome income.

So I say that these railroads, the Central and the Union Pacific, out of this handsome income, are able to pay the interest on the bonds that the Government of the United States has loaned them. And, sir, we for one will not vote to surrender any claim that we have under the law to these railroad companies, until they pay this interest. The question is not whether we can demand the interest. I say we cannot; the Supreme Court has decided that we cannot demand this interest until the bonds mature; but we have other rights given by these railroad laws as plainly written as anything else. First, we have a right to apply one-half of their transportation account on the payment of this interest, and pro tanto the interest is paid. The returns that I have before me show that the amount that has been realized in this way has been from $500,000 to $600,000

Mr. WEST. If you have the figures for that statement let us see them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do you deny it ?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.
Mr. SHERMAN. I have stated it too low; that is all the trouble.
Mr. WEST. So I thought.
Mr. SHERMAN. I will show you that I have stated it too small.
On page 8 of the report of the House committee, the Senator will find exactly what has been paid each year:

From this it appears that the aggregate payments made by the companies to March 1, 1876, by services rendered to the Government, amount to $6,724,317.92. These services covered the period including 1867, and since, to March 1, 1876.

Nine years; so that in nine years these companies have paid to the Government $6,724,000, over $700,000 a year.

Mr. WEST. I thought you spoke of one company. Mr. SHERMAN. No, I speak of the railroad companies.

Mr. WEST. The two of them; yes, sir.
Mr. WEST. Nobody denies that.
Mr. SHERMAN. Now, my friend finds that I have fallen within

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio what he thinks would have been the approximate cost of this service, which has cost $6,000,000 to the Government, if the railroads had not been constructed at all. Would it not have been at least four times as much as it is and as it has been by the railroad service?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know what it might have cost us if the Indians were all over that country; but I know that by the language of the r.ilroad laws, and they claim to be governed by the law, they have expressly agreed that one-half of this transportation account should be applied on the interest. That is not controverted. The actual fact has shown that this interest account, as against all these railroad companies, is over $700,000 a year, and as to the two these railroad companies, is over $700,000 a year, and as to the two principal roads, over half a million. Here, at least, the people of the United States have one stipulation in this law which gives them the benefit of a revenue derived from these railroad companies of between $500,000 and $600,000 a year. We cannot surrender that.

Mr. WEST. We do not by this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend will see that he surrenders it. That is not all. We have another stipulation here plainly written in the is not all. We have another stipulation here plainly written in the language of the law that 5 per cent of the net earnings of these roads shall be paid on the interest account; and if my construction of the law is correct, $750,000 this year, part of it in gold, should have been applied to the liquidation of the interest account. I have shown you that the net revenue of the Union Pacific is $6,000,000; that the net revenue of the Central Pacific is $3,400,000, and 5 per cent. on these two sums combined would have given us a revenue of a little over $700,000 that year. Thus, under the terms of the law as it now stands, if not repealed, or given away, or surrendered, we shall have paid to the people of the United States at least $1,200,000 in money every year to aid us in paying this interest. That is a solemn stipulation. It is true there is some controversy as to the nature of this contract. It has been claimed that the railroads were not completed contract. It has been claimed that the railroads were not completed at the time the Government insists they were, but I believe they have agreed that they were completed in 1874.

I have said all I desire to say about that. I have no doubt that the fair meaning of the language of this provision of the law is that the very moment these railroads were running as a connecting line through, as a matter of course from that time we ought to have had 5 per cent. of the net earnings, and I can show you a case from a respectable court, which I have read, where the very point was made and has been decided under similar circumstances that the completion of the line of road, where two or three roads meet together, is when a single train of cars may without break run through. Then the 5 per cent. of net earnings should have commenced to run. But that is not material. I am willing to leave that to the Supreme Court. It is admitted on all hands that the road is completed now, and that we are entitled to 5 per cent. of the net earnings. What are net earnings? Plain, simple men know what net earnings are. They are the gross earnings less the operating expenses.

Mr. WEST. On that point I should like to submit a proposition to my friend, as a plain business man, if he will listen to it a moment.

Mr. WEST. A merchant in New York does business to the extent

Mr. WEST. A merchant in New York does business to the extent of two million dollars a year. Annually, at the close of his business, he finds that he has accumulated a gross sale over the gross cost of $250,000. It has cost him $100,000 for the expenses of his clerks, his rent, and the incidental expenses of carrying on his business. It has cost him $100,000 in interest in accommodations from the banks, that he has paid out. What are that gentleman's net profits? Are they $150,000, or $50,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not take a supposititious case at all. I will take the actual case before us. It seems to me as plain as any one

Mr. WEST. The supposititions case does not seem to suit you.
Mr. SHERMAN. It is not applicable at all. Here is a railroad that, Mr. SHERMAN. It is not applicable at all. Here is a railroad that, when completed, is to pay 5 per cent. of its net earnings to the United States. It has been completed, section by section, forty miles right along, and at the end of every forty miles it demanded its bonds and received them. When the road was completed through and the lines connected so that trains ran through, the road was practically completed in the sense of the law. It is true that a railroad is never completed. Bridges will wear out and must be rebuilt. There are continual cases of improvement going on; but in the plain sense of plain men the road was completed the very day the cars ran through continuously. But i hat, as I said, is not material now. That question is practically ended, because several years ago, it is admitted on all hands, the railroad was completed. hands, the railroad was completed.

Then as to what are net earnings, that question is now pending before the Supreme Court. I have perfect confidence that the Supreme Court will decide as is right; and I believe, in the light of the decisions I have seen, not going too much into minutia, that they will decide that the net earnings are to be ascertained by taking from the gross earnings the operating expenses. Here is a book containing the statistics of fifty-seven thousand miles of railway, and upon that simple basis these statements are founded, first, the gross earnings, next the operating expenses, the result the net revenue. Then that revenue may be divided among bondholders, or stockholders, or preferred stockholders, or in any way, but the net earnings are the residuum after the operating expenses are paid. So these practical, sensible, good business men in this vast volume show the way they regard it.

But that must be decided by the Supreme Court. In either constatistics of fifty-seven thousand miles of railway, and upon that sim-

But that must be decided by the Supreme Court. that must be decided by the Supreme Court. In either event there is a large sum of money due, because, as I have shown you, taking from the gross revenues of the Central Pacific the interest on the bonds and every possible expenditure, together with their construction account, there is still a large balance left of many millions of dollars. If the construction I have put on it is correct, then the annual revenue of the Government of the United States from net earnings cannot be less than $750,000. That amount will be increasing year by year.

earnings cannot be less than $750,000. That amount will be increasing year by year.

Here are two stipulations of the railroad law that are surrendered, one providing for a revenue of $500,000 a year, and the other for a revenue of $750,000; and this revenue of a million and a quarter of dollars is applied, not for the benefit of the railroads, but is paid to the Government of the United States in liquidation of the interest account.

Now, let us go one step further. This bill actually surrenders all our rights to these important stipulations in the railroad contract. I wish here to call the attention of Senators to this bill as I read it.

The third section provides:

That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act and the amendment thereto, in relation to the re-imbursement of the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations.

If this railroad bill shall pass, the Government has no right whatever to one-half of the earnings for transportation, no right whatever to the 5 per cent. of net proceeds. All these are surrendered. Every stipulation and requirement in the law in favor of the United States stipulation and requirement in the law in favor of the United States is surrendered by the plain and simple language of this third section. Mr. EATON. I should like to interrupt my friend for one moment. As I understood him, he said that 5 per cent. would be $750,000. Mr. SHERMAN. On the two railroads.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir; that would require that the net earnings should be about $16,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not so much; $14,500,000. I have found it here, from their official records; I speak of the two railroads. I will again refer my friend to the figures of the earnings. Here are the gross earnings of the Central Pacific, and I put those upon record so that Senators can find them. This is Poor's Manual. It gives the gross earnings of the Central Pacific alone, $13,868,000; the operating expenses, $5,368,000; the net earnings, $8,467,186. Then the Union Pacific, $6,163,120. So that I am right. The net earnings of these railroads, according to these tables as tabulated for them in this manual, are, as I said, fourteen and a half millions of dollars. There can be no mistake about it.

These important stipulations are surrendered by the third section

These important stipulations are surrendered by the third section of this bill. I will read it.

That the payments so to be made by said companies shall be in lieu of all payments or other requirements from said companies under said act and the amendment thereto, in relation to the re-imbursement to the Government of the bonds so issued to said corporations.

Then it provides that the railroad companies shall not be released from their obligations to keep the road in repair; and there is this further stipulation, which is an additional obligation on the Govern-

That all Government freight and transportation west-bound, destined for points between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast and on the Pacific coast, and from said coast, or any point east thereof, cast-bound, shall be sent by the said railroads until the aforesaid claims of the Government on account of bonds advanced to the companies are fully paid and satisfied, whenever such freight can be so transported to its place of destination at rates not exceeding the cost at which such freight can be carried by any other means of transportation.

to its place of destination at rates not exceeding the cost at which such freight can be carried by any other means of transportation.

Here is an additional obligation on the part of the United States that we shall employ these railroads to do all our transportation unless some other mode of transportation comes in and rats under them. Why should the Government bind itself to any corporation, its own creature? As a matter of course we have the right to transport over their road; we have even the right, by the express terms of the law, to fix the compensation we shall pay, because it is much better that Congress should fix that compensation than that an interested board of directors should; but here we make a stipulation, not in favor of the United States but against the United States. What is the corresponding benefit? An annuity of a million and a half of dollars; what for? For the benefit of the railroad companies to pay their own debts. Under the law as it now stands we shall have coming into the Treasury of the United States not less than $1,200,000 in money to aid us in paying this interest. Under this bill we shall not have one cent; but, on the contrary, the $1,500,000 stipulated for in the bill does not go into the Treasury of the United States, but goes into what is called a sinking fund, and is there semi-annually compounded at 6 per cent. interest annually. Mr. President, it seems to me monstrous. We surrender an actual revenue in hand of $1,200,000, yearly increasing, to get a revenue for the benefit of the railroads, from which we can possibly get no benefit whatever until 1912, except that we stipulate to pay 6 per cent compounded on every dollar of this money until that time when the whole mass of it will be applied in the sinking fund to the payment of the bonds.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Is the Senator from Ohio through † If not, I am sure he will give way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will give way if the Senator desires, but I am not through.

not through.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me to move an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, which I have already prepared? It is to strike out in the second line of the third section the words "lieu of" and insert the words "in addition to."

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes a great difference.
Mr. BOUTWELL. And strike out the word "however," in line
5, after the word "provided."
Mr. SHERMAN. That makes all the difference. It makes the whole animal another horse.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I have already given notice to the chairman of the committee that I should move the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not aware of it. I think the amendment had better be printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The printing will be ordered, unless there be objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nineteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Saturday, February 10, at ten o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1877. [CALENDAR DAY, February 9.]

AFTER THE RECESS.

The House re-assembled at ten o'clock a. m., Friday, February 9; when, on motion of Mr. New, a further recess was taken until five minutes before twelve o'clock a. m., at which time the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other

SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, in regard to Government swamp lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 11, concerning Government swamp lands.

Senate joint resolution No. 11, concerning Government swamp lands.

Whereas section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act to amend the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled 'An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," provides that, upon due proof by the agent of the State or States before the Commissioner of the General Land Office that any land was located subsequent to the 22th day of September, 1850, by warrants or scrip, the State or States should be authorized to locate a quantity of like amount upon any of the public land subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less;

And whereas said law is inoperative on account of the rules and decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, declaring that said indemnity scrip can only be located upon lands subject to entry in the State of Illinois, and of his refusal to further issue said scrip: Therefore,

Be it resolved, (the senate and house concurring therein.) That the Congress of the United States be requested by act or otherwise to instruct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue said scrip and to allow its location upon any of the public lands subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less, within or without the State of Illinois, and that he be directed to issue the same in eighty and one hundred and sixty acre tracts.

EXPEDITION TO NORTH POLE.

Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of members of the Corn and Flour Exchange of Baltimore, favoring an appropriation by Congress for Captain Howgate's expedition to the north pole; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled :

assembled:

Whereas it appears that an expedition to the north polar regions is proposed upon a plan which seems to promise a fair hope of a successful issue, at a cost quite out of proportion to the value of the least probable result;

And whereas it is desirable that no effort should be spared to determine questions in connection with the physical condition of the earth in the interest of commerce, agriculture, and science: Therefore,

Bettresolved, That we, the undersigned members of the Corn and Flour Exchange of Baltimore, heartily approve of the scheme indicated by Captain Henry W. Howgate, now before Congress, and respectfully suggest that the bill now pending be passed, with the appropriation of $50,000 to defray the cost of the expedition, THOS. W. LEVING & SONS, BARKER & GWATHMEY, SAML TOWNSEND & SON, E. D. BIGELOW & Co., And others.

And others.

Mr. O'BRIEN also, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of Baltimore, praying an appropriation by Congress for Captain Howgate's proposed expedition to the north pole; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas it appears that an expedition to the arctic regions is proposed upon a plan which seems to promise a fair hope of a successful issue, at a cost quite out of proportion to the value of the least probable result;

And whereas it is desirable that no efforts should be spared to determine questions in connection with the physical condition of the earth in the interest of commerce, agriculture, and science: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the members of the Baltimore Merchants' Exchange, heartily approve of the scheme indicted by Captain H. W. Howgate, now before Congress, and respectfully suggest that the bill now pending be passed, with the appropriation of $50,000 to defray the cost of the expedition.

JAMES BRICKHEAD,
H. O. HAUGHTON,
And others.

BALTIMORE, February 7, 1877.

STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. LYNDE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4625) to authorize members of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians to sue in the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4626) to amend section 3737 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4627) to provide for the settlement of certain claims against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. WARD.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4628) for the relief of John M. Ward, postmaster at West Point, in Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. (at twelve o'clock m.) The Chair asks consent that prayer may now be offered.

There was no objection; and prayer was offered by Rev. A. FLORIDUS STEELE, of Washington, District of Columbia.

CAPTORS OF THE RAM ALBEMARLE.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for printing and recommitment, the bill (H. R. No. 4370) for the relief of the captors of the ram Albemarle

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I object.

PAY OF JANITOR OF A COMMITTEE-ROOM.

Mr. MacDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay to Captain Alvah W. Hicks, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $40 per month for his services as janitor in charge of the room of the Committee on Military Affairs; said services to be certified by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. MacDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAMBOAT MOLLIE KEATOR.

Mr. DURAND. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Mr. DURAND. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce an act (H. R. No. 1915) to change the name of the steamboat Robert Ross with the recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to change the name of the steamboat Robert Ross to that of Molke Kretor of Moline.

The amendment of the Senate is as follows: Strike out "Kretor" and insert "Keator.'

Mr. CONGER. I wish the gentleman would state what this steamboat is, whether it is a passenger steamboat or not.

Mr. DURAND. I really cannot tell whether it is a passenger boat or not, but I think not. It is a bill which has passed the House and passed the Senate and the amendment merely provides for correcting a mistake made in the name.

Mr. CONGER. I do not remember this bill or when it was passed, but this House has uniformly refused to change the name of passenger steamboats when that fact was announced. If this does change the name of a passenger steamboat and it is time to make objection, as the gentleman is unable to answer the question I have put to him, I must insist on my objection to the consideration of the bill at the have not the report at hand.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will let it pass for the present so I can ascertain whether or not it is a passenger steamboat, it can be again taken up

PRINTING DEFICIENCY.

Mr. WALDRON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, and for other purposes, to further insist upon the amendment of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WALDRON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following as the conferees on the part of the House: Mr. Waldron, Mr. Vance of Ohio, and Mr. Rob-

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WALDRON. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, for prior years, and for other purposes. When the House took a recess yesterday it was dividing on the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole on motion of Mr. HANCOCK, covering various claims for deficiencies on which the year and respect to the second of the world of the whole on motion of Mr. HANCOCK, covering various claims for deficiencies on which the yeas and nays were demanded.

Mr. STONE. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays being with-

The STEARER. The demand for the year and hays being withdrawn, the amendment stands rejected.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to have the engrossed bill read.

The bill was read.

Mr. WALDRON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALDRON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.
The SPEAKER. That motion is not now in order.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I thought the previous question was expected.

The SPEAKER. It is not.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 3; no quorum voting.
The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WALDRON, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois, as tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 140, noes 1.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WALDRON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. SWANN. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the correspondence between Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, and that committee in reference to the Mexican indemnity fund, and also a bill for the distribution of that fund, on indemnity fund, and also a bill for the distribution of that fund, on which I propose to take a vote at this time. The Secretary of State is very desirous of getting rid of this money. The bill meets with the approbation of the claimants, who are ready to co-operate with the committee in asking for the immediate distribution of the fund. The bill (H. R. No. 4629) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, is as follows:

America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and required, as soon as may be practicable, to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a schedule of all the awards of moneys made by the commissioners and ampires under the convention between the United States and the Mexican Republic lie for the adjustment of claims, concluded July 4, 1886, in favor of citizens of the United States against the Mexican Republic, showing the names of the corporations, companies, or private individuals in whose favor such awards were respectively made, and the several and respective amounts of such awards, and also a schedule of all the awards of money made by the said commissioners and the said convention of all the awards of money made by the said commissioners and the said individuals, citizens of the Mexican Republic, against the United States, together with a statement of the balances parable by the Mexican Republic to the United States and the Mexican Republic of April 29, 1876, and also a statement of the bullet of the States pursuant to the provisions of the fourth article of the said convention of July 4, 1868.

Sec. 2. And be if priver enacted, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby authorized and required to receive any and all moneys which may be paid by the to time, as the same shall on pursuance of the said conventions, and from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 3. And be if pretter enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby anthorized and required to deposit in the Treasury of the United States all moneys which shall be so transferred and paid over to him in pursuance of the preceding section, and the said moneys, when so transferred, paid over, and deposited, are hereby appropriated by a from the said wards, and the said moneys, Treasury.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That in the payment of money, in virtue of this act, to any corporation, company, or private individual, the Secretary of the Treasury shall first deduct and retain or make reservation of such sums of money, if any, as may be due to the United States from any corporation, company, or private individual in whose favor awards shall have been made under the said convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWANN. I would state in explanation of the bill that it is concurred in by the Secretary of State, carefully examined and concurred in by him, concurred in by the claimants under this Mexican treaty, and meets the approbation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who have directed me to present it to the House. All the parties interested unite in recommending this bill for the approbation of the House. of the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the select committee charged with investigating the recent election in Louisiana to present and ask the passage of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the Louisiana election be authorized to have printed for the use of the committee and the House at a private printing-office the residue of the evidence taken by the committee and the subcommittee, at prices not to exceed the Government rates, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire before yielding the floor to have read a communication from the Public Printer showing that it is impossible to have this work done within the required time at the Public Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be read. Mr. HALE. Meanwhile I reserve points of order. The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. HALE. All points of order. The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER, Washington, February 7, 1877.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, February 7, 1877.

SIR: In reply to your note of this date asking me to advise you what progress I have made in printing the testimony of subcommittees of McMahox, Meade, and Blackburn, and more particularly when you can rely upon having printed the testimony taken by subcommittee of which you are chairman, (about lifteen hundred pages of print,) I would most respectfully state:

1. Meade's report of testimony is printed complete.

2. Blackburn's is about half finished.

3. McMahox's not yet commenced.

4. As to the testimony in case of your committee, I am informed by the foreman of printing in especial charge of this work that it lost its precedence on the calendar by being withdrawn from the office. The President's message and papers in charge of Mr. Wood's committee have been placed on the calendar in its place, with a promise from the foreman of printing in charge that it shall be continued until completed. Under these circumstances, unless Mr. Wood can be induced to give way, it will not be possible to take the testimony of your committee in hand again before the early part of next week.

It is expedient perhaps that I shall inform you of the present condition of the office, that you may be aware of it. Unless provision is made to day for an appropriation for printing and binding for Congress, the work will all be suspended (except the Recom) to-morrow until such provision is made. I do not regard it safe to myself as a public officer, in view of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, to contract for labor or material for this class of work after the office closes this evening. In view of these circumstances, it is not possible for me now to inform you when you can rely upon having the testimony taken by your subcommittee printed.

Very respectfully, &c.,

Hon. W. R. Morrison.

A. M. CLAPP, Public Printer.

Hon, W. R. MORRISON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I make this point of order first-there are several that Mr. HALE. I make this point of order first—there are several that seem to me to be good—that the subject of printing is in the control properly of the Committee on Printing, and that any proposition involving the printing of reports or testimony, must go to that committee, to be reported to the House. That is the first point of order. The SPEAKER. The chair knows of no rule that requires that this resolution shall go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE. I think if the Chair will refer to the rule in regard to the functions and duties of the Committee on Printing, he will see the functions and duties of the Committee on Printing, he will see that this resolution must have its first consideration by that commit-

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. There is no rule of the House which would compel the reference of this resono rule of the House which would compel the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HALE. Then I must make the further point that the resolution involves an appropriation of money, and must go to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit that the provision of the resolution directing payment to be made out of the contingent fund of this House saves it from that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, on the ground that the resolution involves no appropriation, but directs, as is constantly done, an expenditure out of the contingent fund of the House, already appropriated.

is constantly done, an expenditure out of the contingent fund of the House, already appropriated.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. HALE. Before that is done allow me to make the further point of order that the law is distinct and explicit that the printing shall be done by the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it is not within the power of this House to have any printing done except at the Public Printing Office, when the Public Printer informs the House that it cannot be done?

The SPEAKER. Section 3786 of the Revised Statutes provides as

The SPEAKER. Section 3786 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows:

All printing, binding, and blank books for the Senate or House of Representa-tives and the Executive and Judicial Departments shall be done at the Govern-ment Printing Office, except in cases otherwise provided by law.

If the gentleman from Kentucky will show that this is a case "otherwise provided by law," then the Chair would review his decision. But the Chair knows no law directing the printing to be done

Mr. JENKS. I submit that, as this printing is for the use of a committee, it does not come within the terms of the law. It cannot be alleged that a committee sent to some distant town should be required to remit their testimony or other proceedings to the Public Printer at Washington, when they need the printing to be done for immediate use. As the law does not therefore apply to this case, the point of order is not well taken and should not be sustained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the resolution to be again

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to modify the resolution by striking out the words "and the House," so that the printing may be for the use of the committee only.

Mr. HALE. I do not see that that makes any difference as regards the law. The committee is simply an organ of the House. It is a part of the House. Its action is the action of the House through the or the House. Its action is the action of the House through the committee. I do not think that helps the gentleman in the least.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, I rest it on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has the right to modify his resolution. The Clerk will report the resolution as mod-

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the Louisiana election be authorized to have printed for the use of the committee, at a private printing-office, the residue of the evidence taken by the committee and the subcommittee, at a price not to exceed the Government rates, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Blackburn,] the mover of this resolution, that the House and the Senate have appointed a committee of conference on a deficiency bill providing for a sufficient amount of money to carry on the public printing, and that that conference committee will on the public printing, and that that conference committee will probably meet at once.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to say that it must be apparent to the House what the object of the resolution is. It is to have this testimony printed, and with all due respect to the Chair I submit that the resolution, as now reported by the Clerk, is not subject to the objection made. It proposes to print the work of the committee for the use of that committee, and I do not see that the law of the House prevents it in such a case. The committee cannot handle this testimony in manuscript; it is too bulky for them to use it unless it be printed, and all we ask is that it shall be printed for the use of the committee. It seems to me that it is a matter which may be legitimes. committee. It seems to me that it is a matter which may be legitimately paid for out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the point of order is made upon the resolution as modified.

order is made upon the resolution as modified.

Mr. HALE. O yes! I renew the point of order on the resolution as modified. I do not wish to discuss it at all. The committee is the organ of the House and a part of it, and I hope that the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist upon this resolution, especially after the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. VANCE.] We know that the subject of the force to be employed in the printing-office and the expenditures for it is now being considered, or will be very soon, by a conference committee, which will judge of what force is necessary. is necessary

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman does not object to the printing of this testimony, why does he object to its being printed in this way?

Mr. HALE. The objection is to its being printed by parties outside the Government Printing Office when the law requires it to be printed at the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the law is very clear. The greater includes the less, and if the law controls the House it controls a committee of the House and prevents it from having any printing done except it is done at the Government Printing Office. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to read one clause of the Revised Statutes providing what shall be done when the printing at the Government Printing Office is delayed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided the question, but he is desirous to hear anything that gentlemen desire to say upon the subject. Mr. CONGER. I read then section 3757 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

SEC. 3757. The Joint Committee on Public Printing shall have power to adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing, but no arrangement entered into by them shall take effect until it has been approved by that House of Congress to which the printing belongs, or by both Houses when the printing delayed relates to the business of both.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I desire to know what use the gentleman from Kentuckey wants to make of this evidence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman can certainly understand that it is the nursues of the committee to furnish the testimony on which it is the purpose of the committee to furnish the testimony on which they were engaged six weeks in taking to the House before such time shall arrive as will render it useless to have it printed at all. If it was worth the time spent in taking it and was of any value we propose to give the House and the country the value of it. If done at all it must be done at once, and the delay in the printing on the part of the Public Printer would nullify the work of the subcommittee in Louisiana, which took six weeks.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I understand then that the purpose of the committee is to give this information to the country, and not to the House

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not understand that the committee was not a part of the country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman not a part of the country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that it is competent to move to refer this resolution to Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. With all deference to the Chair I do not see that such a reference would do any good.

Mr. KELLEY. I would suggest that the Public Printer be authorized to hire enough force to do this work.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I will state that four hundred printers in the Government Printing Office were furloughed yesterday.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. As I said a moment since, the two Houses concurred in passing a deficiency appropriation bill of $350,000 for the Public Printing Office, and they disagree upon an amendment to that bill put upon it by the House, and a conference committee has been appointed, which will probably meet to-day.

Mr. HALE. Is that committee of conference already appointed?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. Yes, sir; and in the exercise of his discretion the head of the Government Printing Office need not have removed or furloughed one solitary man from his office.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a word in response to the gentleman

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a word in response to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Vance.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that there is nothing before the House.

Subsequently,
Mr. JENKS said: I ask unanimous consent that the resolution submitted a few moments since by the gentleman from Kentucky may be referred to the Committee on Printing.
Mr. CONGER. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that to-day's session shall be considered as a legislative day and as objection day.

Several members objected.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, so that the House shall go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for the consideration of pension bills only.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House require that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar shall proceed to consider the consequence on the Calendar in its order.

mittee of the Whole on the Private Calendar shall proceed to consider the business on the Calendar in its order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to submit a report from the select committee on the Freedman's Bank, which I think is a privileged report. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not of higher privilege than the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Calendar.

Mr. CLYMER. Is that motion in order?
The SPEAKER. It is in order.
Mr. CLYMER. This, I understand, is the legislative day of Thursday the 1st day of February.
The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is in order on any day for general business.

Mr. CLYMER. Does it not require unanimous consent to-day?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar Calendar.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Will the fact that this is the legislative day of Thursday the 1st of February prevent it from being objection day in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar? I know the gentleman from Tennessee can make his motion at this time; but will he have the advantage of this height polyaging day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes this as being still the legislative day of Thursday the 1st day of February. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Bright] to make his motion, because the rule authorizes it to be made this time.

Mr. COX. I understand that; but will the Chair rule that this is chiestical day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot so rule.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand the rule, it is proper to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar on private-bill day, but mittee of the Whole on the Private Calendar on private-on day, our not on any other day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects very well that more than once during his experience in this House this very question has come up and been decided as the Chair now decides it; that is, that a motion to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is in order on other days than Friday.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It has been so held by previous Speakers.

Mr. BRIGHT. If it be in order, I will amend my motion so as to include an order of the House that all debate upon any bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to one minute.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. I object to that.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Grant, his Private Secretary.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. BRIGHT; and upon a division there were-ayes 144, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANNING. Before we go into Committee of the Whole I would like to ask for an order of the House that all debate upon any

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the business upon the Private Calendar, (Mr. Cox in the chair.)
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Private Calendar in order at this time.

on the Private Calendar in order at this time.

The Clerk read the following title:
A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of William J. Alexander, of Bloomington, Monroe County, Indiana.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Upon what page of the Calendar is the title of that bill to be found?

The CHAIRMAN. In consequence of the failure to print new Calendars there is a limited supply of them, consequently old prints of the Calendar have been obtained, and the bill the title of which has been read will be found on page 9 of the Calendar.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If this is not objection day, and I understand that it is not, then it seems to me that the business on the Private Calendar must be taken up in its order, commencing on page 6 of the Calendar and not on page 9.

6 of the Calendar and not on page 9.

Mr. MONROE. We have been over that part of the Calendar before.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg pardon. If this is not objection day, then we must commence with the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to suggest that the first bill for consideration at this time is the bill which went over after consideration and will come up now as unfinished business: the bill to confirm certain private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. ELKINS. That is the unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill to be considered to-day in Committee of the Whole is the unfinished business coming over from the last day the Committee of the Whole had under consideration the Private Calendar, not being objection day. It is House bill No. 344, on the sixth page of the Calendar. To that bill there is an amendment pending, and the Clerk will report the bill and amendment. ment pending, and the Clerk will report the bill and amendment.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

The Clerk then read the bill (H. R. No. 344) to confirm certain private land-claims in the Territory of New Mexico, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims by Mr. JOYCE, on the 4th day of February, 1876.

The pending amendment was in section 2, line 4, to strike out the words "United States" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "parties respectively asserting claims to said lands;" so that the section will read :

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed, without unreasonable delay, to cause the lands embraced in said several claims to be surveyed and platted at the expense of the parties repectively asserting claims to said lands, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is pending also a motion to strike out

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is pending also a motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.
Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.
Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly made such a motion sometime ago.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has made a motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, and that motion takes precedence of the amendment which was pending.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not think the motion to strike out the enacting clause was made on this bill; I think it was on another. The gentleman from Indiana makes that motion on so many bills that he has probably forgotten.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sent to the Clerk's office to ascertain the fact by the record.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to depend on the remembrance of the Clerk.

Mr. ELKINS. My recollection is that the gentleman offered an amendment only.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir; I can state distinctly the amendment the gentleman made. It was that the cost of surveying these lands should be paid by the claimants, and not by the government. No other motion was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the first motion that was made last ses-

Mr. BUCKNER. O, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The amendment read by the Clerk a moment ago is the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire when that amendment was offered; whether at the last session or at this.

The CHAIRMAN. At this session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it was offered last session.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection is that since that time I made the other motion.

other motion.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir; it was to another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has gone to the Clerk's office to ascertain the fact from the record. The Committee of the Whole will therefore be patient until the Clerk returns.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] is desirous to be heard I will not press my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont is recognized and will preceed.

and will proceed.

Mr. JOYCE. In accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office I desire to offer some amendments, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "the," in line 1 of section 2, strike out the words "Commissioner of the General Land Office" and insert in lieu thereof the words "surveyor-general for the Territory of New Mexico."

Also, in line 3 in said section, after the word "delay," insert the words "under such instructions as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office." Also, in line 4 of said section, after the word "be," insert the word "accurately."

Also, in line 4 of said section, after the word "be," insert the word "accurately."

Also strike out in said section all the words in lines 5 and 6.

Also amend by inserting as section 3 of said bill the following:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the cuty of the said surveyor-general, when he shall have caused any of the aforesaid claims to be surveyed and a plat to be made thereof, to give notice in each case that the same has been done by a publication once a week for six consecutive weeks in two newspapers, one published in the city of Santa Fé and one published near the land surveyed; and shall retain in his office for public inspection the survey and plat until ninety days from the date of the first publication in Santa Fé shall have expired; and if no objections are made to said survey he shall approve the same and transmit a duplicate of the survey and plat thereof to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his examination and approval; but if objections are made to said survey within the said ninety days by any party claiming to have an interest in the tract embraced in the survey or in any part thereof, such objections shall be reduced to writing, stating distinctly the interest of the objector, and signed by him or his attorney, and filed with the surveyor-general, together with such proofs as he may produce in support of the objections. At the expiration of said ninety days the surveyor-general shall transmit to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a duplicate of the survey and plat, with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the survey and plat, with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the survey and plat, with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the survey and plat, with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the survey and plat are approved by the said Commissioner from the surveyor-general of California touching the matters in dicated by him or proofs to be taken thereon, or may direct a new survey and plat are correc

Mr. JOYCE. These amendments are offered in conformity with the recommendations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and with these amendments he recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, my sole and only purpose in taking the floor at this time is to place the matter now under consideration, and the commit-time is to place the matter now under consideration, and the committee which reported it, in a true and proper position before this House and the country, and at the same time do what I consider to be but a simple act of justice to a large class of poor but worthy citizens.

While I do not complain of the abuse which gentlemen have been pleased to pour out upon the committee, nor of the severe manner in which its conclusions have been criticised, yet I do desire to call the attention of the House to what I deem to be the very unusual manner in which the findings of the committee house commutated manner in which the findings of the committee have been commented upon, and the line of argument pursued by the distinguished gentlemen, Messrs. Holman and Reagan, who have opposed this bill.

I only claim for the Committee on Private Land Claims what I am

I only claim for the Committee on Private Land Claims what I am willing to concede to every committee of this House, common intelligence and honesty of purpose in the discharge of their duties.

I have the fullest confidence in all the committees, and the very highest admiration for the exalted integrity and eminent abilities of every gentleman composing this House, but, sir, if I have read the history of this country, for the past fifteen years, aright, I cannot conscientiously admit that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] embodies all the integrity, knowledge, patriotism, and honor there is in this House. I am willing he should wrap himself up in his share, but more than that we are not bound to admit. In his remarks upon this bill at the last session the gentleman said that "the committee have not examined these titles," that the gentleman who reported the bill "had not examined the records," and that it was clear to his mind "that the committee had not examined these titles or the records connected with them, and that they were unable to state the ords connected with them, and that they were unable to state the facts to the House."

This startling development of ignorance on the part of the committee and just reprimand for gross neglect of duty was followed by the cheering and somewhat egotistical announcement that the learned gentleman himself had given less than three hours' attention to the gentleman himself had given less than three hours' attention to the bill and documents connected with it, and that that little time had been sufficient to satisfy him that the friends of the bill were unable to state to the House the facts as they were then known to him from the little examination he had made.

Mr. Chairman, all I have to say in answer to these statements is that, if they are really true, the wisdom and powers of research of the distinguished member from Texas far surpass his modesty and good

Now, sir, let us test the accuracy as well as the wisdom of the gentleman by the record.

On the 4th of February, 1876, this bill was reported to the House, and in the report the committee set forth the evidence before it, and the grounds and reasons of its decision, in the following clear and emphatic language:

The committee find, after a careful investigation, that each one of the claims or grants sought to be confirmed by this bill has been fully heard, examined, and passed upon by the surveyor-general of said Territory, in compliance with the provisions of the said act of Congress of 1854; and that he has reported in each case that said grants or claims are valid; that the claimants are either the heirs, personal representatives, or purchasers of the original grantees; that the proper and legal muniments of title have been filed, and are now in the proper office; and that, therefore, in his opinion, said private land claims are bona fide, and ought to be confirmed by Congress.

The committee have been influenced to a great extent by the findings and decisions of the surveyor-general, owing to the fact that in the hearing upon each case before him he had all the oral and documentary evidence of title and possession, which we have been unable to obtain, and which we do not now deem important in view of his findings.

Now six Leybouit that this report not only put the House in passes.

Now, sir, I submit that this report not only put the House in possession of all the evidence and facts upon which the committee had acted, together with its decision upon the question, but also furnished sufficient data from which any intelligent man could for him-self arrive at a correct and satisfactory conclusion.

Now, sir, on the 17th of March, this bill came up in Committee of the Whole for consideration, the report was read, and the whole matthe whole for consideration, the report was read, and the whole matter pretty thoroughly discussed by gentlemen upon both sides. In the course of the discussion every fact, every piece of evidence, and every consideration which had been urged before the committee, or which had produced the least effect upon their minds in leading them to a favorable report, were fully stated and commented upon by the gentleman who reported the bill, and a vigorous but unsuccessful attempt made to refute them on the other side. In speaking upon this point, I then said:

We examined all the evidence presented before the surveror-general, in each one of these cases, to see whether, in each case, there was a full hearing and finding, and we based our report mainly upon the fact that these cases had all been adjudicated by that officer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how can the gentleman from Texas, in the light of this record, stand up here and in a spirit of conceited egotism charge that the committee who had spent days in patient investigation of the subject and had made such a report and statement had not examined the titles or the records connected with these grants, and that they were unable to state the facts to the House, while he arrogates to himself a perfect knowledge of the whole question, gained by a casual inquiry of a few hours?

The gentleman also objects to this bill because too many claims are brought forward at one time, and that thereby members are de-are brought forward at one time, and that thereby members are denied the opportunity of looking into the facts and ascertaining the history of the claims, the legality of the rights, and the equities of the parties interested in them.

The House will readily observe the desperate straits to which the gentleman is driven for theories upon which to base his captions objections to this bill when it is remembered that each of the fifty-two claims sought to be confirmed by this bill is based upon the very same class of facts and principles of law, and that the bill now under consideration was introduced into the House on the 17th of December, 1875, and has been in the possession of every member since that time. The object of this bill is to confirm certain land claims in the Territory of New Mexico which were granted by Spain and Mexico previous to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, in 1848.

The country now comprising the Territory of New Mexico was held by Spain by right of discovery from an early period down to the time of the treaty of Cardovo in 1821, when Mexico declared her independence and severed her connection with the mother country. At that time this territory came under the jurisdiction of Mexico, and so remained until the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo between the United States and Mexico before referred to.

Thirty-seven of the claims set up in this bill were granted by the Spanish anthorities while Spain held possession of the country, and the remaining fifteen were granted by Mexico after the establishment of her independence.

Under the government of Spain these grants of land were made to those who had rendered important and valuable services to the Crown in unlimited quantities, but in 1824, some three years after this territory came into the possession and under the jurisdiction of Mexico, a law was passed by the Mexican Congress, termed a colonization law, providing for the colonization of the territories embraced within the limits of the republic, and declaring that, after that date, no more than eleven square leagues of the vacant lands should be granted to any one person. Under the provisions of that act the fifteen claims sought to be confirmed by this bill, among a large number of others, were granted by the Mexican authorities, and possession taken under the said grants.

The war between the United States and Mexico was terminated by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848, by the terms of which the Territory of New Mexico was ceded to the United States, an dfull possession given under the treaty.

With the acquisition of this Territory, not only its lands, but its people, were transferred to the jurisdiction of the United States, and brought under the control of our laws. It is a well-settled principle of the law of nations that the transfer of territory from one sovereign to another, including the lands of the people who inhabit them, is understood to pass the sovereignty only, and does not interfere with the rights of private property. The people change their allegiance, their relation to their ancient sovereign is dissolved, but their relations to each other and their rights of property remain undisturbed.

But the parties to this treaty were not, however, satisfied to let the rights of their citizens rest merely upon this well-known principle of public law, but inserted clauses recognizing these rights, and providing for their maintenance.

By the eighth article of that treaty it is provided that-

Mexicans now established in territories previously belonging to Mexico, and which remain for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by the present treaty, shall be free to continue where they now reside or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property they possess in the said territories, or disposing thereof, and removing the proceeds wherever they please, without their being subjected, on this account, to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

In the said territories, property of every kind, now belonging to Mexicans not established there, shall be inviolably respected. The present owners, the heirs of these, and all Mexicans who may hereafter acquire said property by contract, shall enjoy, with respect to it, guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States.

Thus, as well by express treaty stipulation as by force of public law, the United States became bound to take care of and protect all grants of land which had been made under Spanish and Mexican authority, and to confirm the titles to such grants according to their terms and extent to the actual owners in such a manner as to make them safe and available.

In order, therefore, to give full effect to said treaty stipulations, and recognizing the spirit in which they had their origin, Congress, in July, 1854, passed a law providing for the appointment of a surveyorgeneral for New Mexico, and in section 8 of said act defined his duties in the following language:

In the following language:

That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico; and, for this purpose, may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the Territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of 1843, denoting the various grades of title with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos, respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land. Such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants, and give full effect to the treaty of 1848, between the United States and Mexico; and until the final action of Congress on such claims all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act.

A surveyor-general for New Mexico having been duly appointed surveyor-general for New Mexico having been duly appointed under the provisions of the aforesaid act, on the 21st of August, 1854, the Secretary of the Interior framed and issued to that officer a code of rules and regulations for his guidance in the discharge of his duties.

After reciting at length section 8 of the said act of 1854, the Secretary thus set forth what he considered was the duty of the surveyorgeneral under the law:

The duty which this enactment devolves upon the surveyor-general is highly important and responsible. He has it in charge to prepare a faithful report of all the land titles in New Mexico which had their origin before the United States succeeded to the sovereignty of the country, and the law contemplates such a report as will enable Congress to make a just and proper discrimination between such as are bona fide and should be confirmed, and such as are fraudulent or otherwise destitute of merit, and ought to be rejected.

He was also instructed upon his arrival at Santa Fé to at once possess himself of all papers and records relating to saidland grants, to arrange and classify them and hold them in a place of security for ref-

He was further instructed to commence his sessions for the trial of said land claims "by giving proper public notice of the same in a newspaper of the largest circulation in the English and Spanish languages. He was to make known his readiness to receive notices and guages. He was to make known his readiness to receive notices and testimony in support of the land claims of individuals, derived before the change of government."

He was to "require claimants in every case, and give public notice to that effect, to file a written notice setting forth the name of 'present claimant;' name of the 'original claimant;' nature of claim, whether inchoate or perfect; its date; from what authority the original title was derived, with a reference to the evidence of the power and authority under which the granting officer may have acted; quantity claimed; locality, notice, and extent of conflicting claims, if any, with a reference to the documentary evidence and testimony relied upon to establish the claim, and to show a transfer of right from the 'original grantee' to present claimant."

He was also instructed to require of every claimant an authenticated plat of survey, if a survey had been executed, or other evidence, show-ing the precise locality and extent of the tract claimed.

This is indispensable in order to avoid any doubt hereafter in reserving from sale, as contemplated by law, the particular tract or parcel of land for which a claim may be duly filed, or in communicating the title to the same hereafter in the event of a final confirmation.

the title to the same hereafter in the event of a final confirmation.

The effect of this will be not only to save claimants from embarrassments and difficulties inseparable from the presentation and adjudication of claims with indefinite limits, but will promote the welfare of the country generally by furnishing the surveyor-general with evidence of what is claimed as private property under treaty and the act of July 22, 1854, thus enabling him to ascertain what is undisputed public land, and to proceed with the public surveys accordingly, without awaiting the final action of Congress upon the subject.

He was also to take care to guard the public against fraudulent or antedated claims, and to bring the title-papers to the test of the genuine signatures, which he should collect of the granting officers, as well as to the test of the official registers or abstracts which may exist of the titles issued by the granting officers. In all cases, of course, the original title-papers are to be produced, or loss accounted exist of the titles issued by the granting officers. In all cases, of course, the original title-papers are to be produced, or loss accounted for; and where copies are presented, they must be authenticated; and that his report should also state the precise character of the papers acted upon by him, whether originals or otherwise. Where the claim may be presented by a party as "present claimant" in right of another, he was to be satisfied that the deraignment of title is complete; otherwise, the entry and his decision were to be in favor of the "legal representatives" of the original grantee.

It was made his imperative duty to keep a correct journal of all his official acts, and to subject all papers under suspicion of fraud to his official acts, and to subject all papers under suspicion of fraud to the severest scrutiny and test, in order to settle correctly the question of their genuineness.

In closing his instructions to the surveyor-general the Secretary of the Interior thus set forth the duty and obligations of this Government with reference to these claims:

It is obligatory on the Government of the United States to deal with the private land titles and the pueblos precisely as Mexico would have done had the sovereignty not changed. We are bound to recognize all titles as she would have done; to go that far, and no further. This is the principle which you will bear in mind in acting upon these important concerns.

Since the passage of said act of 1854 and the appointment of the surveyor-general, a large number of the citizens of the Territory of New Mexico, claiming lands under Spanish or Mexican grants, have at various times filed their claims, and adduced evidence, oral and documentary, of their titles, in accordance with the provisions of said act, and the rules and instructions of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office. Many of these claims have been duly heard, considered, and reported upon by the surveyorgeneral; and upon such reports Congress has confirmed them to the

In 1860 claims designated by the surveyor-general as numbers 1, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38, were by special act confirmed, with a proviso that claim No. 9 should not be confirmed for more than eleven sonare square leagues and claim No. 17 for not more than eleven square leagues, to each of said claimants.

Claim No. 43 was confirmed in 1861; claims numbered 41, 42, 44, 46, and 47 in 1869; and claim designated as number 48 to the extent of eleven square leagues in 1870.

It is worthy of notice, Mr. Chairman, that all the claims thus confirmed by Congress were of precisely the same nature and in exactly the same condition as those embraced in this bill; had all been heard, considered, and reported upon favorably by the surveyor-general, and, with the exceptions I have stated, were all confirmed according to the bounds and extent designated in the grants, and without a previous survey.

By reference to the report of the surveyor-general we are enabled to see exactly how the hearings before him were conducted and how thoroughly each case was examined and tried. In the first place he assued his notice to all parties concerned to appear before him; then summoned the witness, and when all parties were present and everything was ready, the trial proceeded. The claimant first produced his petition to the surveyor-general for a hearing, which embraced all the facts material to his claim; then the original petition to the Spanish or Mexican governor, praying for the grant; next the decree of the governor, directing the proper officer to examine and report to him most the location of the grant; the grant of the state of the grant o apon the location of the grant; the report of that officer; the grant of the land by the governor; the possession of the land given to the petitioner by the proper officer of the government; the distribution of the land among the petitioners, if more than one; decree of confirmation to each by the governor; the testimony of witnesses as to possession; and, finally, all the evidence of title, both oral and written, by any person interested in the claim.

Now, sir, with all this evidence before him, aided by a personal inspection of all the original papers, I know of no person in all the wide world that could possibly be better qualified to judge of the validity of these titles than the surveyor-general, unless it may be the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in the light of all the facts to which I have thus briefly alluded, that unless we assume that the surveyor-general was a fool or a knave, we must conclude that these land claims have been fully and fairly tried, and that there can be no danger in confirming them without further delay.

In accordance with the law of 1854, these cases have been from time to time laid before Congress by the Secretary of the Interior as they have been tried and reported upon by the surveyor-general, and although we are not bound by the opinions of the Interior Department, it may not be out of place or entirely unprofitable to refer to them. In his report for 1872 the Secretary says:

The Government in deciding upon the validity of these grants always appears to have been actuated by the most liberal principles, as evidenced both in the legislation of Congress and in the decisions of the Supreme Court concerning them. If the grants were incipient and incheate at the date of the change of national sovereignty, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, or if acquired in good faith, though imperfect in form, or defective in requisites not absolutely essential, they are recognized and confirmed. The claimant, therefore, under one of these old grants, though he hold in good faith but the color of title, may rely with confidence upon the Government for an equitable and generous consideration of his claim.

And again, in 1875, he calls the attention of Congress to this subject in the following urgent manner:

ject in the following urgent manner:

It is now more than twenty years since the surveyor-general of New Mexico commenced the examination of claims in that Territory, and he has since reported to Congress less than one hundred and fifty claims, though in 1836 he had more than one thousand upon his files, and of the number reported Congress has confirmed but seventy-one. From these data it will be seen that the probable date when the last of these thousand claims in New Mexico alone will be reported on and confirmed is in the far future.

In the mean time the claimants must wait without remedy, and their grants, which would be valuable if the title were completed by a United States confirmation or patent, must remain comparatively worthless, as is all property where the vendor offers for sale an incomplete title and prospective litigation. The settler dares not settle and improve land lest it be subsequently found to be within the limits of some unconfirmed and unsurveyed grant; and the United States, by such delay, not only loses the sale of its land, but, judging from past experience with private land claims in other localities, the development of the resources of that country will create additional incentives for the manufacture of fraudulent title papers, with the view of securing public land therewith. Each year's delay, with the consequent death of living witnesses and loss or destruction of ancient records relating to land, adds to the probabilities that such forged and otherwise fraudulent title papers will pass without detection the scrutiny of the officers whose duty it may become to determine their character.

The acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, in speaking

The acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, in speaking of the claims embraced in this bill, under date of April 17, 1876, says:

The claims embraced in the proposed bill have been reported upon from time to time by the surveyor-general, from November 15, 1870, to December 24, 1874, and transmitted to Congress for action at various times from February 6, 1871, to January 7, 1875, thus running through a period of over five years, and, therefore, as a matter of right to the claimants, and to enable the surveyor-general to cause the surveys thereof to be made, and thus segregate the lands embraced in said claims from the public domain, I would recommend their early consideration by Congress.

It has also been claimed in this discussion that if these grants are confirmed the surveys ought to be at the expense of the claimants. In answer to the palpable injustice of such a proposition I desire to call the attention of the House to the statements of James K. Prondfit, late surveyor-general of New Mexico, upon this subject. In his report upon a number of these private land claims in 1873, he says:

These grants which are genuine and so admitted by our proper authorities are not public domain. They are simply and clearly private property, as much so as any man's farm in the older States. To force the owners to pay for separating them from the public domain is subjecting them to a "charge" which is prohibited by the treaty. The expense of all these surveys which have not been already executed will probably not cost to exceed $70,000; but be the cost more or less, the stipulations of the treaty ought to be carried out in good faith and the nation's honor maintained. maintained.

But setting aside the rights of grant-owners under the treaty, I have no doubt but that as a matter of business management it would be good and economical policy for the Government to make these segregations at its own expense. During over eleven years that the law has stood as now, but six of these grants have been surveyed. This is a p etty good indication of the feeling of the owners, and shows what the fact is, that they are waiting for the Government to return to its former practice, and what was, previous to 1862, admitted on all hands to be its duty under the treaty. From this it would seem to be unimportant to provide any means of adjusting the titles unless at the Same time provision is made for the survey. A mere adjudication will not determine the locus of the land, or its shape and area. A survey is necessary for that purpose.

The Government is far more interested to know where its land lies and how much it has than the grant-owners. The latter usually know very nearly their position, and may sit still in their houses with their muniments of title protected by soleme treaty, and cannot legally be disturbed. At least that is their opinion, and they persistently act upon it. It seems to me that these grants or farms may be compared to lakes in the public domain. When we come to a lake in surveying, what do we do? Why, we meander its banks to ascertain how much land we have, or in other words we run its boundary or exterior lines, which is all that is required in the case of a grant. It is also an undoubted fact that if these grants be not surveyed, and the public surveys are prosecuted with due diligence, many lines will run over unascertained grants, all of which will be a uscless expense, and may be saved by merely running the exterior lines of the grants. The people think, and it seems to me not without reason, that they ought not to be required to do anything different from what would have been required of them b

It is not only for the benefit of the claimants that the land embraced in these grants should be surveyed and segregated from the common domain, but the Government is also deeply interested in having it done at the earliest practicable moment.

Under the provisions of the act of 1854, these lands are reserved and held from the market until confirmation by Congress and survey by the Interior Department, whereby and in consequence of the un-certain extent of these grants before they are surveyed vast quantities of the public lands are liable to be, and no doubt are, kept out of the market, and immigration greatly retarded by the refusal of this Government against its own interest to fulfill a solemn treaty obligation. This view of the subject was entertained by the last Congress, and resulted in the repeal of the act of 1862, which provided that the cost and expense of platting and surveying these private land claims should be paid by the claimants. As the law now stands, they are to be paid by the Government as provided by treaty eximplations.

stands, they are to be paid by the Government as provided by treaty stipulations.

The gentleman from Indiana in his remarks upon this bill spoke of these lands as belonging to the United States. This is a mistake. These lands do not now belong to the Government, and never did. At the time of the cession in 1848 these lands belonged to private individuals, and the claimants are as much entitled to them now, by virtue of the terms of that treaty and the force of public law, as they were while Mexico retained jurisdiction of the territory. It is not, therefore, a donation of land by the United States to these claimants, but the performance of a plain and sacred duty, under the solemn compact of Guadalupe Hidalgo, that is demanded by this bill.

If these grants were valid under the laws of Spain and Mexico they ought to be confirmed by this Government to their full extent, irreought to be confirmed by this Government to their full extent, irrespective of any question as to their amount; it was a duty and a bur-den we assumed when we came in possession of that territory, and no factious objections or hair-splitting theories will justify us in denying equal rights and justice to this large class of our citizens

It has been urged here that if these claims are valid and the titles good there is no need of this act of confirmation. In answer to this I would remind the gentleman that these grants were mere concessions on the part of Spain and Mexico to the grantors and ancestors of these claimants, that under our Government they have now a mere inchoate claimants, that under our Government they have now a mere inchoate title, and can have no standing in court until they are armed with a United States patent, which cannot be granted until the grants or concessions are confirmed by Congress and surveyed under the authority of the Department of the Interior.

From data obtained from the General Land Office, the approximate number of acres of land covered by the claims and sought to be confirmed by this bill probably exceeds two and one-quarter millions, and as near as can be estimated, the number of present claimants will reach, as I am informed, 32,000, so that when the land is properly divided between them it will be a little less than eighty acres to each

The names of all these claimants could not be given in the bill, as in some instances, as I am informed, these grants embrace whole towns and villages, in which are many hundreds of people.

Another estimate which has been made by parties who claim to have knowledge upon the subject is that the claims sought to be confirmed by this bill cover an area of 1,409,599 acres—that the number of original grantees was 1080, and that the number of people who now claim an interest in these claims, and who now reside upon them, is nearly 39,000.

It is admitted on all hands that it is due to the Government and also to the claimants that these grants be speedily settled in some manuer, and yet no one opposed to this confirmation brings forward any proposition by which it can be accomplished except under the law of 1854.

The gentlemen who oppose this bill claim that the surveyor-general is not a fit person to settle these land titles; that he is not a judicial officer; that there is no power nor efficacy in his decisions and that the whole matter should be tried and determined by a court.

Sir, the law under which that officer has conducted the examina-tion of these land claims and reported them for confirmation has been in operation twenty-two years, thousands of dollars have been spent by the claimants in the preparation and hearing of cases before him, and over seventy of them have been confirmed by Congress without any serious opposition.

Now, sir, in view of all this, what evidence have we that the decision of a court would be any more satisfactory to these gentlemen than the opinion of the surveyor-general?

The legal presumption is that that officer is a competent person to discharge the duties of his office and that he has done so honestly and faithfully; and, as a matter of fact, in this case there is no evidence or suspicion even to the contrary. But, sir, it seems to me that these gentlemen are determined to be satisfied with nothing, that they are bound to object and find fault, and that therefore it makes very little difference with them what provokes it or what it is about.

difference with them what provokes it or what it is about.

It has been seriously argued by gentlemen opposed to this bill that there has been no possession under these grants, and that the land is now in the hands of sharpers and speculators.

The report of the surveyor-general, and the papers accompanying it, show conclusively that most of these lands are now claimed by the heirs and personal representatives of the original grantees, and that possession has come down to them in regular order from their ancestors; and instead of the grants being, as has been claimed, "vague and shadowy," they are founded in justice, and are the bona fide claims of poor but honest men.

It has been more than intimated Mr. Chairman deriver this delay.

It has been more than intimated, Mr. Chairman, during this debate that there is some fraud connected with this matter, and gentlemen have said that they were afraid there was some swindle in it. If there is, sir, the committee failed to discover it. Instead of presum-ing that the surveyor-general was a rogue and a knave, we assumed that he was an honest man, and that he had fairly and in good faith that he was an nonest man, and that he had fairly and in good faith heard and reported upon these claims. We gave full faith and credit to his findings and based our decision mainly upon his report and copies of papers which he has sent up with it. We could not go to New Mexico to inspect all the original papers used before him, and so we accepted as true and correct the certified copies filed by him in the Department of the Interior. There they are, and gentlemen have the same opportunities which the committee had to examine them and decide for themselves; because I wish it distinctly understood. and decide for themselves; because I wish it distinctly understood that the committee reported this bill favorably because they believed that the report of the surveyor-general was a true and honest report, and that the copies of papers sent up by him were true copies. If there is fraud in this simple prayer for confirmation, you can detect it as well as we.

In 1854 you passed a law providing for the settlement of these claims, and informed the people of New Mexico in effect that if they obtained a favorable report upon their claims from the officer you had appointed you would confirm them and settle their titles. Relying upon your promise, trusting in the plighted honor of this great nafrom your promise, crusting in the plighted honor of this great nation, they have in good faith and at great expense, in pursuance of your laws, prepared their cases, appeared before the surveyor-general with all their papers and witnesses, and after a patient investigation of the whole case have satisfied him that their claims are bona fide and ought to be confirmed.

They have fully and honestly performed their part of the contract, and after years of anxious waiting by them it only remains now for Congress to perform its part.

Something has been said here in reference to the character of the official acts of the surveyor-general in the settlement of these claims. Now, sir, for one I do not and never have claimed that his acts were judicial. On the contrary, I hold that he acts as the agent of the Government in carrying out the provisions of the law of 1854; he does what he is commanded to do by that act and sends a report of his doings to Congress. Congress is not legally bound, the Government is not concluded by his report or his decision, but may repudiate and set aside both and decide the other way. But, sir, I do claim that when he follows the requirements of the law and reports a claim here for confirmation, unless we know or can discover some fraud or irregularity in the proceedings, Congress is morally bound to indorse his report and confirm the claim; and if it cannot confirm them upon his report, it is its duty to provide some other means by which the solemn promise in this treaty can be fulfilled.

The bill provides that the confirmation of these claims shall merely operate as a relinquishment or quitclaim of all title or claim on the part of the United States to any of the lands embraced in said grants, and shall not in any manner affect the adverse rights of others; the Government shall survey the lands at the expense of the United States in conformity with the law governing the public surveys, and issue patents therefor, no grant bearing date subsequent to August, 1824, to exceed eleven square leagues of land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have, I believe, called the attention of the latest over the conformal con

House to every part and portion of the matter embraced in this bill, and attempted to answer every objection urged against its passage. The committee have no feeling or anxiety, and never have had, about this question, only such as is common to every member of the House, and that is, to arrive at a just conclusion and do exact justice between the Government of the United States and these claimants. For that purpose I have labored in committee and have now taken so much of time of the House.

I urge no man, I ask no man to vote for this bill unless he is satisfied that it is all right. I have carefully examined the whole subject and shall vote for it because I can discover no fraud, no irregularities, and no wrong in it, and because it is in fulfillment of a solemn treaty obligation, an act of justice to the people of New Mexico, and because I believe it is right.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from New Mexico,

[Mr. Elkins.]

Mr. Elkins. I would like to inquire how much time I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining of the hour to which he was entitled.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand that when this bill was last before the House debate was limited to one hour and a half. Am I correct!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can find no such record.

Mr. ELKINS. On my own motion, I am sure, that order was made when the bill was last up. It was twice postponed on account of absence of the gentleman from Vermont who has just spoken. I believe the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Buckner] will remember that such an order was made.

Mr. BUCKNER. I think that is so.
Mr. ELKINS. The chairman of the Committee of Claims [Mr. BRIGHT] will also no doubt recollect it.
Mr. BRIGHT. My recollection does not serve me at all. I shall have to appeal to the record.

have to appeal to the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the history of the bill so far as the Record shows it. It was debated on the 17th of March nearly all afternoon. On the 31st of March it came up and by general consent retained its place on the Calendar. It was again debated on the 9th day of June, 1876. During one of those debates the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] sought to obtain the floor to make a motion to strike out the enacting clause. The Record shows he attempted to make that motion but failed to get the floor in order to have the motion properly made:

Mr. Holman. In order to test the sense of the committee on this bill, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HANCOCK. I believe I am recognized, and do not yield to the gentleman from Indiana for that purpose.

So the motion was not really entered regularly. One hour and a half seemed to be assigned for the further consideration of this bill for debate. Of that time fifty minutes have been exhausted. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Joyce] yields the remaining ten minutes of his hour to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. ELKINS. I think, if I can have the attention of the House in the brief time allowed me, I can make this case plain; and in order to a proper understanding of the question, I ask the section of the law be read which I send to the Clerk's desk, under which the surveyor-general of New Mexico proceeded to adjudicate the claims now sought to be confirmed by this act.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico; and, for this purpose, may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the territory to the United States by the treaty of Gna-lahupe Hidalgo of 1848, denoting the various grades of title, with his decision as to the validity or invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land, such report to be made according to the forms which may be prescibed by the Secretary of the Interior; which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper with a view to confirm bona fide grants and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico; and until the final action of Congress on such claims, all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act.

Mr. ELKINS. Now. Mr. Chairman, here is a positive act of Con-

Mr. ELKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a positive act of Congress, authorizing the mode and manner by which these claims should be adjudicated, passed twenty-three years ago. Some of the claims before Congress have been adjudicated by the surveyor-general as long as eight or ten years ago. I wish to claim, on behalf of the people of New Mexico whose titles are involved, that in the passage of this law they had no voice; the Government, on its own motion, proceeded in its own way to provide means and prescribe rules which the people nolens volens had to obey as the law of the land, and the officers of the Government, in almost an exparte manner, under this law, have adjudicated these claims, while the people themselves have only enjoyed the privilege of presenting them and their witnesses to prove occupation and possession.

The Government of the United States conferred upon the surveyorgeneral power to ascertain whether the grants were fraudulent and void or proper and valid under the laws of Spain and Mexico. The claims reported in this bill and asked to be confirmed are such, and only such, as had passed the examination of the surveyor-general and have been by him adjudicated in pursuance of law. The surveyorhave been by him adjudicated in pursuance of law. The surveyor-general, for the purpose of carrying out the law, was invested with quasi-judicial functions. He summoned the claimants to come before him with their original grants and muniments of title made by Spain or Mexico and deposit them in the archives of his office. He then, in pursuance of instructions from the General Land Office, fixed a day for the hearing, summoned witnesses who were examined in each case. After examination he rejected or recommended for confirmation, as he saw fit. Of course the claims which have been re-jected are not before Congress, but only such claims as he has approved, recommended for confirmation, and sent forward asking the favorable action of Congress; and the claims determined after investigation to be just and valid are those incorporated in this bill by their appropriate numbers.

I appeal to the House whether it is right or just to impose a law upon the people of New Mexico fixing a certain mode and manner of adjudicating their grants derived from Spain and Mexico, and then, when twenty-five years have passed, refuse to sanction the acts of its officers under that law. In California you conferred this power upon the courts, and the courts have been proceeding for twenty years to adjudicate and confirm these grants, and have adjusted and disposed of as many as four or five hundred. In New Mexico, Congress at its own instance, without consulting the wishes of the people, conferred the power of adjudication upon the surveyor-general; and I regret to say that, owing to its refusal to carry out the law, only forty-nine of these claims have been adjudicated and settled in twenty-three years. This course on the part of Congress has been, and is now, in plain violation of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and shows a determined and persistent hostility to these property-holders, who have title from the governments of Spain and Mexico.

Now, gentlemen, what remedy do you propose? You are obliged adjudicating their grants derived from Spain and Mexico, and then, have title from the governments of Spain and Mexico.

Now, gentlemen, what remedy do you propose? You are obliged by solemn treaty obligations to protect the people in their rights and property and do justice in the premises. You are obliged to recognize the titles of these people to these lands, and what do you propose? Some gentlemen say, "Why, have a court." Well, as far as a court is concerned, I brought a bill into this very House in the Forty-third Congress for that purpose, but the proposition met with no favor on account of the expense, as alleged by some. Some gentlemen propose a commission. That proposition I introduced here in the form of a bill, and it died after being reported by the committee. You refuse to carry out existing law by following the recommendations of the Surveyor-General, which would settle these Spanish and Mexican grants, and not only do this, but refuse to devise or permit any other means or method by which they may be adjudicated.

Now, gentlemen, what are we to do about these claims? What remedy are these people to have? The titles of New Mexico are in a state of perfect confusion. You do not know, nor can you tell, where the land-grants are or where the public domain is; and the object of this bill is to have the Government determine these ques-It is unjust for the Government to allow the lands to remain in this position; it not only discourages emigration to the Territory, but prevents the settlement of the public lands. It is unjust for the United States not to recognize the titles of these people.

Gentlemen make a mistake who think that this bill grants lands belonging to the Government of the United States. The title lands belonging to the Government of the United States. The title never was in the Government of the United States. It was in the governments of Spain and New Mexico, which granted the lands according to law to these claimants; and they have been in possession of these lands, some of them for two hundred and fifty years, and most of them for more than one hundred years. The object of this bill is to fix and determine the limits and boundaries of these grants.

Mr. Chairman, the people, as I have said before, have proceeded according to law and done everything you required of them. They have been put to great expense. They have employed lawyers and summoned witnesses at their own expense to prove up their claims.

summoned witnesses, at their own expense, to prove up their claims. They have deposited with the officers of the Government their original titles, as made to them by Spain and Mexico, copies of which, duly certified, together with all the testimony taken in each case, have been before the Committee on Private Land Claims; and the committee unanimously say they should be confirmed. And why gainsay their action? Gentlemen will not take the trouble to look into these grants, nor will they trust the committees and the General Land Office. It is easy to object to anything brought into the House, but if you will take up these claims and the evidence, one by one, as your committee have done, and examine them, you cannot but come to the conclusion that they are proper, just, right, and valid, and ought to be confirmed and the title of the claimants put at rest. No committee of Congress nor any officer of the Government who has examined them has ever questioned them.

Now, I want to say a word-and I have but a moment remainingas to the extent of these claims. I have a compilation here which nearly corresponds to one made in the Land Office, in answer to a letter from the chairman of the committee. The number of these grants, I believe, sought to be confirmed, is fifty-four. There were ten hundred and eighty original grantees, and the age of the grants averages one hundred years. There are, by computation, now about thirty-nine thousand owners, descendants and purchasers from the original grantees, and there are fifteen towns on these grants, owned by people who hold under the original grantees or their heirs, successors, and assigns. These include some of the largest towns in New Mexico; and, except by the action of Congress, you cannot have the titles adjudicated. Unless there be action by Congress, everything is left in a state of hopeless confusion. Those fifteen towns contain a population of twenty-three thousand people and there are fifteen thousand or state of hopeless contusion. Those fifteen towns contain a population of twenty-three thousand people, and there are fifteen thousand on other portions of these grants, all holding under the original grantees, in some form or shape. The Government refuses to say or permit its surveyor-general to say where the boundaries are. You need not be afraid about your public domain suffering by the passage of this bill. These lands never belonged to you; never. They belonged originally to the governments of Spain and Mexico, who granted them to the people who now ask Congress to simply recognize their rights.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The time since the grants enumerated herein were made will average more than one century.

one century. Mr. ELKINS. I now ask for a vote. I understand it appears from the RECORD that the debate is limited to an hour and a half. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will read the RECORD. Mr. ELKINS. I read from the RECORD of January 20, page 7:

Mr. Elkins. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the bill (H. R. No. 344) to confirm certain private land-claims in the Territory of New Mexico be limited to one bour and a half.

The motion was agreed to.

I do not understand that an hour and a half has been occupied in debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been any debate since that order was made until to-day.

Mr. ELKINS. There has been no debate. The consideration of the Mr. ELKINS. There has been no debate. The consideration of the bill has been put off from time to time on account of the absence of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE.]

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that there are thirty minutes yet remaining for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Only one hour has been thus far occupied in debate. A half hour still remains.

Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ELKINS. I yield the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not accept any time from the gentleman. I am on the floor in my own right.

on the floor in my own right.

Mr. ELKINS. I submit that I am on the floor; and I do not see how the gentleman from Texas and I can occupy the same place at the same time

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico was speaking in the time of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE.]

Mr. ELKINS. The gentleman from Vermont yielded me the rest of his time

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont had no more time than one hour altogether. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to the floor

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to go into any elaborate argument. I called attention to some features in relation to this bill in its discussion during the last session. I have made no subsequent investigation, and indeed I did not know that the bill was coming up at this time.

I then called attention to the fact that the great body of the people of New Mexico were simple-minded and pastoral people. Perhaps, as the gentleman from New Mexico suggests, they do not know this matter is pending; they may not know that a measure is pending before this House which involves the right of thousands of citizens of New Mexico to their homes. Now, it is said that this bill merely allows a quit-claim title to those people whose titles are defective, and that it protects the adverse rights or claims of persons claiming the same land. I do not undertake to quote the language of the act, but that is the substance of it. If this bill passes, it gives these humble, poor, and pastoral people a title, which was guaranteed to them by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo between the United States and Mexico. It is insisted this morning by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Joyce] and by the gentleman from New Mexico that, under the treaty of Guadalupe, the rights of Mexicans were secured. I cannot now go into a history of the matter, but an article was inserted in the treaty which was intended to affect the rights of the claimants under Mexican and Spanish titles. The Senate left that claimants under Mexican and Spanish titles. The Senate left that article out, and left them to claim their rights as they existed when the treaty was made. Now, by this action, their legal rights were secured to them. If they had a title it was secure, and if they had no title, then it was an execution of the provisions of the treaty to give them a title.

It has been said by the gentleman from New Mexico, and was before said by the gentleman from Vermont, that these men claimed their lands by titles running back a hundred or two hundred wears. When I spoke upon this subject last session I had to call attention to the testimony of some witnesses, and the gentleman from Vermont, in reviewing my remarks upon that occasion, did not comment upon that portion of my remarks in which I showed from the report that there were men before the commissioners who made this report, who testified to facts from one hundred and four years before this time. I wish the gentleman from Vermont had thought it fit to go back and inquire into the question of longevity and memory of these witnes

I devoted but a brief time to the examination of this question, but I find upon examining the record that it was full of contests over these claims. It is asserted that they have titles from one to two they have titles under the law, no law of Congress can make them better. They are as good as the law can make them.

Mr. BUCKNER. Did not Congress pass a law settling these land titles in California?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not now going into that question.
Mr. BUCKNER. Did not the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo cede to the United States the whole territory of California, subject to the rights of private claimants?

Mr. REAGAN. It ceded to the United States the national sovereignty and the right of eminent domain under the treaty, but it did not cede the right of an individual. On the contrary, all the rights of the owners, heirs, and assigns of lands were preserved. Therefore of the owners, heirs, and assigns of lands were preserved. Therefore I come back to the proposition, which nobody can deny or dispute, that if they had titles then they have titles to-day. If they had titles which could be maintained then, they can maintain them now against the United States and the whole world.

Mr ELKINS. If they had titles, and the statement of the gentleman from Texas is true, why did Congress pass the act of 1854?

Mr. BUCKNER. Judah P. Benjamin was the author of that act, and he knew all about these titles.

Mr. BEAGAN. I have great respect for Mr. Benjamin's legal ability.

Mr. REAGAN. I have great respect for Mr. Benjamin's legal ability. Mr. ELKINS. I would like the gentleman, who apparently understands this question, to answer mine.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know the particular facts which gave rise to that legislation, but I do know that where there are millions of acres of land involved, there is power brought to bear upon the House sometimes to do very foolish things. It is not citizens of New Mex-ico who asked this act.

ico who asked this act.

Mr. ELKINS. Who was it, then?

Mr. REAGAN. It was those whose titles are disputed and who would monopolize the lands of New Mexico. If they had a title under the treaty, their title is just as good as the law can make it; if not, it is but an effort to extend the treaty so as to give them a gratuity.

Mr. GUNTER. Why did Congress pass the law of 1854 appointing a commission to investigate these titles and report, and why does the Commissioner of the Land Office ask that these claims be confirmed by Congress?

firmed by Congress?

Mr. REAGAN. I have already made an answer to that question, but I will repeat it for the benefit of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. GUNTER.] There have been many occasions, unfortunately, in the history of this country when legislation has been procured from Congress for the benefit only of monopolies and land-grabbers.

Mr. GUNTER. I state to my friend from Texas [Mr. Reagan] that the same course was pursued in regard to lands acquired from France and Spain.

Mr. REAGAN. The precedent in the case of land obtained from France and Spain can hardly be invoked, because by the terms of the treaties and by the action of the Government the recognition of the titles of citizens of the territory acquired had much more scope than that given to rights of the Mexicans under the treaty with Mexico.

Mr. GUNTER. Allow me to ask the gentleman one other question. How is it that these parties claiming, if their titles are good, can designate them until they are recognized by Congress and a survey

Mr. REAGAN. That was what I was coming to when the gentleman Mr. REAGAN. That was what I was coming to when the gentleman first interrupted me. If I can understand what force and effect is intended to be obtained by the passage of this law, it relates to the very question which the gentleman has propounded, that is, to the ascertainment of boundaries, to the investiture of titles not according to the due course of law. If these claimants had titles they held them either by prescription or by grant. If they were held by prescription the means of perpetuating the knowledge of the titles was as good in the courts of the country as it is in an ex parte proceeding before the House of Representatives.

If the object be, as I affirm my judgment to be, that it is a part of the object of this bill, upon ex parte proceedings before this House, to enlarge grants, to give enormous lots of land not legitimately embraced in the grants, then I call attention now to a matter to which I called in the grants, then I call attention now to a matter to which I called attention last session of Congress, that is, that the policy of this Gov-ernment has been to secure homesteads on the public lands to all her citizens, and not to encourage monopolies of vast amounts of the public domain. Why, if the Government's bounty is appealed to, should fifty thousand acres of land be given to a citizen of New Mexico, when to a citizen of any other Territory you give only one hundred and sixty acres of land which would constitute a convenient and reasonable homestead? If I am right in my supposition as to the object and intent of this proposed legislation, then it is an overturning of the settled policy of this Government in the disposition of the public domain. Either that is so, or else it is true that we are proposing here to do a vain thing, a useless thing—to confirm titles which in themselves are perfect according to the law.

Mr. GUNTER. If this commissioner was appointed under an act of Congress, with judicial power or authority to investigate these claims under the sanction of an oath, and if he did investigate them, and made first his findings and then his report, does not that finding and report stand in the attitude of a judgment, and is not the pre-

Mr. REAGAN. I will not now attempt to go so far as to determine the question whether the action of the commissioner under that law has the force of a judgment. The law did not authorize him to pronounce such a judgment, but directed him to collect facts for the information of Congress.

Mr. GUNTER. The law authorized him to make a finding in the matter as to the justness of the claims, and to report them to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which he did.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan] to say that this is a superfluous thing. I would like to have him tell the House what is the distinction between Congress legislating in regard to the rights of the people of New Mexico and legislating in regard to the rights of the original settlers of Calilegislating in regard to the rights of the original settlers of Canfornia.

Mr. REAGAN. My friend cannot expect me to go into that question now in the few minutes which are left me. There are many members in the House who understand the course of legislation upon these matters and the distinction to which I have referred. I will go back to the proposition with which I started, that if these claimants have titles, as it is affirmed they have, then by this bill you cannot make those titles any better. If they did not have titles at the time the treaty was made, then it is not any execution of the provisions of that treaty to give them titles now, but it is simply a donation of the public land in violation of the system which has been adopted and pursued by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BUCKNER I want the gentleman to understand that as a legal proposition I undertake to say that the Congress of the United States has decided that no man, by virtue of the treaty alone, has any rights in these lands, but it is purely a political obligation on the part of the Government to confirm their just claims. In other words, no claimant can go into a court of justice and maintain an action of ejectment by virtue of this treaty alone.

Mr. REAGAN. The Constitution of the United States, the treaties made by the United States, and the acts of Congress, constitute the made by the United States, and the acts of Congress, constitute the law of the land. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo secured the rights of owners of property in the territory ceded to the United States.

Mr. BUCKNER. And the courts have held that that is only a political obligation. Mr. REAGAN. Mr. REAGAN. With all respect to the legal knowledge and information of my friend, I must totally dissent from the accuracy of his proposition. Such is not the law; such is not affirmed by any his proposition. Such is not the law; such is not affirmed by any law-writers, by any judicial decision, or by any public man in the country having knowledge of the subject.

Mr. ELKINS. I must repel the imputation that this is a bill in the interest of monopolists. There are thirty-nine thousand people interested in these grants, and evidence to this effect is before the House, supplied by the surveyor-general of New Mexico and the Land Office. That is a sufficient answer to that point.

I do not know which is worse, the confusion of the gentleman's [Mr. Reagan's] argument, or his absolute want of knowledge of the subject he attempts to discuss. The gentleman does not understand the proposition, neither as to the law nor the facts. I say that this lill is for the nurpose of determining the limit and boundaries of bill is for the purpose of determining the limit and boundaries of these grants. Determined by whom? Not by the claimants, but by the Government through its officers. The bill provides that you shall send your own officers on the ground to fix and determine these limits, and to say that the United States for its part has no right or limits, and to say that the United States for its part has no right or title in these lands. It does not ask you to grant any lands to anyone, but to define the limits of the grants made by Spain and Mexico. This act does not make any new grant of law to the citizens of New Mexico for 50,000 acres or any other amount. The gentleman's argumentum ad hominem (for that is just what it is) is calculated to deceive the House by leaving the impression that the object of the bill is to give and grant to these people something that they do not already

Mr. REAGAN. O, no. My friend will remember that the bill itself provides that grants may be confirmed to the extent of eleven leagues of land; and that although it is not 50,000 acres is 49,600.

Mr. ELKINS. Does not the gentleman know the difference between confirming a grant already made, relinquishing any supposed right the Government may have, and an absolute grant made in pursuance of law to an individual even before this Government had an existence. These are grants made by the government of Spain or the government of Mexico that formerly owned the land. These grants have been occupied by the grantees or their descendants for periods running from one hundred to two hundred years. The owners now simply ask that the Government of the United States shall, in a formal manner, recognize their grants and fix their boundaries. They do not ask you to give them anything. That is the point which I desire to emphasize. The surveyor-general declares them to be legal and valid grants. The act of Congress limited him in his jurisdiction and action to grants already made, and not to public land. In 1852, as I have already stated, this power was conferred upon the courts in California, and they adjusted these titles throughout that section of country acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. But in New Mexico a different rule was devised. An act of Congress provided that the surveyor-general should examine these grants and report the testimony to Congress, so that Congress might act finally in the matter. There has been no proposition to give away one foot of the public lands, and never has been; this idea has only found place in the confused understanding of the gentleman from Texas. Each grant included in this bill was made by the government of Spain or of Mexico, regularly and with all the formality of law. These governments had full power over their public lands, and granted them in large quantities to any one who might settle them. It was by making large donations to individuals and colonies that Spain and Mexico continued to extend their jurisdiction and terri-Spain and Mexico continued to extend their jurisdiction and territory. Land was no object and was granted in what seems to us

Mr. GUNTER. I ask the gentleman whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not recently made a report asking, in the interest of the Government as well as the interest of the claimants, that action be taken by Congress?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir; in every annual report for the last ten or fifteen years the Commissioner of the General Land Office has begged the attention of Congress to these grants, has asked that they be confirmed, that some final action be taken on them. In the report for 1871, page 64, he says:

It is most important to the growth and prosperity of these Territories, to which settlement is being rapidly attracted by the extension of railroads, that a separation be made at the earliest possible period between the public lands and those claimed under foreign titles. In this way only can the settler know where to locate safely so as not to intrude on the premises of others. The want of such definitive adjustment of the lines of the public and private lands has already, in one instance brought to notice by the governor of New Mexico, led to armed hostilities between settlers and employés of the grant claimants.

In his report to Congress for 1875 he uses this language-

In his report to Congress for 1875 he uses this language—
During the past four years this office has, by reports and otherwise, repeatedly called the attention of Congress to the defects in the present system of settling these claims; and to these I add my opinion that the present method prescribed for the determination of the validity of these grants is not sufficiently speedy to do justice either to the claimants or settlers or to the United States. Nor does it secure the requisite ability for a proper settlement of such grants; nor does it provide for the settlement of all such claims, the protection of which is guaranteed by treaty.

It is now more than twenty years since the surveyor-general of New Mexico commenced the examination of claims in that Territory, and he has since reported to Congress less than one hundred and fifty claims, though in 1856 he had more than one thousand upon his files, and, of the number reported, Congress has confirmed but seventy-one! From these data it will be seen that the probable date when the last of these thousand claims in New Mexico alone will be reported on and confirmed is in the far future.

In the mean time the claimants must wait without remedy, and their grants, which would be valuable if the title were completed by a United States confirmation or patent, must remain comparatively worthless, as is all property where the vendor offers for sale an incomplete title and prospective litigation. The settler dares not settle and improve land lest it be subsequently found to be within the limits of some unconfirmed and unsurveyed grant; and the United States confirmation of some unconfirmed and unsurveyed grant; and the United States by such delay not only loses the sale of its land, but, judging from past experience with private land claims in other localities, the development of the resources of that country will create additional meentives for the manufacture of frandulent title papers, with the view of securing public land therewith. Each year's delay, with the conseq

This matter must receive attention. As I have already stated, the This matter must receive attention. As I have already stated, the parties interested have gone to large expense; they have employed lawyers and summoned witnesses before the surveyor-general, who has acted upon them and, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Gunter] has well said, this matter is in a measure res adjudicata. There is not a breath of suspicion against one of these grants; no one intimates or can intimate anything of the kind. The Legislature of New Mexico has memorialized Congress to confirm them.

New Mexico has memorialized Congress to confirm them because the people of the whole Territory are interested in them.

Mr. Chairman, I think that in the short time allotted to me I have made plain these facts: That the Congress of the United States has authorized certain proceedings; that in pursuance of those proceedings these grants have been found and adjudged valid, and forwarded here for the action of Congress; that they have been passed upon and determined in your own way and by your own officers; and now the people ask that you take final action, confirm these grants, and send your own surveyor, not the surveyor of the claimants, to fix their boundaries and segregate them from the public domain. This is in the interest of the Government as well as the claimants, because many of the grant-owners are claiming more land than they are entitled to; they undertake to extend their boundaries farther than they ought to be extended. These boundaries cannot be fixed until Congress comes in and settles the matter definitively. This bill was discussed during the last session of Congress. It has been discussed nearly every Friday during this session that it could come up. Now let us have some action on it.

If this bill be not passed, the people of New Mexico are without any remedy whatever to adjust their titles. To refuse to pass such a measure as this is an indirect confiscation of their rights. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo provides that property of this kind shall be respected. But you do not respect it, because you leave the titles in confusion. It is true, they have their old Spanish and Mexican documents giving them title, but they deserve ampler evidence of title to enable them to protect their rights.

to enable them to protect their rights.

The Government of the United States, which has succeeded to the powers of the governments from which these titles are derived, is the only authority that can settle this question.

Gentlemen say "let these parties go into the courts." We want to go into the courts. The people of New Mexico for years have begged you to send these cases to the courts for adjudication. But you have refused to do so. Some gentlemen say they would not trust the courts out there. This I know is a gratuitous insult to worthy officers; but you must trust somebody. In the administration of human affairs you must employ human agents and trust them. Your man affairs you must employ human agents and trust them. Your distrust must stop somewhere. You cannot presume fraud against officers in the discharge of their duties and proceed to found an arguofficers in the discharge of their duties and proceed to found an argument on that presumption, as the gentleman from Texas does.

The proposition I submit in this case is that you are bound by the action of the surveyor-general, unless it can be shown he has acted fraudulently or made a mistake. Every one of these grants has been made in conformity to law by Spain or Mexico. All that we ask is that you shall fix the extent and limits of the grants so that these people may know where their land is, and so that settlers on the public domain may know where their land is. As the case stands now, a man cannot pre-empt or homestead land in the neighborhood of these grants, because the grant-owners, when their lands have not been grants, because the grant-owners, when their lands have not been adjudicated and surveyed, often claim more than they are entitled to.

This bill is designed to settle this matter beyond any further con-

This bill is designed to settle this matter beyond any further controversy. I ask you to stand by the law passed twenty-three years ago. Do not insist that these people shall longer continue in confusion and chaos in regard to their titles. To do so is unjust; it is a refusal to carry out solemn obligations imposed upon this Government by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I deny that these grants are concentrated in a few hands. They are owned, as I have before stated, (and the statement is confirmed by the Land Office,) by about forty thousand people who have settled all over them.

One other question. This Congress has heretofore approved and confirmed forty grants reported on by the surveyor-general of New Mexico, the same kind of grants, in no wise different.

Mexico, the same kind of grants, in no wise different.

Mr. HOLMAN. 1 now make the motion, which I thought was already pending, to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That takes precedence of all other motions.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 79.

Mr. BUCKNER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JOYCE and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 70,

So the motion was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the pending amendments, which will be reported and acted on in their order.

The question first recurred on the amendment in section 2, line 4, strike out "United States" and insert "parties respectively asserting claim to said land;" so it will read:

That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed, without unreasonable delay, to cause the lands embraced in sa'd several claims to be surveyed and platted at the expense of the parties respectively asserting claim to said land.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 45, noes 69; no quorum voting.
Mr. REAGAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. REAGAN and Mr. BUCKNER were appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope this question will be stated again. It is a proposition which, it seems to me, if understood, would neet with the approval of the committee.

Mr. BUCKNER. No debate is in order. I thought the gentleman would withdraw that proposition sometime ago.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 69.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I give notice that I shall demand the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

Mr. EDEN. I move the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 115.

So the committee refused to rise.

The question next recurred on the pending amendment.

The question next recurred on the pending amendment.

After the word "the," in line 1 of section 2, strike out the words "Commissioner of General Office" and insert in lieu thereof the words, "surveyor-general for the Territory of New Mexico;" so it will read, "that the surveyor-general for the Territory of New Mexico is hereby authorized and directed," &c.

The averagement was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 3 of section 2, after the word "delay," to insert "under such instructions as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment in line 4, section 2, after the word "be," to insert the word "accurately;" so it will read,

"be accurately surveyed and platted at the expense of the United States."

Mr. JOYCE. That is an amendment recommended by the General Land Office

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment to strike out in the second section the words, "and upon the filing and approval of said surveys and plats in his office, patents shall issue for said lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment to add the following

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the said surveyor-general, when he shall have caused any of the aforesaid claims to be surveyed and a plat to be made thereof, to give notice in each case that the same has been done by a publication once a week for six consecutive weeks in two newspapers, one published in the City of Santa Fé and one published near the land surveyed; and shall retain in his office for public inspection the survey and plat until ninety days from the date of the first publication in Santa Fé shall have expired; and if no objections are made to said survey, he shall approve the same and transmit a duplicate of the survey and plat thereof to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his examination and approval; but if objections are made to said survey within the said ninety days by any party claiming to have an interest in the tract embraced in the survey or in any part thereof, such objections shall be reduced to writing, stating distinctly the interest of the objector, and signed by him or his attorney, and filed with the surveyor-general, together with such proofs as he may produce in support of the objections. At the expiration of said ninety days the surveyor-general shall transmit to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a duplicate of the survey and plat, with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the objections, and also of any proofs produced by the claimant, and filed with him in support of the survey and plat with the objections and proofs filed with him in support of the objections, and also of any proofs produced by the claimant, and filed with him in support of the survey and plat only proofs to be taken thereon, is any direct a new survey and plat are corrected, or a new survey and plat are orrected, or a new survey and

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed under the order of the House. The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman stated that in his opinion the "ayes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand the Chair to say that the five-minute debate has been cut off I do not think that has been done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the bill is open to the five-minute de-

Mr. CONGER. I made the inquiry of the Chair, wishing to make a remark or two on the amendment before the question was taken on it. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that these amendments were pending when the House ordered that debate be limited to one hour and a balf. Mr. CONGER.

That meant general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The order of the House was that "all debate" be limited to one hour and a half.

Mr. CONGER. Was that done by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to know if that is the record, that the five-minute debate in Committee of the Whole was cut off. I do not think it is in the power of the House to make such an order.

Mr. ELKINS. It was done by order of the House. I have the RECORD here, showing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that no order was made as to the five-minute debate on the amendments. The gentle-man from Michigan can have his five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I have not felt it my duty to make any further remarks to-day in opposition to this bill, being content to add nothing to the remarks which I made when the bill was under consideration before. But, sir, here is an amendment which gives to the surveyor-general of New Mexico the power to make surveys, and requires all the residents on these lands to know that a survey is made by finding the notice in a publication—these Mexicans, these illiterate people, these men that cannot read or write—

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a point of order. The amendment to which the gentleman is now speaking has already been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan rose in time to make the point of order that the five-minute debate had not been cut off; and the Chair, without announcing the result of the vote, recognized the gentleman from Michigan to debate the amendment.

recognized the gentleman from Michigan to debate the amendment. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. This bill may give to claimants thousands of acres in one body according to their claims, which may embrace twenty or thirty sections of land, upon each of which or some of which may be settlers who have purchased these surveyed lands, and paid for them to the United States, or who may have made them their homesteads and made improvements upon them. That is bad enough, in Heaven's name—to compel citizens of the United States to fight a patent granted by act of Congress against a patent issued some time ago by the Land Office under the regular provisions of law. But this amendment provides the notice that shall be given to these hundreds or thousands of citizens resident on those disputed lands. It shall be a publication in some newspaper in Santa F6 and in some newspaper nearest to the lands. It may be five hundred miles off. I do not know how many newspapers are published. They are probably not published in every school district in that country. Now the owners of these lands may not be able even to read the notice if it be in the English language.

Mr. REAGAN. A large portion of the people of New Mexico cannot read at all.

not read at all.

Mr. ELKINS. They can read just as well as the gentleman's own onstituents in Texas.

Mr. CONGER. I have heard the voices of these gentlemen ringing in this Hall for half an hour at a time upon this bill, and I think they in this Hall for half an hour at a time upon this bill, and I think they may now allow me to have my few minutes.

The provision of this amendment, after the direction that is given for the publication in these papers, is, that unless these owners of lands find out in some way about the survey, and whether it includes their lands or not, it will be considered that they have made no objection, and nothing is founded by objection upon which they can resist the patent covering their land by virtue of this act of Congress. But who is the party provided for by this amendment to receive the objections to the survey, to its accuracy, to its correctness? The surveyor who makes the survey is the recipient of objections to the correctness of his own survey. I venture to say that, according to the ordinary mode of doing business, the surveyor will not run himself to death to find these objectors to contradict the accuracy of his own survey. He is to file these objections. He is to send them his own survey. He is to file these objections. He is to send them up. And more than that, no matter how strong the objections may be, they are made by men who know nothing about the mode of putting them in legal form; but this amendment provides that this surregor shall send with these objections his opinion of them, giving him an opportunity to straugle them at their very birth. If the bill was not bad enough before, as, in all conscience, it seems to me it was, giving great tracts of land and planting town claims upon the homesteads of American citizens without their having the opportunity to have their rights determined except in courts of law, compelling them with their adverse titles to go through all the United States ing them with their adverse titles to go through all the United States courts to save their homes—if it was not bad enough before, this amendment has made it, to the mind of any just man, I venture to say, absolutely insupportable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I simply desired those five minutes to express my objections to the amendment, as I have formerly expressed my objections to the bill.

tions to the bill.

Mr. EDEN. As this is a very important amendment I think the committee had better rise, that we may have an opportunity to read and consider it. I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. EDEN that the committee rise, there were—ayes 79, noes 79.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes "ay."

Mr. GUNTER. I call for tellers.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the catalogues and report of the board on behalf of the executive departments at the international exhibition of 1876, with their accompanying illustrations.

The labors performed by the members of the board, as evinced by the voluminous mass of information found in the various papers from the officers charged with their preparation, have been in the highest degree commendable; and believing that the publication of these papers will form an interesting memorial of the greatest of international exhibitions, and of the centennial anniversary of the Independence of our country, I recommend that they be printed in a suitable form for distribution and preservation.

The letter of the chairman of the board will give to Congress the history of its organization, the laws and executive orders under which it has acted, and the steps which have been taken to preserve the large and instructive collections made, with a view to their forming a part of a national museum, should Congress make the necessary appropriations for such a desirable object.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 9, 1877.

Mr. CLYMER. I think that message should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I make that motion. But I now ask for the reading of the memorial accompanying

Mr. FORT. I think it should be referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask now for the reading of the memorial.

The Clerk read the memorial, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION, 1876,
OFFICE OF THE BOARD ON BEHALF OF U. S. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS,
No. 1735 F Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., February 6, 1877.

The PRESIDENT of the United States.

Six: I am directed by the board on behalf of United States Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876 to submit the following report:

The participation of the Government in the exhibition was preliminarily undertaken by this board in pursuance of the following order, namely:

[Executive order.]

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION-1876. By the President of the United States.

By the President of the United States.

Whereas it has been brought to the notice of the President of the United States that, in the international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine, to be held in the city of Philadelphia in the year 1876 for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the Independence of the United States, it is desirable that from the Executive Departments of the Government of the United States, in which there may be articles suitable for the purpose intended, there should appear such articles and materials as will, when presented in a collective exhibition, illustrate the functions and administrative faculties of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, and thereby serve to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptations to the wants of the people:

ernment in time of peace and its resources as a war power, and thereby serve to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptations to the wants of the people:

Now, for the purpose of securing a complete and harmonious arrangement of the articles and materials designed to be exhibited from the Executive Departments of the Government, it is ordered that a board, to be composed of one person, to be named by the head of each of the Executive Departments which may have articles and materials to be exhibited, and also of one person to be named in behalf of the Smithsonian Institution, and one to be named in behalf of the Department of Agriculture, be charged with the preparation, arrangement, and safe-keeping of such articles and materials as the heads of the several Departments and the Commissioner of Agriculture and the director of the Smithsonian Institution may respectively deside shall be embraced in the collection; that one of the persons thus named, to be designated by the President, shall be chairman of such board, and that the board appoint from their own number such other officers as they may think necessary; and that the said board, when organized, be authorized, under the direction of the President, to confer with executive officers of the centennial exhibition in relation to such matters connected with the subject as may pertain to the respective Departments having articles and materials on exhibition; and that the names of the persons thus selected by the heads of the several Departments, the Commissioner of Agriculture, and the director of the Smithsonian Institution, shall be submitted to the President, or designation.

By order of the President.

WASHINGTON, January 23, 1874.

Washington, January 23, 1874.

In accordance with this order the following persons were named by the heads of the several Departments, &c., mentioned in the order, having articles or materials to be exhibited, to compose the board, viz:

By the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. R. W. Tayler.*

By the Secretary of War, Colonel S. C. Lyford, United States Army.

By the Secretary of the Navy, Admiral T. A. Jenkins, United States Navy.

By the Secretary of the Interior, John Eaton, esq.

By the Postmaster-General, Dr. Charles F. Macdonald.

By the Department of Agriculture, William Saunders, esq.

By the Smithsonian Institution, Professor S. F. Baird.

Colonel S. C. Lyford was designated by the President to be chairman of the board.

By the Smithsonian Institution, Professor S. F. Baird.

Colonel S. C. Lyford was designated by the President to be chairman of the board.

These appointments were not announced by the Department of State until March 25, 1874, and the first meeting of the board was held April 10, 1874, when it was concluded, after discussion, that each member should have full and exclusive control of the matters pertaining to his particular department, subject to the general advisement of the board, and that immediate steps should be taken to ascertain the amount of space required at the exhibition for the several Departments and the probable cost of the entire undertaking.

During the remainder of the year 1874 the several members of the board matured their plans, comprehending the nature and extent of effective participation, and prepared their estimates of cost. These estimates, which were submitted to Congress on January 8, 1875, aggregated the sum of $971,000, in which was included an item of $200,000 for a building at Philadelphia capable of removal to Washington after the close of the exhibition, to be used as a national museum. The wisdom of the board in forecasting at the time the probable demands of the public service after the close of the exhibition in respect to storage facilities for the collections made by it is now confirmed by the demands which it is reluctably compelled to make on Congress for that which it ought in the first instance to provide for.

The appropriations for the purposes of the board were not made until March 3, 1875, and were, in the cases of the War, Navy, and Smithsonian Institutions, only two-thirds of the estimated amounts needed; while in the case of the Interior Department, the appropriation was but little more than half of what was asked for. The appropriations were as follows in the act making appropriations for smithsonian Institution to participate in the international exhibition of 1876, the following sums are hereby appropriated, namely: For the Interior Department, $115,000; for th on the part of the Government, the same shall be paid for, pro rata, out of the sums appropriated to the several Departments, the United States commission of food-fishes, and the Treasury and Post-Office Departments excepted, the cost of the building not to exceed $150.000; and at the close of the exhibition said building shall be sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: And provided further. That the sums hereby appropriated shall cover the entire expense to which the United States Government shall be subjected on account of said exhibition, except the sum appropriated in this act for printing the certificates of stock of said exhibition; and the board on Executive Departments for be forbidden to expend any larger sum than is set down herein for each Department, or to enter into any contract or engagement that shall result in any such increased expenditure; and no money shall be taken by any Department for the purposes of this exhibition as aforesaid from any other appropriations except the one hereby made: And further provided, That of the sum hereby appropriated the sum of $200,000 shall be immediately available.

On March 9, 1875, the following executive order was issued, namely:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 9, 1875.

Executive Massion, March 9, 1875.

In order to carry out the provisions of the fifth section of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, the board heretofore appointed to take charge of the articles and materials to be exhibited by the several Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution, and the Agricultural Department, at the International Exhibition of 1876, is hereby continued under the following regulations and distribution of duties, viz: The funds appropriated by the above-named section will be drawn from the Treasury upon the requisition of the chairman of the board, to be disbursed as are other public moneys under the existing laws relating to disbursing officers. An officer of the Army will be detailed by the Secretary of War as disbursing officer of the board.

Each representative of an Executive Department, and the representative of the Smithsonian Institution, of the Agricultural Department, and the United States Commissioner of Food Fishes, will have charge of the matters pertaining to his respective Department, subject to the general advisement of the board; and all bills will be paid by the disbursing officer upon vouchers certified by such representative and countersigned by the chairman of the board.

The disbursing officer will render monthly accounts-current of all advances to and disbursements by him to the First Auditor of the Treasury for audit and extelement in the same manner as are other accounts of disbursing officers of the Government.

Each representative will be held responsible to the head of his respective Department for all public property of the United States furnished by the head of such Department or otherwise coming to his hands for the purposes of the exhibition, and will render proper accounts of the same to such head of Department until the property is returned.

U. S. GRANT, President United States.

and will render proper accounts of the same to such head of Department until the property is returned.

In pursuance of the foregoing order, the Secretary of War, by order dated March 16, 1875, detailed Capitan Joseph S. Comrad, Second United States Infantry, brivet colonel United States, Anny part of the Company of the by the Quartermaster's Department of the Army. By the system of marking adopted, each packing box was easily stored and reclaimed for reshipping the identical goods at the close of the exhibition. The boxing belonging to all the departments was taker charge of by Captain Rodgers and stored at the Philadelphia depot of the Quartermaster's Department, permission for the use of available warrhousing at the post having been kindly granted by the Scoretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General. All packages were unloaded directly from the cars into the building, a track having been especially laid for the purpose, and were placed in such positions as were most convenient to the persons in charge of installation in the several departments.

Each department was charged with the freight on its own materials, the freight bills being made out by Captain Rodgers and forwarded through the several representatives in the board to the chairman for payment.

The receipt of articles began at the building about January 1, 1876, and continued until the day of opening. The entire management of the transportation of materials and delivery on the floor of the building was confided to Captain Rodgers, to whose entire efficiency is due the fact that not an accident or delay occurred in the delivery of material properly consigned to him, and to whom is due in great part the promptness with which the Government building was enabled to be formally opened on the great opening day. His efforts have been of the greatest benefit to the board; and the system so successfully introduced and carried out by him has resulted in great savings of the various appropriations.

It was found in the system so successfully introduced and carried out by him has resulted in great savings of the various appropriations.

It was found in the fact has a successfully introduced and carried out by him has resulted in great savings of the various appropriations for the fred out by him has resulted in great savings of the various appropriatio good and efficient services rendered in guarding the Government property at the exhibition, and in otherwise advancing the interests of the governmental participation.

Between the members and attachés of this board and the president and other officers and members of the United States Centennial Commission, the president and other officers and members of the centennial board of finance, and the director-general and his assistants, the utmost cordiality and harmony prevailed throughout the exhibition; and this opportunity is availed of for placing on record the acknowledgments of this board for the generous assistance and the many acts of personal kindness of which they were the recipients at the hands of the entire exhibition authorities.

The great exhibition was formally closed on November 10, 1876, and the work of removal of the Governmentarticles was immediately begun. On the 17th of November, however, all packing and work of breaking up the collection in the building were stopped, and only such articles as were immediately needed by the Departments here and such as were liable to damage by remaining in the building were authorized to be removed. The reasons for this stoppage were communicated to Congress at the beginning of the present session, in the annual message of the President. As the expense of maintaining the articles at the Government building in Philadelphia until Congress could be able to act on the proposition of establishing a national museum in this city for their reception was found to be greater than the remnants of the appropriations of the board could bear they were, on 18th ultimo ordered to be transported to Washington and be there stored to await the action of Congress. They are now arriving, and are placed in such depositories as can be found available for the purpose.

All the buildings erected on the exhibition grounds by the Government have been sold as required by law. The main building will be delivered to the purchaser on March 1, 1877. The grounds assigned by the Centennial Com end. In conclusion, I beg to submit the conviction that the display made by our Government at the exhibition has had the most beneficial effect in vindicating our claims upon the respect of the nations of the world. Many objects that were shown in the Government display and much of the information that was disseminated would be of intense interest to the great body of people of other countries, whose means did not permit them to incur the expense of a journey to our shores. The great national advantages that will accrue from placing the practical exhibits, which demonstrate more particularly our national wealth and resources and the beneficence of our free institutions, under the observation of the people of Europe, who will assemble at the international exhibition at Paris in 1878, impels me to the recommendation that a suitable appropriation may be requested of Congress, with the view that the Governmental display may be so far reproduced at the Paris exhibition as the changed condition of circumstances and the exigencies of the case may require. may require.

S. C. LYFORD, Chairman of Board.

No further objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted. The reports are as follows:

MAJORITY REPORTS.

The special committee to investigate the recent election, and the action of the returning or canvassing board in the State of Louisiana in reference thereto, and to report all the facts essential to an honest return of the votes received by the electors of the said State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and to a fair understanding thereof by the people, respectfully submit the following report:

That at the late election in Louisiana the number of votes actually cast was 160,964, exceeding by 16,071 the number of votes cast at any previous election in said State, and, in proportion to population, exceeding the aggregate vote of all the States.

Of the votes actually cast for presidential electors, the Tilden electors (K. A. Cross, who had the highest number) had 83,817 votes; the Hayes electors (O. H. Brewster, who had the lowest number) had 76,178, being a democratic majority of 7,639 votes.

Of the votes cast at said election, as shown upon the face of the returns made to and received by the board of returning officers, the Tilden electors (W. A. Seay, who had the highest number) had 80,8.1 votes, and the Hayes electors (Lionel A. Sheldon, who had the lowest number) had 74,426 votes, being a democratic majority of

It has not been, nor will it be, questioned that the eighty-three housand and more of votes so actually cast for said K. A. Cross and other Tilden electors, being a majority, were cast by persons lawfully entitled to vote at said election.

The supervisors of registration and board of returning officers in said State have assumed, under various pretenses, to exclude from the returns and throw out from the count the votes cast at numerous polling-places, numbering, in the aggregate, 13,217 which were cast for the Tilden electors, and 2,412 for the Hayes electors. So it is that a majority of 7,639, received by the democratic electors, has been fabricated and counted into a majority of 3,437 for their opponents, and thus it is attempted to reverse the decision of the people, as made when their ballots were deposited.

Are there any existing facts, tested by the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Louisiana, by which the majority of nearly eight thousand votes given to one party has been or can be counted into a majority of nearly four thousand for the other, or is this the result of conspiracy and fraud?

To this inquiry your committee has chiefly directed its investigation, has heard witnesses, and taken documentary evidence, herewith reported.

Your committee was divided into subcommittees, as contemplated by the order of its appointment. These subcommittees have inquired into the facts as to the recent election and returns thereof in the parishes and localities where irregularities, frauds, and violence are alleged to have occurred. They were thus enabled to obtain the testimony of witnesses informed as to the facts about which they testified and ascertain to what degree of credit the witnesses testifying were severally entitled.

The subcommittees have reported the facts, ascertained and conclusions arrived.

erally entitled.

The subcommittees have reported the facts ascertained and conclusions arrived at by them. These reports are respectfully submitted as part of this report.

At the inception of the investigation it was directed to make, five members of your committee felt themselves obliged to protest against and deny to the House of Representatives "any jurisdiction to inquire into the late election in Louisiana for the purposes set forth in the resolution appointing this committee." And further they say of the board of returning officers: "This board has performed the duty with which they were charged by the law, and that duty is not merely ministerial, it is in the nature of a judicial proceeding; they have heard testimony, examined evidence, and rendered judgment. That judgment, under the laws of Louisiana, is from the tribunal of last resort, and from it no appeal lies, nor is there anywhere provided either the power or the means of re-examination; it is final and conclusive."

samined evidence, and rendered judgment. That judgment, under the laws of Louisiana, is from the tribunal of last resort, and from it no appeal lies, nor is there anywhere provided either the power or the means of re-examination; it is final and conclusive."

To this your committee find sufficient answer in the report made to the House by Messrs. Hoar, Wheeler, and Frye upon the condition of the South, in which they say:

"This is an erroneous view, both of the rights and the duties of the people of the United States under the Constitution. They have an interest in the question whether Senators and Kepresentatives for Louisiana, thrust into their seats by illegal means, shall sit in Congress to make laws for them, and whether electors, gaining their office in like manner, shall tarn the scale in the choice of a President of the United States."

The board of returning officers of Louisiana is believed to have exceeded its powers, and exercised arbitrarily, without color of law or basis of fact, extraordinary powers, in such a manner as to change a majority of nearly eight thousand votes given at the polls for the electors of one party to a majority of nearly four thousand for the other. If that "judgment" "is final and conclusive," the assembling of the people at the polls and the deposit of their votes will be henceforth an idle and useless ceremony. The duty of appointing presidential electors can hereafter be performed for Louisiana by four of her citizeus.

Your committee submit that no such power has been conferred upon the board of returning officers by the laws of Louisiana, nor could it be so conferred without destroying that republican form of government which it is the duty of the United States to assure to every State.

The constitution of Louisiana, article 73, vests judicial power in certain enumerated judicial tribunals, of which the board of returning officers is not one. Article 103 provides: "The privilege of free suffrage," to the right and the vote legally active the poll," and with it both th maintained

Having thus usurped power, it is but natural that it should abuse it, especially in the interests of those to whom it owes its existence. And so in turn we find the Louisiana State government striving to perpetuate federal power in the party which has prostituted it and is again expected to prostitute it in the overthrow of popular government in that State.

To justify themselves in the exercise of usurped power, those who administer the State government claim their administration to have been better than its predecessor. The claim is based upon the alleged reduction of the public debt and taxation. The reduction of the public debt was accomplished by "scaling" off, counting out, 40 per cent. by legislative ensetment. No distinction seems to have been made between that which was and that which was not justly owing in this process of payment by law; and what was professedly done in the interest of the State resulted in making good many bad claims, and greatly to the interest of favorites.

process of payment by law; and what was professedly done in the interest of favorites.

The reduction of taxes with which they credit themselves is the result not of any frugality of administration, but of the falling off of interest upon the 40 per cent. reduction of the debt, and by necessity following upon the wasted and exhausted resources of the people.

Depending wholly for its existence upon the National Government, the State government of Louisiana fluids profit in disorders and the appearance of disorders, because in these the National Government finds its only justification for its unhallowed work in establishing and maintaining the Louisiana usurpation.

Hence we find the same condition of lawlessness, peculation, and insecurity for life and property existing as reported by other committees of Congress.

Finding no redress for wrongs in a government too imbeeile and dishonest to enforce the law, redress is sought too often in its violation. Men naturally despair of legal remedies and the enforcement of law when those whose duty it is to administer and execute the law receive bribes to acquit or for pardon. As an illustration of this fact, your committee call attention to one of the numerous cases proven before it of official dereliction or corruption, or both. David Young, (colored.) State senator of Concordia Parish, whose presence was required at New Orleans at the meeting of the Packard legislature, had stolen or embezzled some $0.000 of school funds, and had been indicted for the offcuse. The people of the parish, not of his faction, but of both races, not trusting the district attorney, Austin, a creature of Governor Kellogg's, had employed counsel to prosecute Young. When the case was called the district attorney dismissed the prosecution. The counsel retained by the people protested against the action of the district attorney. He produced a dispatch from Governor Kellogg authorizing the dismissal. When Kellogg was interrogated as to the reason for his action, he produced the letter of Austin, the district attorney, as authority for his dispatch. Young escaped punishment, and voted for Kellogg for United States Senator.

It was shown by the testimony of many colored men that because of official acts such as this, and because their rights were violated without any effort on the part of their pretended friends to right their wrongs, they had, at the recent election, for the first time, voted against the republican party. They believed that whether the failure to execute the law and protect the weak resulted from want of power or of purpose on the part of the republican officials, the necessity for the change was alike urgent.

Long years of misgovernment, such as that which has existed in Louisiana, with the disorder growing out of and following upon the late war, left many reckless and evil-disposed persons in the State, who have little regard for the rights of white and still less for the rights of black men.

With exceptional cases, the better men of the democratic party had been driven away from political affairs, so long in the control of Louisiana republicans, as better men and great lawyers, with exceptional cases, are driven away from criminal courts—the suitors of the one and the participants of the other being, as a rule, of the same class.

Colored republicans being in the main excluded from any considerable power in the official control or direction of affairs, by reason of want of qualification, their allies, chiefly unscrupulous adventurers from the North, are left in the exclusive control and possession of the State and parish governments.

Such was the situation at the inauguration of the last campaign. The old cabal of republicans were nominated for office or left in control of the campaign. No amelioration of past misrule could be expected to result from its success; none was promised.

The better men of the democratic party, inspired by the hope of success which Such was the situation at the inauguration of the last campaign. The old cabal of republicans were nominated for office or left in control of the campaign. No amelioration of past misrule could be expected to result from its success; none was promised.

The better men of the democratic party, inspired by the hope of success which the misgovernment of their opponents afforded, by the high character for statesmanship of the nominees for President and Vice President, and by that aspiration for good government which all may cherish, took control and direction of the State convention, and afterward the direction of the canvass.

A State ticket was nominated, composed of men of the highest character. In accepting the nomination, Governor Nicholls counseled and advised peace, order, respect for and obedience to law. He gave the most solemn assurances to all the people that all their rights under the Constitution and all its amendments would be sacredly upbeld and maintained, and in this spirit the campaign was conducted.

These assurances were accepted as made in good faith from a man who commands the respect and confidence of the people in a degree which would enable him to enforce compliance. They were accepted as made in good faith, because, whatever else may have been said in crimination of the southern people, they have never been charged with the crime of falsehood. The representatives of those least inclined to accord to them any political virtues have been forced to accord them "the love and habit of truth, which becomes brave men." Colored men testified before your committee that in these assurances of Governor Nicholls was to be found the "first chance ever offered the colored people of Louisiana." Assurances thus given by Governor Nicholls, and the guarantees to be afforded by his success, all implicitly relied upon by men of both races, caused colored men to vote, for the first time, the democratic ticket. The number thus voting is believed to be correctly estimated at not less than 17,000

Headquarters Republican Party of Louisiana, Rooms Joint Committee on Canvassing and Registration, Mechanics' Institute, September 25, 1876.

Supervisor of Registration, parish of Assumption, Louisiana:

DEAR SIR: It is well known to this committee that, from examination of the census of 1875, the republican vote in your parish is 2,200, and the republican majority is 900.

You are expected to register and vote the full strength of the republican party in your parish.

Your recognition by the next State administration will depend upon your doing your full duty in the premises, and you will not be held to have done your full duty unless the republican registration in your parish reaches 2,200, and the republican vote is at least 2,100.

vote is at least 2.100.

All local candidates and committees are directed to aid you to the utmost in obtaining the result, and every facility is and will be afforded you; but you must obtain the results called for herein without fail. Once obtained, your recognition will be ample and generous.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. J. M. A. JEWETT, Secretary.

Here the officers of the law, republicans in Louisiana, are advised, from the source to which they owe their positions, that the census shows number of votes (being, of course, number of colored voters) which must vote the republican ticket; that he, the officer, must see to it that the party gets the full vote and the required majority; that local candidates will help him (the officer) to get the votes and the majorities; that every facility will be afforded him, (the officer) but he must obtain the result called for by the census without fail; that his (the officer) but he secognition by next State administration (Packard's) depends upon his obtaining the demanded republican majorities; and that, "once obtained," his recognition will be "ample and generous."

The same fraudulent purpose disclosed in the claim of excessive colored population and voters, resulting from the fictitious census of 1875, was followed up in the registration. This will be made to appear by reference to the registration or a single parish. In the parish of Orleans, by the republican census of 1875, a white increase in the five years of less than four per cent. For the same time, 50, 436 colored population produces 57,647, an increase of fourteen per cent. With this 57,647 colored population, the republican officials were enabled to register 23,485 colored voters, one voter to every two persons in the city. Of the 23,485 registered, the republicans, with all the election machinery, which they did not scruple to use, could only vote 13,000, less by 10,000 than their colored registration, and thus it is shown that in this parish alone so much (10,000) of the fraudulent excess is accounted for and established. An examination of the facts as to the country parishes discloses like frandulent estimates and registration.

The entire control and conduct of the election is by the election law saved to the State administration. The governor appoints a supervisor of registration for each parish outside of Orleans and one for each ward of that parish. For the last election many of them were appointed from policemen, custom-house employés, and men of the most disreputable character—so disreputable that even flovernor Kellogg discovned their appointments, and claimed that they were made by Lieu enant-Governor Antoine in Kellogg is absence. Officers of this character were sent from New Orleans to conduct and control the elections in the interior parishes, entering them for the first time as officers to conduct elections, with instructions to register and vote the full strength of the republican party, based upon a frandulent estimate of that strength and with a promise that when they have done this their reward should be "ample and generous."

These supervisors appoint the commissioners to hold the elections, and establish as many, and no more, polling-places than their party interests dictate.

The voter may deposit his ballot at any box in his parish on presentation of his certificate of registration not indorsed voted. All that is necessary to enable the enthusiastic republican in Louisiana to vote a number of times equal to the number of polls of his parish is that the supervisor sent from New Orleans, or, as in some cases, from Mississippi or Alabama, shall furnish an equal number of certificates of registration. There was much voting of this kind at the late election.

The United States marshal appointed and paid out of the United States Treasury eight hundred and forty deputy United States marshals for the parish it has cleated by the property of the parish of the first party and the property of the pace and in the interest of a fair election, if the marshal is to be elieved. The character o he expended a nominal sum upon the work and appropriated the remainder to his own use.

Kenner, (colored.) another member of the returning board, was indicted for larceny, secured a dismissal of the prosecution after admission of his guilt, and was promptly made a member of the returning board.

Cassanave, (colored.) the fourth member of the board, is too ignorant to be well informed of the nature of the work he was required to do, but exhibited in his testimony such indifference to the obligations of an oath as warrants the conclusion that he would be a willing accomplice in any rascality by which he might profit. The services of a board so composed was invoked to undo the will off the people of Louisiana as declared at the ballot-box. Other committees of Congress have advised us how this board has changed the results of previous elections.

Re-enforced by the presence of a military force greatly angmented for the occasion, and encouraged by the presence of many gentlemen of the North, summoned by the President from his partisans to witness a "fair count," this unfair tribunal entered upon its nefarious work.

The election law of Louisiana provides "that five persons, to be selected from all political parties, shall constitute the board of returning officera," and that vacancies in the board shall be filled by the residue of its members. One vacancy existed, the four members being all republicans. At the inception of the canvas of votes, counsel representing candidates of the democratic party asked that this vacancy might be filled with a member of that party; which lawful and reasonable request was refused.

The wittersing committees a selected by the President heaving refused to committees of the count. was refused.

was refused.

The witnessing committee so selected by the President having refused to co-operate with a committee of their political opponents in an effort to have the vacancy in said board filled and in other efforts to see that the board of canvassers made a fair count of the vote actually cast, the United States marshal sent the following disparch to the administration United States Senator of Louisiana:

NEW ORLEANS, November 17, 1876.

Hon. J. R. WEST, Washington, D. C .:

Louisiana is safe. Our northern friends stand firmly by us. The returning board will hold its own.

With all the members, clerks, and employés of the board of the same political party, the refusal of the board to fill the vacancy, thereby denying to "all parties" a representation as the law provides, the conclusion is inevitable that the board of returning officers entered upon the canvass and compilation with a fraudulent purpose, which a political opponent on the board might detect.

The board entered upon its duty of canvassing and compiling the vote with a purpose to change the result of the election in Louisiana by throwing out a sufficient number of parishes and polls for that purpose. Previous to its first meeting, the following dispatch passed over the wires from the atorney of the board:

NEW ORLEANS, November 16, 1876.

NEW ORLEANS, November 16, 1876.

Hon. J. R. WEST, Washington, D. C.:

Returns to date leave us majority, throwing out five parishes.

During the session of the returning board witnesses exceeding the number of three hundred were summoned to New Orleans by the United States marshal, at a cost of $10,800 for witness fees, paid by the United States. Witnesses testifying were generally unknown to the officers by whom the oath was administered to them, nor was their identity proven to such officers. The affidavits and other testimony were prepared by United States soldiers and Government employés detailed for the purpose by the direction of Ex-United States Marshal Packard, and republican capididate for governor. Testimony of this character thus obtained was made the alleged basis of the action of the returning board.

The board made rulings and changed them from time to time, denying the democratic counsel a reasonable opportunity to present their case. It increased the vote of the Hayes electors in Natchitoches Parish on the return of the United States supervisor, and rejected the return of the United States supervisor, and rejected the return of the United States supervisor of Grant Parish, which parish gave the Tilieu electors a majority. It sent for the boxes and increased the Hayes vote in Concordia Parish. It refused to count the vote or send for boxes in New Orleads, where the Tilden electors had majorities, and where republican supervisors excluded polls from their compiled statements. It refused to allow proof offered that what purported to be the compiled statements. It refused to allow proof offered that what purported to be the compiled statement and return from East Baton Ronge Parish was fabricated and fraudulent, and the president of the board reproved the counsel for making the offer of proof.

The rejection of the five parishes against which its judgment had been predetermined being insufficient to change the result in the State, it rendered judgment against parts of eighteen others with the same facility as against the five first determined upon for rejection. Of the parishes and polls rejected every one gave the Tildeu electors a majority. Of the parishes and polls rejected every one gave the Tildeu electors a majorities.

The members of the returning board, on oath, severally declared before your committee that they did not know the result for and counted in against protests, all gave Hayes electors majorities.

The members of the returns made to them, nor how the canvass and compilation made by them affected the result. And though they severally testified falsely to the contrary, the result of their pretended canvass and compilation was determined upon by them and made known to their political accomplices three days before their pretended compilation was completed.

Inspection of the records and returns of the election having been denied to your committee, it is not fully advised by what alteration or destruction of records and returns changes in the result of the election may have been effected. But it is shown, by the testimony of one of the election may have been effected. But it is shown, by the testimony of one of the election may have been effected. But it is shown, by the testimony of one of the election may have been effected. But it is shown, by the testimony of one of the election may have been effected. But it is shown, by the testimony of the others but two votes each; that other fraudulent changes of the votes affecting the result in said parish were made; and that, by the direction of the president of said board, some of the papers pertaining to returns of said parish were destroyed, others defaced by crasures and changed, and still others fabricated.

This testimony is confirmed by the fact that 178 votes were, in fact, given by the board to the Hayes electors, which they did not receive; by the action of two persons, a member of the legislature and a district attorney, surrendering the offices to which the board had elected them, by fictitions and fraudulent compilation; by the absence from the copy of returns from said parish, furnished your committee by said board, of certain papers pertaining thereto; by testimony establishing the fact that no such persons as Sam'l (his x) Collins and Tom (his x) Brown, upon whose afflavits two polls of said parish, as alleged to have been rejected, reside in said parish, as alleged in such afflavits two persons, and afflavits twe have been rejected, reside in said parish, as alleged in such a nave we discovered a new mode or carrying elections and discovering the popular will.

In the consideration of this question of intimidation of voters in Louisiana your committee apply to this unfortunate State the same principles which would be recognized in any other State. If in any State which has been free from the evils with which Louisiana has been afflicted such a case was presented as that of East Feliciana, we would not for an instant entertain the assumption that the body of the voters therein should be deprived of their voice under any allegation of intimidation when it was clear that the party to be benefited by the suppression of the vote had by systematic organization, counsel to the intelligent, and instruction to the ignorant, kept the minority from the polls with fraudulent intent.

It is not denied that upon proper proof of the procurement of a majority by intimidation, the interests of society and the State, as well as the decisions of the courts, require that such election shall be setaside or that the party or person guilty of the act should not profit by the fraud. But no justly-constituted tribunal will admit of mere vague allegations in setting forth a charge of intimidation as the controlling canse in a voter's absence from the polls. Even the law in Louisiana requires that intimidation, to be ground for rejecting votes, shall be officially reported in due season, &c.

Where universal suffrage prevails, and is to prevail, the power to vote is coupled with the duty of voting. In the exercise of this high privilege each voter will gnard his right jealously, assert it fearlessly, and not surrender it except when compelled by irresistible force.

But mere apprehension of danger, fear of personal safety, or timidity will not excuse a freeman from the duty of exercising his prerogative, nor furnish cause for setting aside an election to be carried by such default. The measure of force or intimidation, which, by the rules in the earlier cases, would justify absence from the polls as a ground for contest, was defined in the contested election between the delegates from Michigan Territory. The report of the House committee says: "The committee will not inquire whether persons have been prevented from voting by fear, nor will they examine into cases which have prevented a candidate from receiving the highest number of votes." (Biddle and Richards ss. Wing, Contested Elections from 1789 to 1824, pags 504.) Again: "To invalidate an election for intimidation at the polls, there must be such a display of force as would intimidate men of ordinary firmness." (Harrison rs. Davis, 2 Congressional Election Cases, page 341; Bruce vs. Loan, ibid., 482.)

There is no pretense that there was in this parish of East Feliciana, or any other, any display of force at the polls. The fact that there was no riot or bloodshed in any locality, no force, intimidation, or violence in any parish in Louisiana where both parties voted, gives strong presumption that there was no valid excuse for the republican voters in absenting themselves from the polls, but that they were purposely kept away to subserve partisan ends. This act being their own, and the voters not being deterred from voting by actual apprehension, but by frandulent collusion and failure on their own part to assert their right to vote, they should not profit by it. The vote of East Feliciana as polled should stand as a rebuke to the subterfuge by report the ground of intimidation, under color of laws enacted for such a contingency.

Your committee conceive that the means by which the large number of colored votes were secured for the democratic ticket at the late election were not such as can be rightfully or legally characterized as intimidation. They were, when stripped of the false presentation made of them by the knavery of those who are to profit by the success of their scheme, no more than such as are resorted to in all the cities and States of this Union at every election in which large public interest is elicited.

stripped of the false presentation made of them by the knavery of those who are to profit by the success of their scheme, no more than such as are resorted to in all the cities and States of this Union at every election in which large public interest is elicited.

The very first element of the organization of voters into parties consists in the assertion of each that it will better promote the security and prosperity of the people than any other. Few men form their political alliances upon mere above the people than any other. Few men form their political alliances upon mere above the people, especially the more dependent, act with one party or the other as they think its principles or policy will best subserve their welfare. In the wealthiest and most law-abiding communities in the older States it is a well-known fact that capital has a preponderating influence in directing the political sentiment. Not that voters are bought outright, but that the employer is always more or less dictatorial toward the employed, and, when the issue of a pending election is vital to their interests, they leave untried no element of persuasion short of force which will secure the votes of employés.

Intimidations, from a gentle hint to a positive announcement that no one voting against the ticket favored by the employer will be retained in his service, are too often used to control votes. The local political influence of contractors for public works, mill-owners, mining proprietors, and all men employing large numbers of voters, is estimated by the number of men employed by them, extending even to the Government work-shops, navy-yards, &c.

With the alternative of a discharge from s-rvice, the laborer with a family to support finds it to his interest to cast his vote for the party sustained by his employer, and if this were regarded as such intimidation as would annul an election, but few would ever stand the test of regularity—not one the test of the Louisiana returning beard, unless it gave a republican majority.

trary, there is no people more inclined to the cultivation of possess and for profit.

The increase of white population brought with it corresponding increase in the number of blacks, who, prior to the war, were either brought from the older slave States by those who held them to service, or were taken from the border States, where slave labor had become less profitable. Some of the blacks thus imported were criminals, who, in lieu of punishment for crimes less than murder, were sold in the far South. Hence it should create no surprise that there have been many crimes and excesses committed on the part of the blacks.

When the late war began the population of Louisiana was nearly equally divided between the races. The white race had absolute control of the black, and were in between the races. The white race had absolute control of the black, and were in turn looked to for protection and support. The sudden emancipation of so large an element, long inured to slavery, and suprepared for rational freedom, operated with severity not only upon their impoverished former owners, to whom they had been both labor and capital, but with great hardship upon the blacks themselves. Accustomed to have their wants supplied by others, they were suddenly thrown upon their own resources, and, without education or capital, they became at once the prey of unscripulous adventurers and the victims of all the ills incident to so great a revolution in their condition. Their former owner retained generally the landed estate; but without capital he was not prepared at the close of the war to plant profitably.

With the enancipation and enfranchisement of the colored man, and the disfranchisement of his former master, a field was presented for outrage under the form of law, which was soon occupied by men who sought the State only for the purpose of temporary plunder. These were aided in some instances by southern men of influence, who were tempted to dishonor by the greed of wealth. The blacks, by adroit arguments addressed to their passions or their fears, were led to ounfile in the sincerity of their new friends; were taught to avoid and sever relations with their former masters, and led to hope and bolieve that under the guidance of these disinterested counselors they would soon become landed proprietors without labor, receive educations without study, and be admitted into social as well as civil and political equality with the whites. For some years they blindly followed the dictation of their guides. They voted en massa as directed, but saw in the progress of time that while their leaders were amassing wealth and rioting in illootton gains, they were keeping pace in poverty with their former masters. To these in all matters of real concern for their welfare they could alone look for bearing the proper t any organized acuton for which the democratic party in Louisiana can be ned responsible.

weighing the alleged evidences of lawlessness as connected with the election, must bear in mind the lamentably unsettled condition of the State from long maladministration of its laws.

Such was the laxity of the law's administration that throughout the State judicial tribunals became a mockery. The violation of law incurred no penalty; the law gave no guarantee for the security of life or property. Murderers and thieves were in large numbers permitted to go unpunished. In many instances where the punishment was decreed the pardon of the executive turned loose the criminals. No effort seems to have been made to suppress disorders. Upon these the men in power chiefly depended for their continuance in office. Testimony heard by the committee establishes the fact that prominent republicans considered the killing of a black man in Louisiana as equivalent to fifty thousand dollars of a campaign fund for the party; hence the absence of effort to secure peace and good government upon the part of a partisan judiciary and a foreign executive, whose induction into office was described as the embodiment of the most glaring political frauds. Every homicide in which a colored man chanced to be the victim was seized upon with avidity, telegraphed over the North, and reckoned a substantial addition to their party strength.

In such a condition of affairs the natural and inevitable result was that the citizens, especially property-holders, felt the necessity of organizing for mutual protection. Hence the vigilance committees, regulators, and other like organizations that have at different portions of the State. That these organizations had ever any political complexion was due to the fact that whenever any criminal became the object of punishment by them he would naturally seek the protection of Louisiana republicans, and claim to be the victim of political persecution.

To these organizations alone could the citizen look for protection to person or any criminal became the object of punishment by them he would naturally seek the protection of Louisiana republicans, and claim to be the victim of political persecution.

To these organizations alone could the citizen look for protection to person or property, or the suppression of crime. It is not to be denied that such organizations, springing from dire necessity and existing outside of law, too often aggravated the evils they were designed to correct. There are, doubtless, many instances in which their conduct cannot be defended; yet the testimony affords convincing proof of the patience, endurance, and heroism of this people. Denied, practically, all voice in the conduct of their own affairs; robbed of even the semblance of self-government; subjected for a time to the harsh usage of a military ruler, and that domination only exchanged for the more humiliating array of the wretched adventurer who came among them to feed upon their misfortune, they have borne the most oppressive rates of taxation and the most thorough practice of official peculation and plunder. They have been forced to witness the subordination of intelligence to ignorance, of virtue to vice, and of fair dealing to frand. All this they have seen done under the forms and in the name of the law. Shall we wonder that a proud people, thus goaded and outraged, should become thoroughly aroused to the necessity of freeing themselves from the grasp of those who have been upheld in oppressing by their exactions and cursing by their presence the people of Louisiana.

It does not appear from the testimony that the armed organization was inteaded for any notitical purpose or their membership confined to any notitical purpose or their membership confined to any notitical purpose or their membership confined to any notitical party.

It does not appear from the testimony that the armed organization was intended for any political purpose, or their membership confined to any political party.

Property-holders and good citizens generally furnished the members. Gen. J. R. Brooke, one of the principal republican witnesses, testified that the "regulators" included nearly the whole white population, and all of the most reputable. Not only were republicans often members of these bands, but in many instances the captains or chief officers. We have, for illustration, the case of Furnace Martin, member of the Packard legislature, a republican declared elected by the returning board against the returns showing the election of his opponent by a majority of several hundred. The testimony taken in the presence of this person, and not contradicted by him, established the fact that he was the chief officer of the regulators not only of his parish but of a district of country embracing three parishes. Nor were the acts of violence heralded to the country confined to any political or ganization, as shown in the case of Pierce C. Butler, a leading republican in the parish of East Feliciana, who is proven to have shot twenty-three men, some of them fatally.

Finally, we submit that if violence and intimidation are to be held to be grounds for excluding votes in Louisiana, the republican party should be held to an accountability for the instances without number, as developed by testimony, in which it was practiced by them against the inoffensive colored men, whose only crime was unwillingness to submit to the dictation of their leaders. Not only were democratic colored clubs broken up and forcibly dispersed, but social proscription was brought to bear, marital relations were sacrificed, the rights of baptism and communion denied, colored men corralled in cattle-pens by the hundred, marched to the polls by armed guards, and forced to vote the open republican ticket; churches burned because the pastors refused to preach Louisiana republicanism from their pulpits; personal chastisement inflicted until democracy was adjured by the unfortunate victims, and murders out ight perpetrated for no other reason than the making of reason than the making of democratic speeches. That exceptional acts of violence may be found chargeable to the democratic organization we shall not undertake to party is not at least equally guilty, while for that condition of asciety which rendered resort to such means possible we submit that that organization is wholly responsible.

In the late canvass the policies pursued by the two parties were essentially different. The republicans do not appear to have made any strenous efforts to believed on the part of all of them because of their love of order, but for productil reasons also, knowing that any violence or disturbance would be selzed upon as a pretext for reversing the action of the people at the polis, did connect they only hope to succeed. The interests of the republican party lay in the directive of the production of the people at the polis, did connect they only hope to succeed. The interests of the republican party lay in the directive of the production of the people at the polis, did connect to the means to be employed.

The law in pursuance of which the board of returning officers assumed to change the result of the election for presidential electors, as shown by the returns made to and received by said board, is found in Laws of Louisiana, act No. 98 of "Sice. 2. Re of further menced. de., This five persons, to be elected by the Senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, and have power to make the returns of all elections. By section 26 it is necessary that such "statement" should specify the time when the incident complained of in the statement transpired, whether on the day of election or on a day preceding the election, and if so, on what day; that it should be a clear and specify statement of "all the facts relating" to the acts complained of, and specify "the number of qualified electors deterred" by such transaction from registering or voting. It is also required that this statement should be "corroborated under oath by three respectable witnesses, qualified electors of the parish," and that a copy of said statement should be so annexed to the "returns of elections by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance, that the same can be kept together." If any one of the required specifications is omitted from the statement, it is the emission of a material fact upon which jurisdiction depends, and without which jurisdiction cannot be exercised; and any order, judgment, mandate, or counting out made under such circumstances would be a nullity. In such case it is not necessary to go behind the record and impeach it by outside facts. The record impeaches itself on its face and proclaims its own invalidity. Neither would we in such a case undertake to examine into the facts upon which judgment had been founded to determine whether that judgment was correct or erroneous, because we would be arrested at the first step of our progress by the evidence furnished on the face of the record, showing that it was no record under the law, and that the judgment was no judgment, because rendered without jurisdiction in the premises.

In the case of the board of returning officers there were no statements or protests at all, as required by said sections 3, 26, and 43 of said act, sent up to the returning board from the various parishes and polls. The board therefore had no right under the laws of Louisiana to throw out or count out the polls and votes they have thrown out and counted out, and their action in that behalf is without suthority of law, a in law, even had any of the electors on said ticket been elected by the people, as they were not.

The filling of such vacancies was without authority of law, and conferred no right upon Brewster or Levissee to vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

Your committee made only such investigation or inquiry into the election and canvass of votes for State officers in Louisiana as was incidental to the inquiry as to the general fairness of the election in said State and the result thereof.

The testimony taken discloses the fact that, by both the votes actually cast and the votes as forwarded to and received by the board of returning officers, Nicholls was elected governor of Louisiana by a majority approximating majorities received by the Tilden electors; and, freed from the conditions growing out of the presidential contest, he would be accepted as the duly-elected governor of Louisiana by the almost universal acclaim of her people.

Your committee therefore report the following resolution, and recommend its adoption:

Your committee therefore report the following resolution, and recommend the adoption:

Resolved, That the democratic electors received a majority of the votes actually and legally cast at the recent election in Louisiana; that the pretended canvass and compilation of the vote for electors by the board of returning officers was without authority of law, fraudulent, and void; and that the vote of that State cannot be counted for Messrs. Hayes and Wheeler without the confirmation and approval of the illegal and fraudulent action of said returning board.

MAJORITY REPORTS OF SUBCOMMITTEES.

To the Hon. WILLAM R. Morrison,

Ohoirman of the Special Committee appointed under a resolution of the Heuse of Representatives to investigate the questions connected with the recent election in the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, a subcommittee to whom was referred the consideration of the parishes of Iberia, La Fayette, La Fourche, Livingston, Plaquemines, Saint Landry, and Tangipahoa, submit the following report, together with the accompanying testimony applicable to the same, being all the testimony taken with reference to said parishes.

JO. C. S. BLACKBURN, Chairman of the Subcommittee, J. PHELPS.

WASHINGTON, January 23, 1877.

PARISH OF IBERIA.

In this parish, poll 4 was excluded by the returning board without protest, and upon a mere memorandum by the supervisor, a republican, made upon his returns to the board that at this poll the commissioners of election did not indorse on the registration certificate of each man as he voted the words and figures "Voted November 7, 1876." The memorandum was not sworn to by him, nor corroborated by the eath of any citizen. This is much the strongest democratic poll in the parish, and the only one excluded, and at the late election 333 votes were cast at it, of which only 11 were by republicans. The misconduct or neglect of the commissioners was noticed and complained of between nine and ten o'clock in the morning, at which time more than 100 persons had probably voted, and they then commenced and afterward continued to make the proper indorsement on the certificates, but all the votes were excluded. The colored republicans living in the vicinity of that poll were instructed before the election to vote at other polls, and nearly all complied. No question was made but that the voting was fair and the count accurate, and no claim that the ballots found in the box did not truly represent and honestly express the free opinions and choice of the electors.

The provision requiring the commissioners of election at each poll to indorse, in the manner above mentioned, the certificate of each person voting, is merely directory, and designed as one of several checks prescribed by law upon frandulent voting. Another, and equally effectual, check is the taking and prescrving a list of the names of all the persons who vote, the aggregate of which should correspond in number with the ballots in the box. It is presumed the law in this respect was complied with, and it will hardly be contended that, under the ctroumstances, the returning board could properly deprive a large number of electors of their votes for no neglect or fault of their own, and for a cause arising entirely from the wrongful act or omission of commissioners appointed by the supervisor.

There was no violence or intimidation practiced by democrats during the canvass, registration, or election, but there was whipping and other violence committed on colored democrats by colored republicans. Some colored men voted the democratic ticket, and many others who would have freely done so were prevented. About two years since a colored man was murdered for making democratic speeches, and about eighteen months since a colored minister's church was burned because he refused to preach republicanism.

The registration in this parish was greatly swollen by the addition of fraudulent names, and the vote at the late election was considerably in excess of the total registration of 1874. The parish has been heretofore generally democratic by a small majority, and if poll 4 had been counted the republican majority, as promulgated by the returning board, would still have been nearly 200; a result which cannot be satisfactorily accounted for upon existing facts, except upon the theory that a considerable number of votes was improperly cast under an illegal registration.

PARISH OF LA FAYETTE.

In this parish, polls 1 and 2 were not included by the supervisor in his statement satisfactorily accounted for upon existing facts, except upon the theory that a considerable number of votes was improperly cast under an illegal registration.

PARISH OF LA FATETEE.

In this parish, pells 1 and 2 were not included by the supervisor in his statement to the returning board. Pell 3 was returned by him, but excluded by the board, on the alleged ground of intimidation. But seven republicans voted at those three polls, and the democratic majority cast at them was 511. The small number of republican votes is explained by the fact that the republican voters who usually attended those polls are nearly all colored, and were, for some unexplained reason, advised by their party managers to go to other polls.

The supervisor of the parish is J. A. Veazey, a republican. He is a creele, and understands the Euglish language imperfectly. The commissioners of election whom he appointed at those polls were all democrats, because he could find no republicans in the wards in which they were located competent to discharge the duties. He was himself unable to properly compile and make up his returns, and procured a very intelligent and respectable gentleman, by the name of Clegg, an attorney and democrat, to do it for him. In this compilation he ordered all the polls in the parish to be included, and stated to Mr. Clegg at the time that he knew of no fraud, intimidation, or violence in the parish, and that he believed the registration and election had been free, fair, full, and peaceable. He then intended to deliver that compilation to the returning board without protest or objection, but was subsequently advised and induced, by leading men in his party, to suppressit and make another, omitting polls I and 2, and to protest against their allowance on the ground of intimidation. Another compilation was prepared for him by the supervisor of a neighboring parish, which did not contain those polls, and which, with his protest and several accompanying the report of Senator Siterman and had never declared that he bad; tha

PARISH OF LA FOURCHE.

In this parish, polls 2 and 10 were not compiled by the supervisor, and are not included in his statement to the returning board, and consequently were not counted. No box for poll 1 was furnished by the sheriff, and therefore the vote at poll 2 was largely increased. Two of the three commissioners were colored republicans, the other a democrat. The democratic commissioner was unfamiliar with the English language, and one of the republicans could neither read nor write, consequently all the writing required to carry on the election at that poll devolved on one commissioner. He worked faithfully, with such assistance as the others could render, but was unable to count the votes, make up the returns, and deliver them to the supervisor at the parish seat, twenty-five miles distant, within twenty-four hours after the closing of the poll. The commissioners arrived at the count-house about nine o'clock in the evening, but could not find the supervisor until the next morning, when they gave him the returns at an early hour. He returning board because the commissioners had not delivered them in season.

The law, in its requirement that the commissioners of election for each poll shall deliver the returns to the parish supervisor within twenty-four hours after the closing of the poll at 6 o'clock in the evening of the day of the election, is simply declaratory. This is sometimes a physical impossibility, because, in some instances, the polling places are nearly fifty miles distant from the parish seat, to which there is no public conveyance. In many other cases the returns were not delivered in time, and the returning board, with knowledge of the fact, allowed the votes. A supervisor has no right, under the law, to omit in his compilation any polls returned to him, and if he does os his conduct is arbitrary and unlawful. The number of votes cast at this poll was 242, and the majority for the democratic ticket was 38.

At poll 10 the commissioners were all republicans, but were unaccustomed to was 38.

At poll 10 the commissioners were all republicans, but were unaccustomed to clerical work, and allowed one O'Sullivan, a democratic United States supervisor, to conduct the election. The irregularities at the poll were so many and great as to vitiate the election. No return of the poll was made to the supervisor, and he did right in omitting it in his compilation. The democratic majority was 127. The loss of the poll is chargeable to the inefficiency and incompetency of the commissioners, and the supervisor is justly censurable for appointing such palpably unqualified officials to discharge an important public duty.

The supervisor of the parish was M. A. Ledet, a republican, who was appointed to succeed A. Pavella, also a republican, who was requested by the republican parish committee to resign after he had partially completed the registration, for the alleged reason that they suspected he would be untrue to the interests of the party. After his appointment Ledet declared he would so register the parish as to carry it for the republicans, regardless of what the real vote should be, and that the consideration of his doing it was the expectation of the appointment of parish tax collector. He first located fifteen of the twenty-two polls at negro quarters, off the public road, so as to give an advantage to the colored voters, and changed them subsequently only at the urgent remonstrance of the democratic committee, and one poll casting 86 votes, all by colored republicans, was not, in fact, changed. At two-thirds of the polls in the parish the commissioners were all republicans, and many of them members of the republican parish and campaign committees; all active partisans and some of them candidates. In two instances, prominent democrats, who employed a large number of colored laborers, were appointed commissioners at polls ifteen and twenty-five miles from their residences, though other polls were located near where they resided; and, although he nominally appointed one democratic commissioner out of three at each poll, he did it in most instances in such a manner as to insure their declination to serve, and the substitution of republicans in their places.

In making up the registration many names of persons who had become non-residents, others of those who had died, and still others of minors and convicts, were retained or placed upon the list, by which it was fraudulently cularged. The supervisor was requested by the democratic committee to erase those names, and refused, and 74 republican votes were illegally cast on them, and twenty-two other republicans voted twice under such fraudulent registration. His character for

PARISH OF LIVINGSTON.

In this parish polls 2, 3, 4, and 8, all unanimously democratic on the national and State tickets, and giving in the aggregate 378 votes, were excluded by the returning board, with no protest from the supervisor, who is a republican, and solely on testimony, alleging fraud and intimidation, taken by the procurement of James M. Davidson some time after the supervisor had made his return. Davidson made the principal affidavit, which was filled with false and perjured statements, and his reputation for veracity was thoroughly impeached. Those who were induced to become witnesses were summoned to New Orleans, and exparts affidavits were first given in the office of the collector and a United States commissioner, in the custom-house building, which were written out by the clerks and employes in those offices. Some of them were re-examined several days afterward at the same rooms, upon direct and cross interrogatories, and their answers written down by the same person or class of persons who wrote their affidavits, which appear on pages 483 to 510, inclusive, in the document accompanying the report to the President by Senator Sherman and others. Messrs. Simms, Rogers, Bailey, and McIntyre, who, next to Davidson, were the persons who made the principal affidavits, were examined by the committee, and stated that their affidavits and testimony, as published in that document, were materially different from what was read, or pretended to be read, to them, and was a material misrepresentation of the facts and of their testimony as they gave it; and the declaration of Hoover, another affinat, was proved to the same effect. In addition to this, the specific material statements contained in all the affidavits were generally distinctly disproved or substantially explained away, and many of them by the testimony of the supervisor himself.

There had been considerable violence and disturbance in the parish for several months preceding the election, but it was wholly disconnected from politics, and indiscriminately directed again sometimes even in hanging, though such extreme cases were few and exceptional, unless for very flagrant cause.

There were also sundry other acts of unjustifiable mischief by young men and boys, which could be traced to no particular cause; one instance of which was firing several shots in the evening against a colored church while a prayer-meeting was being held, one of which shots passed through the wall of the building and seriously disturbed the congregation.

While this violence does not seem to have had any political origin or object, it tended to and did produce a feeling of uneasiness and alarm in the minds of some of the colored people, who were apprehensive of trouble, with no intelligent understanding how or why it was to happen, and it doubtless deterred some of them from voting. There was, in fact, during the canvass, with the exception of a few anonymous notices to republicans not to hold political meetings, no fraud, violence, or intimidation of a political character; and the registration and election were substantially free, fair, full, and peaceable; and the votes cast at those polls were excluded by means of perjured and perverted-testimony used before the returning board.

excluded by means of perjured and perverted-testimony used before the returning board.

The votes at all the excluded polls were properly counted, voting lists, tally-sheets, and duplicates properly made, registration certificates properly indorsed at time of voting, commissioners duly appointed and sworn, returns duly attested, boxes legally scaled and delivered in time to the clerk of the court, with the exception that at poll 8, which was held in the open air, the box was removed at the close of the voting, on account of the cold and wind, and the difficulty of keeping a light burning, to the nearest comfortable and convenient shelter, which was some two hundred and fifty yards distant, where the votes were accurately counted. The supervisor had no office at the parish seat, as the law requires, and was not there in person, and had no clerk there to receive the returns; and the commissioners from all the polls in the parish were for that reason unable to deliver the returns until the evening of the second day after the election; but the supervisor then received them without protest or objection, and they were not excluded by the returning board for any informality.

At some of the polls a considerable number of colored men freely voted the democratic ticket.

PARISH OF PLAQUEMINES.

PARISH OF PLAQUEMINES.

The supervisor of this parish was R. P. Edgeworth, a republican. He was not a resident of the parish, and was therefore illegally appointed. O'Donnell, one of his clerks, was also a non-resident, and the republican candidate for parish clerk, and declared elected, but is ineligible for the same reason. Edgeworth is a man of very bad character, and has been indicted for forgery, and was, at a former election, charged with fraudulent practices. By his revision of the parish registration the colored voters number 2,446, an addition to the colored registration of the year 1874 of nearly 600. There has been some increase of the colored laboring population by the enlarged developmen of the sugar-planting interest, but nothing to justify so large an increase in the registration, admitting that of 1874 to have been correct, which was not the case. In the revision of 1872 and the new registration of 1874 the number of colored voters enrolled was greatly in excess of the trae number, and several hundred fraudulent certificates were issued and voted on in the interest of the republican party, a large part of which were outstanding and in the possession of a republican candidate for a parish office in the late election, and many of these fraudulent names were retained by Edgeworth on the register. The parish is one hundred miles in length, and during the period of registration the supervisor spent most of his time in the north part, where the colored voters mostly reside, and gave the white voters, who reside mainly in the south part, unequal and insufficient facilities to ascertain whether they were enrolled, and to obtain new certificates if necessary, and many were in that way deprived of the opportunity insincent iscilities to accessing, and many were in that way deprived of the opportunity to vote.

The location of some polling places was changed without notice, after being established by him, and of the establishment and location of the Rockville and Oakville polls no notice was given.

At a poll in ward 3 all the commissioners were republicans and negroes, and at the close of the polls the box was removed on account of the cold, and from the fact that no fire could be made where it was held, to a building owned by the father of the republican candidate for clerk of the court, and the votes were there counted. Three hundred and ninety-eight votes were found in the box, of which 377 were for the republican ticket. From 100 to 130 of the republican tickets lay in the bottom of the box, clean and smooth, and neatly folded, all of which had been frandulently deposited, and the number of votes counted was many more than that marked upon the printed parish list. No voting list was kept, and there was nothing by which the accuracy of the count could be verified. The return was written by D. A. Thibaut, republican candidate for clerk of the court, and not by the commissioners.

At the Rockville poll all the commissioners were republicans and negroes, and written by D. A. Thibaut, republican candidate for clerk of the court, and not by the commissioners.

At the Rockville poll all the commissioners were republicans and negroes, and no voting list was kept. One hundred and fourteen votes were counted from the box, of which 108 were for the republican ticket. There were not more than 30 votes legally cast at that poll.

At a poll in ward 9 no voting list was made and kept, and the box was removed before counting of the votes. Two hundred and twenty-seven votes were cast, of which 180 were for the republican ticket and 47 for the democratic. Seven republican votes were illegally counted, which had been cast by persons whose names were not on the register.

There were several other polls at which the commissioners were all republicans, and some of the commissioners in the parish were candidates.

The supervisor, with knowledge of the foregoing informalities, included the returns from all the before-mentioned polls in bis statement to the returning board, without protest and without communicating to the board notice of such informalities.

A protest by other persons was subsequently, and within legal time, as interpreted by the returning board in other cases favorable to the republican party, duly filed with the board, specifying the foregoing and other frauds, irregularities, and intimidation, which were substantiated by the sworn statements of eighteen respectable citizens of the parish, several of whom are republicans. The board disregarded the protest and evidence, and allowed all the votes returned by the supervisor. In many cases in other parishes they rejected democratic polls for similar, and sometimes for much less essential, informalities.

Some colored men in the parish voted the democratic ticket, and many others wished and intended to do so, but were deterred by fear. There were several colored republican constables and deputy United States marshals wearing the badges of official authority at every polling place in the parish, and particularly at those w where the most of the colored votes were cast.

PARISH OF SAINT LANDRY.

In this parish, poll 9 was excluded by the returning board upon two ex parte afflicavits charging intimidation. There was a democratic majority of 52 votes at that poll, which is about the majority declared by the returning board for Nash, the republican candidate for Congress in the district of which the parish of Saint Landry forms a part. The evidence is uncontradicted and conclusive that there was no intimidation or violence practiced by democrats upon republicans in that parish at or before the election. The registration and election were entirely free, full, fair, and peaceable, and the affidavits upon which the poll was excluded were absolutely unwarranted and false.

There was intimidation and violence practiced at the Opelousas poll, the residence of Thomas C. Anderson, a member of the returning board, during the canvass, by colored republicans, upon a democratic colored canvasser, who was assaulted, his life threatened, and he was driven from the parish for addressing democratic meetings. At that poll, on the day of election, over one hundred colored men were brought into town in a body by republican partisans and candidates, shut up in a cattle-pen belonging to one of those candidates, and marched to the poll in squads by a guard of white republicans, and made to vote the full republican ticket. Many of them, if left to their free choice and action, would have voted a part of the local democratic ticket, and a few of them the democratic national and State tickets.

There were decided irregularities and informalities at these strong republican polls in the parish. At poll No. 10 no list of voters was taken; at No. 11 the commissioners of election were not sworn until after the voting was finished; and at No. 22 the commissioners were arrested without cause, and the voting for several hours suspended. It also appeared that the boxes from none of the polls in the parish were returned by the commissioners to the clerk of the court w

PARISH OF TANGIPAHOA.

In this parish, poll 3 was excluded by the returning board, and poll 10 was not compiled by the supervisor. At poll 3, 76 votes were cast, all for the democratic ticket; and at poll 10, 59 votes were east, of which 43 were for the democratic and 16 for the republican ticket. These polls appear to have been excluded upon three affidavits, alleging intimidation, accompanying a protest by the supervisor, who is a republican. Two of the affidavits are entirely ex parte, and the other substantially so.

None of the witnesses made answer to the material cross-interrogatories which were filed, or if they did, their answers were not written down and made part of their testimony; or if they were, they are suppressed or omitted in the document accompanying the report of Senator Sherman and his associates to the President, in which, on pages 551 to 554, inclusive, the testimony before the returning board with reference to this parish is found. Conrad Simpson, one of the witnesses, is thoroughly discredited before this committee. Sandy Banks, another, is strongly contradicted; and Oran M. Kincher, the other, was summoned before the committee, and did not obey the summons; and he was also substantially contradicted.

Some cases of whipping and other violence had occurred in the parish prior to the election, and it is possible some of it may have been for political intimidation; but those acts were generally, if not always, committed by a vigilance association organized for the purpose of ridding the parish of criminals and outlaws, and with no political object.

The canvass, registration, and election were substantially free fair, foll, and peaceable, with no intimidation or violence which essentially interfered with the freedom or safety of the electors, or that would reasonably justify the exclusion of any poll.

RECAPITULATION.

In no case in which a protest was filed by the supervisor in any of the several parishes included in this report was he law with reference to the filing of protests complied with, and none of them were regularly and legally before the board under the provisions of section 26 of the election law of the State of Louisiana regulating that subject.

The member of the subcommittee representing the minority summoned — itnesses to rebut the testimony offered by the majority, but introduced only — . Of those introduced by him who had given affidavits used before the returning oard, every one positively testified that their affidavits, as published in the Sherman report, alleging intimidation, materially misstated their actual test	imon	y.

Report to the whole committee by the subcommittee to which was referred the investiga-tion of the Louisiana election in the fifth congressional district of that State, com-prising, among others, the parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland.

To Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, Chairman Louisiana Committee:

Your subcommittee, charged with the conduct of the investigation of the election of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in the fifth congressional district of Louisiana, comprising the parishes of Onachita, Morehouse, Richland, Claiborne, Caldwell, Franklin, Concordia, Tensas, Madison, Carroll, Union, Catahoula, Lincoln, and Jackson, beg leave, respectfully, to report as follows:

Union, Catahoula, Lincoln, and Jackson, beg leave, respectfully, to report as follows:

The investigation was commenced on the 22d day of December. About 157 witnesses were examined, a correct report of whose testimony is herewith returned. The examination of witnesses was confined to the following parishes: Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland, Caldwell, and Calaborne, because of the inability of your subcommittee to procure the attendance of witnesses during the short session held at Monroe. The parish of Concordia was withdrawn from their jurisdiction by subsequent order from the Hon. WM. R. Morrison, chairman of the committee.

Your subcommittee found that in no instance had the supervisor of registration failed to count, in his consolidated statement, the returns sent him by the commissioners of election, and whatever losses either party may have sustained in the final canvass and compilation of the vote for electors are due solely to the action of the returning board. The following polls were rejected and not counted in that compilation by the returning board in the parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland, Claiborne, Caldwell, Franklin, and Catahoula:

Ouachita: Polls 1, 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, being all the boxes excepting four established at Monroe, the county seat. Morehouse: Polls 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8. Richland: Polls 1, 3, 4, and 5. Claiborne: Poll 3. Caldwell: Poll 11. Franklin: Poll 2. Catahoula: Polls 5 and 15. The vote for electors at these various polls thus rejected—solely upon the ground of intimidation of the voters, except in Catahoula—was as follows:

We will first consider the parish of Claiborne. In this parish the returning board threw out poll No. 3 on the supervisor's consolidated statement, which gave the Tilden electors 184 votes and none for the Hayes electors, on the ground of intimidation.

We have certified copies of the consolidated statement of the supervisor of registration, and the statement of votes sent up to him by the commissioners of election for that poll, furnished us by the returning board.

The supervisor of registration, J. E. Scott, did not make or forward, in connection with his return to the returning board, any statement whatever in regard to registration or election under section 26 of the laws of Louisiana pertaining to elections, nor did the commissioners of election at poll 3 make or forward any such statement to him.

The consolidated statement of Claiborne Parish was received by mail at New Orleans by the clerk of the returning board on the 14th day of November, 1876, (see printed testimony taken by the whole committee at New Orleans, volume 1, pages 34, 25; and in the meeting of the board November 18, 1876, it was announced by the clerk, publicly, that Claiborne was one of the parishes from which the returns had been received. (See memorial of McDonald and others, Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, page 13.)

Among the papers furnished your subcommittee by the returning board, upon the call of the committee, we find a paper entitled "Report of the State register of voters for the parish of Claiborne, State of Louisiana," which is signed and sworn to by "Capt. J. E. Scott" before United States Commissioner Woolfley, in the city of New Orleans, on the 24th day of November.

In this réport he speaks of intimidation during the period of registration and during the election, and annexes thereto an exparte affidavit signed by Larkin Bryant, Jack Charles, and four others, (see Sherman memorial, Senate Executive Document No. 2, page 536,) to the effect that 250 colored men were prevented from voting at the Haynesville box (poll

"President Wells. It is filed and sent with the returns in some instances. They come in two packages sometimes.
"Governor Palake. Can you tell in every instance?
"Governor Wells. Not unless the returns are accompanied by a protest."
How any fair officer could have ordered Claiborne Parish to be passed because of a contest, or what right in law there was to pass it, when no paper whatever contesting was then filed, and when no paper contesting the returns was filed until four days after, and no paper or protest had in any way accompanied the returns, we are at a loss to understand.

In this connection, before considering the proof submitted to the returning board, we desire to call attention to the law of Louisiana in regard to the rejection of boxes or polling places.

Section 26 of the election laws defines the duties of the parish supervisor of registration and the commissioners of election.

Section 3 defines the duties and powers of the returning board. It reads as follows:

Section 2 of the election laws defines the atties of the parish supervisor of registration and the commissioners of election.

Section 3 defines the duties and powers of the returning board. It reads as follows:
"Sec. 3. They [the returning officers] shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable election. Whenever, from any poll or voting place, there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election in form as required by section 26 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tunult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt infinences, which prevented or tended to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all the qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statements of votes from such polls or voting places until the statements from all other polls or voting places shall have been canvassed and compiled.

"The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt infinences at any such poll or voting place; and if, from the evidence of such statement, they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt infinences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did not pre vent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the results of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting place with those previously carvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers.

"If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that

That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers, upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election.

"Sec. 26. That in any parish, precinct, ward, city, or town in which, during the time of registration or revision of registration, or on any day of election, there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any place within said parish, or at or near any poll or voting place, or place of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences shall prevent or tend to provent a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish, precinct, ward, city, or town, it shall be the duty of the course of the supervisor of registration, to make in duplicate, and under oath, a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto, and of the effect produced by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences in preventing a fair, free, peaceable, and full regis

8. The statements of the commissioners of election and of the supervisor of registration, with all affidavits accompanying them, are not evidence, but caveats, as it were, against the returns, without which the board cannot hear testimony.

Applying these rules to the proceedings of the board as to Claiborne Parish, we find:

Applying these rules to the proceedings of the board cannot hear testimony.

Applying these rules to the proceedings of the board as to Claiborne Parish, we find:

1. That the alleged acts of violence at the Haynesville box (the only one rejected) on election day were not stated or certified to by any commissioners of election.

2. That the supervisor of registration included this poll in his consolidated statement, and forwarded and delivered his returns to the returning board on the 14th day of November, 1876, without any protest by himself or any commissioners of election against this poll or any other poll.

3. That when Claiborne Parish was called for canvass and compilation on the meeting of the board on the 20th day of November, 1876, and when it should have been compiled, there being no contest or protest whatever, the board refused to compile, but permitted the returns to remain unopened until the supervisor of registration arrived in New Orleans, and on the 24th day of November filed a so-called protest with ex parte affidavits.

4. That the board acted unfairly, illegally, and without jurisdiction in rejecting the 184 votes for the Tilden electors.

Your subcommittee did not procure the testimony from Haynesville which it desired, having left the district before it could be procured, the place being remote from Monroe, and difficult of access; but from the testimony of three prominent citizens of Claiborne Parish—H. C. Mitchell, N. F. Alcock, and John Young—taken when they passed through Monroe on their way to New Orleans, your subcommittee is disposed to believe that the so-called affidavits of Larkin Bryant, Jack Charles, and others (all of whom sign their names with a +) is untrue in fact, and possibly a manufactured paper.

The total vote at that box has rarely exceeded 200; it is a white settlement; the republican vote there has generally been about 25, if that, and the colored vote has uniformly concentrated itself at Homer. There were 11 boxes at the late election in Claiborne Parish, had neve

CALDWELL PARISH.

We pass to Caldwell Parish. Poll 1 was rejected by the returning board on the ground of intimidation.

Upon the call of the committee for all papers concerning this parish, your subministee has been furnished with the following:

1. The consolidated statement.

2. The returns by the commissioners of election.

3. The statement of Philip Robinson as to intimidation.

This is all that was before the board, as the Sherman memorial will show.

Upon the testimony of Philip Robinson alone the board rejected poll 1, which are—

Hayes electors. 74
Tilden electors 141

There was no protest or statement whatever upon the consolidated returns by the supervisor of registration, or by him at any time, in regard to registration or election at any poll in this parish, nor did any of the commissioners of election at any poll, at any time, forward or make any statement whatever against the elec-election at any poll in this parish, nor did any of the commissioners of election at any poll, at any time, forward or make any statement whatever against the election.

The board acted solely on the testimony of Philip Robinson, taken upon interrogatories on the 1st day of December, 18:6.

In doing so, they acted contrary to law and without jurisdiction. Their conduct is so extraordinary in this instance as to justify any imputation upon their honesty, and to deprive their findings of any presumption of fairness in cases where more doubt might arise.

But your subcommittee was not satisfied with the legal objections to their action. They summoned before them seven witnesses—Horace Farrand, Simon Kedley, Gabe Marble, Tony Harris, Moses Bates, Emile Girod, and Cyrus Field—whoutterly disprove all the statements made by Philip Robinson. They show, further, that he was a worthless negro politician, seeking office habitually, and then under indictment for stealing a hog—the hog having been found in his possession. He had been twice tried by a jury, escaping conviction by a hanging of the jury by one or more of his colored friends who were on the jury.

The Tilden electors laid before the returning board for consideration the affidavits of forty-four colored men who voted at poll 1 for them, and who testified that they voted freely, without intimidation, and that no violence or intimidation was used.

used. We are of the opinion that the board acted without law, without jurisdiction, and in bad faith in rejecting this poll.

FRANKLIN PARISH.

In this parish the returning board rejected the votes cast at poll 2. The votes Hayes electors. 28 Tilden electors. 74

Net loss...... 46 We have been furnished with all the papers submitted to the returning board.

We have been luringues.

They are—

1. Consolidated statement of supervisor.

2. Statements of commissioners of election.

3. Testimony of five or six witnesses.

Your subcommittee took no testimony. The vote was so small that your subcommittee did not feel justified in the expense that would have been incurred by the delay, &c., that would have been necessary.

But the board acted contrary to law and without jurisdiction in rejecting this parish, because—

The supervisor of registration at no time made any statement against the fairparism, because—

1. The supervisor of registration at no time made any statement against the fairness of the registration or of the election.

2. None of the commissioners made or forwarded to any person any statement against the election held in the parish.

We conclude that the vote should have been counted, and was rejected without

CATAHOULA PARISH.

In this parish the returning board struck from the consolidated statement of the supervisor of the parish polls C 5 and 15, voting as follows:

	Hayes.	Tilden.
Poll C 5	8 12	36 61
Total	20	97 77

The reasons assigned will be found in the memorandum of General Anderson, one of the board, submitted to the whole committee at New Orleans, (see testimony, volume 1, page 46.) and are as follows:

Poll C 5. Reject; no poll-list; no list of voters; no tally-sheets; and the returns of the commissioners of election signed by only one commissioner.

Poll 15. Count out Harrisonburgh; no poll-list, tally-sheets, or list of voters.

In the papers farnished us by the returning board there are none whatever bearing upon these two polls, except the returns of the commissioners of elections.

The copy of the return for poll C 5 appears to be signed by only one commissioner. We have been refused inspection of the original papers. The board took no testimony whatever, and acted upon papers as forwarded, so far as these polls were concerned. As the supervisor of registration included these two polls in his consolidated statement, it seems to us that the returning board did not act fairly in rejecting them without calling for proof. The voice of the people should not be lost from the mere inadvertences or refusals of officers in the performance of their duty, especially when all the machinery is in the hands of one party. Your committee took no testimony, the parish being remote and not easily reached, the stage of water in the Ouachita River being very low.

RICHLAND PARISH.

In this parish the returning board rejected from the count polls 1, 3, 4, and 5, voting for the electors about as follows:

	Hayes.	Tilden.
Poll 1	00 75 67 15	202 151 245 172
Net loss to Tilden	157	770 613

The supervisor of registration, J. F. Kelly, took to New Orleans, in person, the statements of votes and his consolidated return, and delivered them, without protest or statement against the registration or election by himself or any commissioner of election, to the returning board on the 13th day of November, 1876. (See volume I. printed testimony, page 24.)

After he had delivered his returns and papers without protest, he met F. A. Woolfley, United States supervisor, who gave him $150 in money to use, on his return home, in sending down reliable republicans to the returning board as witnesses against the election. On his return home he was twice sent for by subpena to appear in New Orleans. Upon the second subpæna he went down. On this second visit he filed his report, or statement. November 30, 1876, as the record shows, (see Executive Document No.2, Senate, page 460, alleging intimidation during registration and acts of violence on election day at poll 3 and poll 5.

His protest was expressly made on report to him, and not of personal knowledge. No commissioner of election made any statement against any poll in connection with his return to the supervisor. But on the 22d day of November Cabriel Roberts, a commissioner of election, made an affidavit, supported by the three affidavits required by law, against poll 5.

The above facts as to Kelly's action appear from his own testimony taken before your subcommittee at Monroe and from the copies in our possession furnished by the returning board.

The testimony upon which the returning board acted, as proof of intimidation, with he feat and the content of the supervisor.

the returning board.

The testimony upon which the returning board acted, as proof of intimidation, will be found in Senate Executive Document No. 2, from page 459 to page 481.

This testimony alleges, in general terms, that armed and organized men rode the parish, intimidating colored people. But few acts of a specific nature are alleged therein. The chief specific acts alleged are:

First. That Wash McGee, a leading colored republican, was driven from home. Second. That there was an armed body of democrats at poll 5, who deterred about seventy or one hundred colored men from voting; among them one Cyrus Landrum.

Third. That a book was kept at some polls in which the names of men voting the republican ticket were entered.

Third. That a book was kept at some poils in which the hames of inch voting the republican ticket were entered.

Fourth. That some men were threatened with discharge if they voted the republican ticket.

The testimony produced before the returning bourd was given (on behalf of the republican party) chiefly by candidates for office.

The testimony produced before the returning board on behalf of the Tilden electors will be found in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, from page 927 to page 527

Among the papers thus submitted will be found a certified copy of an indictment against James F. Kelly, (supervisor of registration.) Josiah H. Nettles, and James M. Calloway, and others, (Kelly, Nettles, and Calloway being witnesses for the Hayes electors, charging them with being accessory before the fact to the murder of P. B. Stern by one Henry Eddins. (See Miscellaneous Document 14, page 931.)

The testimony produced before the board on behalf of the Tilden electors contains the affidavits of several hundred colored men, who swear that they voted the democratic ticket freely, without compulsion, and of their own choice. The testimony on behalf of the Hayes electors does not contain the affidavit of a single person who voted the democratic ticket upon compulsion, or was prevented from voting the republican ticket by intimidation.

The testimony of Jeff. Perkins, on behalf of the Hayes electors, (Senate Executive Document No. 2, pages 463, 464.) is overthrown by his subsequent statement, upon examination into the facts by himself, to be found in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, page 936.

The testimony of Jeff. Perkins, on behalf of the Hayes electors, (Senate Executive Decument No. 2, pages 463, 464,) is overthrown by his subsequent streament, upon examination into the facts by himself, to be found in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14 page 398.

Your subcommittee took the testimony of a large number of witnesses, residents of Richland Pari-h, most of them respectable citizens, and many of them colored men. Their names are as follows:

C. H. Moore, A. Dyson, Fortune Moulton, Wesley Ellison, Benjamin Holland, II. F. Vickars, Andrew Hracey, Jesse-Jones, Friday McIntosh, Abraham Jenkins, Woodson Watley, Lewis Morris, B. P. Freeman, H. P. Wells, John Bishop, Edwin Ervin, Leopold Rosenfeld, Gabriel Roberts, F. Hatch, Henry Hosgood, Samuel Harper, J. A. Hunter, B. O. Edwards, J. A. Yarborough, O. T. Smith, A. B. Cooper, J. F. Kelly, Pleasant Bowsman, William N. Potts, and Wash McGee.

All these witnesses appeared before us, and were subjected to cross-examination on behalf of both political parties. Their testimony was unanimous, so faras their knowledge extended; and they all concurred in the declaration that Richland Parish had been peaceable and quiet for more than six months before the election; that there had not been a single case of homicide or assault and battery growing out of politics; that there were no armed organized bands of white men or democrats; that there were no disturbances or intimidation during registration or on election day, except what occurred on election day at politive, (Redmonth) precinct.) which will be alluded to in detail hereafter; that the election was fair, peaceable, quiet, and a proper expression of the will of the people. And many of those testifying were colored men, who gave their reasons for voting the democratic ticket; for deserting the republican party.

1. The testimony of Wash McGee developed the fact that he knew the men who visited his house after night, firing under it; hey were of both parties and both races of people, and his own testimony was that

3. The proof as to the discharge of voters was not sufficiently distinct, as presented to the returning board, nor of a character, in the opinion of your subcommittee, to call for contradictory testimony. No witnesses were offered on behalf of the Hayes electors on this point. And your subcommittee are of opinion that if individual cases of that kind existed, the remedy was rather in the prosecution of the parties, if the law so permits, than the rejection of the legal votes of a parish or polling place.

Your subcommittee, upon a review of the law and the facts, has come to this conclusion:

clusion:

1. That the returning board had no jurisdiction of a judicial character over Richland to canvass and reject the polls rejected.

2. That its duties were only ministerial.

3. That there was no intimidation, no armed disturbance, no riot, tumult, &c., at any time during registration, revision of registration, or the election.

4. That the whole vote of Richland Parish should have been counted as cast for the Hayes and Tilden electors.

5. And that the testimony in regard to the Redmonth poll, already alluded to, demonstrated that the facts had been grossly perverted before the returning board, the testimony having been fabricated by some persons to suit the necessities of the occasion.

MOREHOUSE PARISH.

We now come to Morebouse Parish, a parish having an excess of colored over white voters, and known to the public at large before the election as one of the "bull-dozed parishes." Upon the allegation of "general intimidation" the following polls were rejected by the returning board:

Polls.	Hayes.	Tilden.
Poll 1 Poll 2 Poll 3 Poll 5 Poll 6 Poll 7 Poll 8	100 4 4 140 39 37 33	174 69 25 269 203 96 149
Total	357	985 357
Net loss Tilden		628

The results in this parish were protested by the supervisor of registration, F. M. Grant, by affidavit made in New Orleans on the 18th day of November, 1876. (See Executive Document, Senate, No. 2, page 441.)

But no statements or protests by any commissioners of election were forwarded to him, or by him forwarded to the returning board.

The following are the reasons assigned in his statement or protest:
1st. That W. L. Richmond, republican candidate for sheriff, was waited upon about 2d day of November, 1876, and advised to leave a democratic meeting at Oak Ridge, as he was informed.

2d. That many colored voters had told him they had been warned by the democratic party not to vote the republican ticket.

3d. That it was frequently reported to him that numerous bands of armed men were patrolling the parish and buk-dozing.

4th. That it was reported to him that at poll 8, in said parish, on election day, one of the commissioners of election took a ticket from a republican colored man, with remarks which deterred other colored men at such poll from voting.

5th. That at a republican meeting at Bastrop, at which he was present, "an effort was made to break down the republican speaking by constant and ill-natured interruptions."

with remarks which deterred other colored men at such poll from voting.

Sth. That at a republican meeting at Bastrop, at which he was present, "an effort was made to break down the republican speaking by constant and ill-natured interruptions."

This comprises everything in his protest.

The testimony in support of the Hayes electors will be found in Senate Executive Document No. 2, pages 422 to 458.

Your subcommittee has carefully read this testimony several times. The bulk of it consists of affidavits, in which the witnesses recite at second hand things they neither saw nor heard; and your subcommittee is of the opinion that even without the rebutting testimony submitted to the returning board on behalf of the Tilden electors there was not sufficient testimony to justify the rejection of the parish in the wholesale manner of the board.

The testimony of Dow Hundley, William Archer, Randolphus Randall, Andrew Ross, William L. Richmond, who give testimony as to specific acts of bull-dozing upon Hundley, Archer, and Kennedy, before the returning board, all show that these acts took place in ward 10; that the democrats held a meeting and denounced the same, promising protection to the colored people; that bull-dozing ceased; and that the election in ward 10 was free, fair, and peaceable.

There is a marked want of definite proof of specific acts, but numerous witnesses testify to numerous things told them by other persons.

There is a proof that the meeting at Bastrop was interrupted, as stated by Supervisor Grant; but such interruptions are not unusual in Louisiana, even in the ough language proved, and did not break up or scatter the meetings. The testimony before the returning board, of Thomas Mason and Edward Butler, was gross and wanton perversion of the truth, as the Ouachita testimony will slow. If they were present on the occasion they refer to, they were part of a mo to work for the democratic disacts.

vailing!

Only one republican is shown to have been killed, and by a person entirely unknown. It will be observed that the supervisor of registration does not refer to this murder as a political one, or as producing intimidation.

This republican leader, Law, was a desperado of very bad character, morally and otherwise, and had previously killed his man.

¹In the brief time allowed for the making of this report, it is impossible to go into details at greater length.

The Tilden electors presented before the returning board a mass of testimony to rebut the case of the Hayes electors.

It will be found in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, pages 705 to 757. This testimony is perfectly overwhelming. Much of it is ex parte, but in this it resembles the testimony of the other side. Indeed, the record of the proceedings of the returning board will show that the board examined not a dozen witnesses orally during its whole session, and these were chiefly confined to Ouachita Parish. But your subcommittee, sitting in Monree, called before it, for oral examination and cross-examination, the following persons, residents of Morehouse Parish. R. A. Folke, Robert Eckles, C. C. Davenport, Julian Polk, J. G. Sandidge, Frank Yanghan, B. F. Furniss, Robert H. Ward, James Williams, Mack Chapell, Smith Gray, Henry Ratcliffe, Lasker Bass, C. Newton, E. N. Conner, B. V. McDonald, Stephen Reese, Harry Wells, Nicholas Bailey, David Todd, Lewis B. Stark, Frank Brigham, A. Heffner, George Speaker, John Stegg, J. T. Dorsey, William Daniels, Henry A. Scates, Robert Duncan, J. C. Cooper, Garrett Richards, Howard Burrell, Fred, McNeal, and Anderson Scott—thirty-four in all; most of them, as appeared to your subcommittee, persons of standing in the community, and many of them colored.

Their testimony is unanimous to the point that there was no armed organization, no bull-dozing, no intimidation, no violence, no disturbance during registration or on election-day, and the result in Morehouse was a fair, full, and free expression of the will of the people. No witnesses were examined or presented for examination to your subcommittee to testify to the contrary.

These witnesses not only denied all statements of violence, intimidation, &c., as to the colored people, but gave the reasons given by the other colored men of Northern Louisiana:

1. In the first place, the republican State ticket was making a change. They were the same reasons given by the other colored men of Northern Louisiana:

1. In the first place, the republican State ticket was exceedingly unpopular and distasteful to the republican leaders.

2. There was very great dissatisfaction with the republican parish ticket among the better classes. The candidate for sheriff—Richmond, one of the chief witnesses before the returning board—did not stand well. He had been removed from office, as sheriff, but a short time before, by a judge of the court, of his own political party, for incompetency, and two indictments for extortion in office were pending against him at the time of his renomina ion by the republican convention.

3. The candidate for clerk of the court was a mulatto, by the name of Hunter, who was under indictment, also, for stealing the rope or cord belonging to the room of the grangers. (See testimony of B. V. McDonald.)

4. There was very great scandal in connection with the school fund. The public schools had been closed for a long time. The colored people were deprived of education for their children. And about all the funds had been lost by deposit with a failing house in New Orleans. The character of the teachers was not good under republican parish rule. They had been selected more for partisan purposes than for the benefit of the children. This was the reason why, in several instances, teachers were interfered with. One colored man, Lusker Bass, heretofore a republican, gives us some interesting details. He says, in substance, as follows:

"I wanted a school in my settlement; had been promised one for more than a year; finally spent seventy dollars myself in getting a house for it; they sent me a little teacher about April 1, 1876; I would have whipped him myself but for the law; he staid about two months, and then vanished; the school funds were out, and we couldn't get a school any longer."

Lusker Bass did not vote. Said that he would have voted the democratic State and national ticket, and as he pleased for parish off

His testimony was corroborated in the main by other colored witnesses.

5. The affairs of the parish had been very badly administered. Parish paper was down to twenty-five and thirty cents on the dollar. This paper is issued to jurors and witnesses at its face value. Colored men constitute the large majority of the juries, and are concerned in most of the litigation. They were compelled to take this paper at its face.

6. The white people, all of whom except the office-holders were democrats, took very great interest in the election. The planters took unusual interest on account of the high rate of taxation, which has been enormous under republican rule. They represented to the colored men that republican rule was ruining them; that the interests of white and black were identical; that what influenced the fortunes of the planter affected the laborer on the plantation. The planter, by reason of his superior intelligence and his position, undoubtedly had very great influence in producing the result.

7. The times in Northern Louisiana have been undoubtedly very hard, and money rior intelligence and his position, undoubtedly had very great influence in producing the result.

7. The times in Northern Louisiana have been undoubtedly very hard, and money very scarce. There are very few white republicans in any of the northern parishes. The white men have used the bard times, and very successfully, as an argument against the party in power.

8. All these things and many more were urged upon the colored men with a promise by the white men to produce better times, to have longer schools, higher wages, lower taxes, and better feeling, if the colored people would vote with them just this time. If affairs did not go better in the future they could drop the party.

Your subcommittee would refer to extracts from the testimony, if it was conflicting. The witnesses being unanimous in their opinions, we refer to all the testimony that has been given by them. The testimony of Julian Polk, J. G. Sandidge, Harry Brigham, and David Todd—all planters or professional men—is especially referred to in connection with the Ouachita testimony as explanatory of the shooting of Andrew McLeod, who certainly had no right to complain of his fate. They also explain the only occasion on which armed men were out in the parish.

the shorting of Andrew McLeod, who certainly had no right to complain of his fate. They also explain the only occasion on which armed men were out in the parish.

They and other white men were following down into Ouachita Parish a large band of colored men who were moving into it, under arms, with the avowed purpose of buruing Monroe, as has been herotofore stated, because of orders received from that point. None but the guilty few were intimidated by this appearance in arms, and none but the leaders fled. They call it, "Driven away."

Attention is called to the fact that in Morehouse Parish United States soldiers were stationed at three different points on election-day and in the immediate vicinity of the polls. One detachment was at Bastrop, one at Oak Ridge, and one at another point. Reference is made to this fact, not for the purpose of here condemning it, but in connection with the charges of intimidation. These troops had been in the parish for some time. They were there, as was generally understood, in the interest of the republican party.

Attention is called to the fact that at poll 1 the republican vote was 100 and the democratic vote 174. This was rejected. At poll 5 the republicans polled 149 and the democratic vote votes. This was rejected. It is difficult to understand or to measure the extent and the nature of the intimidation that permits so many colored men to vote at a poll and debars others. We are inclined to the opinion that it does not exist in any formidable degree. We further believe that it is the creation of the professional office-seeker, who is disappointed in his hold upon place.

After a survey of all the testimony taken before your subcommittee, we are compelled to come to the conclusion that the returning board, in rejecting Morehouse Parish, only carried out the pre-arranged plan of a political party, which had announced the parish as a "bull-dozed parish" prior to the election. The testimony before it did not justify its action. It was overwhelmingly in favor of the Tilden elec parties, convinces us that Morehouse should have been counted for the Tilden elect-

OUACHITA PARISH.

We come next to the consideration of Ouachita Parish, in canvassing which the returning board threw out all the polls in the parish except four boxes, all located in the town of Monroe, being polls 4, 5, 6, and 7. There was no election at poll 2, the box not having arrived there. The following polls were rejected by the returning board:

The supervisor, M. J. Grady, filed his duplicate copy of returns, as consolidated by him, on the 11th day of November, 1876, with Julius Ennemoser, clerk of the district court of Ouachita Parish; on which day, as will appear by a certified copy of his consolidated return furnished your subcommittee by the returning board, he made oath to the accuracy of his consolidated return. On the same day, the clerk of said court certified, upon comparison, to their correctness as compared with the statement of votes returned by the commissioners of election.

On the same copy of his consolidated return we find the following:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Ouachita:

Parish of Ouachita:

I, George W. Pierce, United States supervisor of election for the parish of Ouachita, in the fifth congressional district, duly commissioned by the Hon. R. A. Hill, in the circuit court of the United States for the fifth circuit and the district of Louisiana, do hereby certify that this consolidated statement of the votes polled in the parish of Ouachita at the general election held November 7, 1876, for presidential electors and Representative in Congress, and for State, parish, and other officers, is correct and true, and I do further certify and declare that the said election and the canvass of said votes was truthful, fair, free, and peaceable.

G. W. PIERCE,

United States Supervisor.

Just below the above is the following statement:

The above certificate of G. W. Pierce, United States democratic supervisor of election for Ouachita Parish, was indorsed thereon after this consolidated statement was completed and sworn to by me, and after the same was certified to by the clerk of the district court as correct.

M. J. GRADY, Supervisor of Registration, Parish of Quachita.

The only other indorsement on said copy so furnished your subcommittee is as follows, in the column of remarks:

"N. B.—In the foregoing consolidated statement poll No. 2 is left blank from the fact that the ballot-box, poll-book, and necessary stationery did not reach the foregoing place, and hence there are no returns from said poll. See copy of statement and return of the commissioners of election appointed for polling-place No. 2, hereto annexed."

There are no other indorsements on said consolidated statement going place, and hence there are no returns from said poll. See copy of statement and return of the commissioners of election appointed for polling-place No. 2, hereto annexed."

There are no other indorsements on said consolidated statement, nor any references to any other statements, protests, &c.

We refer to these matters because a protest by M. J. Grady, supervisor, was filed or made out in the city of New Orleans some days afterward—on the 21st day of November, 1876. (See Senate Executive Document No. 2, page 365.)

No copy of this had been filed in the Ouachita Parish court or the clerk's office up to November 20, 1876. (See Senate Executive Document No. 2, page 365.)

Under section 43 of the election law of Louisiana it is made the duty of the supervisor within twenty-four hours to consolidate the returns and to forward them, &c., immediately after receipt of the statements.

The returns from Ouachita appear to have been received by the board on the 24th day of November, 1876, many days after the returning board had commenced its sessions, thus depriving the Tilden electors of any definite information as to the charges made against the various polling places, and preventing them from early preparation to meet the same. The returns were not opened in the session of the board until the 25th day of November. On the 29th day of November, 1876, the court adjourned the hearing of testimony; and, except for consultation in private, closed its session on the 2d day of December.

Monroe is distant three hundred miles from New Orleans, and not less than three days would be requisite for the Tilden electors or their agents to reach Monroe and return to New Orleans. No time whatever was given for preparation; no notice, by filing in the clerk's office the copy of the statement of the supervisor and his office-holding friends.

In illustration of the partisan feeling of Governor Wells, the leading and controlling spirit of the returning board, we quote from the stenographic report of the proceedings of the board at

"Mr. McGloin. You have given the whole day to the republican party."
"Governor Wells. We will not do it positively; we cannot hold night sessions;
"Mr. McGloin. You have given the whole day to the republican party."
"Governor Wells. We will give you a whole day if you have as good a case on your part." (See Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 14, page 113.)

The next day the board heard the testimony of Charles Tidwell and J. T. Swan, and would permit the oral examination of no other witnesses, many of whom were present to testify in regard to Ouachita Parish. To intimidate some of the witnesses who were in New Orleans, and prevent the attendance of others, the republican managers caused the arrest of some of them upon pretense of being fugitives from justice.

The protest of the supervisor, filed November 24, 1876, contains the following points:

1. That acts of tumult, violence, &c., during registration and revision of registration, prevented a fair, free, and full vote.

2. That Harmon Bell, going to poll 1, was stopped, and prevented from acting as one of the commissioners of election.

- 3. That poll 2 had no election, because the constable carrying the box, &c., was
- shot on the road.

  4. He siluded to the affidavits of Ray, McCloe, Bell, Hill, Hamlet, "and others," 4. He alluded to the annuavity of the state of the state
- Republican majority.....

In 1876 the registration was as follows, which we give, remarking that registra ing the two days preceding the election.

Other parties allude to the shooting of the following persons as evidence of intimidation:

12. James Jackson, on his wagon of wood.

13. Henry Burrell, Spencer Dickerson, William Lewis, and Hawkins Jones, all of whom were shot or shot at by one Hathaway.

Other persons allude to the disturbance of the republican meeting at Grady's school house, at which point insulting language was used by a colored democrat to a colored republican orator.

Your subcommittee has been careful to select everything charged of consequence to the case, in order to state the testimony taken in regard to it, in so far as they were able to go into detail.

The Tilden electors presented a great mass of testimony to the returning board, which is embodied in the memorial of Senater McDonald and others; and in this were included 473 affidavits by colored men that they had freely, voluntarily, and without intimidation voted the democratic ticket. These affidavits although exparte, were received by the board, Omachita-being made an exceptional parish as to exparte testimony, even after the board for the second or third time had changed its rule on this subject; and the statements of these colored witnesses were corroborated by very many white men.

Your subcommittee, in making this report, can take into consideration only such testimony as was taken before them at Monroe; not having convenient access to whatever testimony may have been taken by the general committee or any other subcommittee in New Orleans.

No witnesses were tendered at Monroe on behalf of the Hayes electors, the reason assigned being that they were in New Orleans attending upon the Senate committee upon the same question.

Your subcommittee is of opinion that if any such general intimidation existed in Onachita Parish as was aileged and claimed by the Hayes electors, there might have been found other persons of character and standing to testify—white and colored—than the few who went to the city of New Orleans. The claim that witn

Colored persons.

On which basis the total registration was, according to Grady's protest, 3.375 voters, or about one voter to every four persons. It is very evident from this, if Mr. Grady's registration was honest, that all the alleged intimidation did not deter any single person from registering. It rather, if anything, increased it beyond the usual proportions.

2d. It is equally clear, because it was conclusively proved by overwhelming testimony, that on the day of the election there was no disturbance, no violence, no tumult, no intimidation. And among the papers are no protests or statements against any box or polling place by any of the commissioners of election. The supervisor himself makes no statement against any polling place upon that grownd. We will now determine, as far as we can, whether political matters entered into any of the outrages or disturbances hereinbefore recited, and to what extent.

1. The killing of James Jackson, found dead on his load of wood, had no connection with politics. Family disturbances alone seemed to have caused his assassination. We found no witness who had any other opinion. Jackson was a quiet person, whose politics, if he had any, were unknown; and was an obscure person, whose death could be of no service or significance in a political way.

2. The shooting of George Shelton had no political significance, and none was attached to it. The testimony taken by us was not very full upon this case. But an examination of his own affidavit, filed before the returning board, is conclusive upon this point. In it he speaks of various sets of intimidation practiced, but upon this point. In it he speaks of various sets of intimidation practiced, but on surfagren to other people's affidavits, but not in his own. (See Senate Excentive Document No. 2, page 402.)

3. Your subcommittee heard no testimony about the killing of Fred. Bynum, as alined to. The witnesses did not a cen to know him. We have no report to make the property of the property motives; and your committee tands and the politics

7. Andrew McLeod was another colored man who was a leader in the march upon Monroe, aircady aluded to, instigated by the worst class of radical leaders, after the death of Dr. Dinkgrave. Andrew McLeod was wounded while in command of thirty or more armed colored men, who had wantonly, and without provocation, fired upon Colonel Sandidge, Frank Brigham, Julian Polk, and David Toold again.

cation, fired upon Colonel Sandidge, Frank Brigham, Julian Polk, and David Todd, esq.

After Dr. Dinkgrave was killed, certain leaders sent word to the colored people to come to Monroe, the war had begun. Many from Morehouse Parish were made to believe that they must go. Some of the white men of Morehouse followed into Onachita Parish, to see that no harm came from the invasion. The four gentlemen above named were of the party. Arriving in Ouachita Parish, they found that peace had been accomplished without the discharge of a gun; and they were on their way home, each person taking his own road. These four white persons, on their return, were fired into from the road-side by about twenty or thirty negroes, armed with double-barreled guns, who were fired into in return. McLecd was wounded. Your subcommittee have only to state the facts in this case as proved by every witness before 'hem to warrant the common verdict that he was served according to his merit. The testimony of Colonel Sandidge, Julian Polk, Frank Brigham, and of David Todd, esq., a member of the bar of Bastrop, is particularly referred to. This is not the kind of intimidation referred to in the election law of Louisiana; at least your subcommittee cannot recognize it as such.

S. The killing of Dr. B. F. Dinkgrave was also investigated by your subcommittee, though not to the extent that would be necessary in a judicial investigation. Dinkgrave was an active republican, but was otherwise favorably regarded by the leading democrats of Monroe, with some of whom he was upon very friendly terms. He was murdered in the afternoon, August 30, 1876, upon one of the streets of Monroe running along the river bank, by a person upon borseback, who was unknown to him and to the person who was with him at the time. The assassin was within thirty yards when he fired. He field immediately, was pursued by the sheriff and a posse of the rille clubs mult the trace was lost. Dinkgrave lived the person who had shot him. He so stated to F. P. Stubbs, esq., his neighbor and friend. The assassin was met in his flight by Mr. Briard, who did not recognize the more for the assassin was met in his flight by Mr. Briard, who did not recognize he more for the assassin of the person yadening to conclusion as to the motive for the assassination. When the assassin or his accomplices are not known, he motive another satisfactorily assigned. There was some testimony by a policeman and a member of the city council, to whom the policeman had reported, tending to show the presence in Monroe at that time of a stranger, mounted upon a fleet horse, supposed to be a Winherly, from Texas. Several years before to the dector's supposed interference in some family affairs. The family was said to be desperate and revengeful. The testimony showed very clearly that at one interference in apprehensive of assassination from some of its members. There was proof showing a serious difficulty between the doctor and a Mr. Adams, whom the doctor had been apprehensive of assassination from some of its members. There was proof showing a serious difficulty between the doctor and a Mr. Adams, whom the doctor had been apprehensive of assassination from some of its members. There was proof showing a serious difficulty between the doctor and a Mr.

lican party in the parish. But the testimony shows that long before he was killed about 1.000 colored men had joined the democratic clubs. (See the testimony of Col. F. P. Stubbs.)

The testimony upon these points is very full and very voluminous. It is substantially unanimous. The patrolling of the parish that is spoken of by some of the witnesses before the returning board occurred immediately after the foregoing occurrences, an apprehension existing in the minds of the white people that another trouble might arise. This patrolling was done by only a few men, and lasted but several nights. Out of this has grown the story of the parish being patrolled in the interest of the democratic party. It was a precautionary measure, rendered necessary by the state of society in which these people lived. The white people living upon the island where the patrolling chiefly took place, are in the proportion of only 1 to 10 as compared with the colored people; and their duty to their wives and daughters, as well as to themselves, compelled them to be vigilant.

The large number of armed men—grossly exaggerated as to number in the testimony before the board—assembled at Mouroe on the 1st or 2d day of September last, were brought there by the uprising alluded to. And the testimony shows that the fears of the white people were not groundless. But a few nights before, colored people had assembled about ten miles below, and had fired into the houses of prominent and respectable white citizens, causing them and their families to flee to Monroe for protection. These persons had given no provocation whatever, and had no prominence as politicians. Such conduct upon the part of the colored people was the natural result of the course pursued by some of their reckless leaders. The few white republicans in the parish—not more than thirty in number in all—did all in their power, with a very few exceptions, to array the colored people against the white people. The white people were denounced as "rebels," as former "slave-holders," as the

That the killing of Dr. Dinkgrave, murderous and outrageous as it was, had no material effect upon the election is demonstrated by the fact that the great mass of the colored converts to the democratic party had joined the democratic clubs three weeks before, and at a time when Mr. Hall, a strong republican witness before the returning board, says there was perfect quiet in the whole parish. (Senate Executive Document No. 2, page —.)

PINKSTON CASE.

9. We proceed to investigate the killing of Henry Pinkston, of Merriman Rhodes, the whipping and raping of Cora Williams, and the shooting of Eliza Pinkston and the murder of the child one year old.

We treat these all together, for the claim in the testimony before the returning board is that they were all perpetrated upon the same night and by the same persons—Captain Theobald, George Phillips, Walter Logan, Dr. Yonge, &c., and Cora Williams says that the party left her house and went toward Pinkston's, in which direction she afterward heard firing.

These stories, so far as the names of the perpetrators are concerned, depend solely upon the testimony of Cora Williams and Eliza Pinkston. They reside, says the testimony, about four miles apart.

Your subcommittee, after a full examination of witnesses, extending over three days, is of the opinion that the attempt to give a political complexion to any one of the outrages referred to was a gross and scandalous political conspiracy, disgraceful to all who had any connection with it, whether by indorsement, sympathy, or otherwise.

ful to all who had any connection with it, whether by indersemen, sympathy, or otherwise.

Henry Pinkston was killed during the night of Saturday preceding the election. Ten or twelve days afterward, his wife's child was found in a pond of water near by. And Merriman Rhodes was found dead, George Tatum, an intimidated voter, stating in his testimony before the returning board where he was found, and that his assassins were unknown.

Before proceeding to the examination of this case in detail, we desire to call attention to the fact that Eliza Pinkston's affidavit, as furnished by the returning board—found in Senate Executive Document No. 2, page 417—was prepared in New Orleans, and sworn to before Mr. Woolfley, United States commissioner, on the 21d day of December. The date is important. The return of the supervisor of registration was made to the board on the 24th day of November, and opened in open session on the 25th day of November. Among the papers found inside of the returns so opened on the 25th, was the following:

New Orleans, November 23, 1876.

C. S. Abell, Secretary Returning Board:

C. S. Abell, Scoretary Returning Board:
Inclosed please find affidavit of Eliza Pinkston, which I received too late to file with my returns. Please see that it is brought in with the other evidence filed with my returns.

Respectfully,

M. J. GRADY, Supervisor of Registration.

Respectfully,

The dates are important for several reasons. Your subcommittee took testimony showing that at Monros, Eliza Pinkston had made an affidavit before J. H. Dinkgrave, in which she charged the outrages referred to upon other persons. That affidavit, sent up by Grady to the board as stated in the above letter, was suppressed, and another one substituted; Eliza having been sent for in the meant time to come to New Orleans. Such conduct on the part of the returning board, when taken in connection with their other acts, confirms the opinion that they are taken in connection with their other acts, confirms the opinion that they are to have been received by the board on the 34th. This was so stated publicly.

Yet the letter of the supervisor, on the 33d of November, aludes to his returns as already filed; "November 21, 1 received the affidavit of Eliza Pinkston too late to file with my returns."

To proceed with the facts: The principal parties charged by Cora Williams were Captain Theobald, George Phillips, Walter Logan, and Dr. Kennedy; and the chief ones named by Eliza Pinkston were Dr. Yonge, Captain Theobald, Walter Logan, and George Phillips. The circumstances detailed by each are of a character to forbid any mere mistakes of person. If these persons did not perpetrate the crimes, Cora Williams and Eliza Pinkston are great lars.

Cora Williams and Eliza Pinkston are great lars.

Ora Williams and Eliza Pinkston are great lars.

The young men charged by her and Cora Williams with the commission of the nutrages in question all proved alibies of the most unqualified denial to the whole story. On the head.

The young men charged by her and Cora Williams with the commission of the most unqualified denial to the whole story. And your subcommittee in person, and gave the most unqualified denial to the whole story. And your subcommittee in person, and gave the most unqualified denial to the whole story this miserable prostitute, has become a saint in the political calendar of the republican party of Louisiana! Upon these points we refer to the testimony of Fred. McNeil. Garrett Richards. Robert Eccles, R. A. Folke, C. C. Davenport, Frank Vaughan, Wm. Rhodes, W. A. Bumpers, E. A. Dawking, C. W. Tidwell, Alex. Williams, Alice Bunkley, Cyrena Harrison, Judge Ruffin, J. N. Head, Jno. B. Simms, and J. P. Montgomery.

Your subcommittee are of opinion that Henry Pinkston was killed by one Brooks, a colored man, with whom he had had, but a short time previous, a desperate encounter. There was considerable testimony pointing in that direction. Pinkston was an inoffensive man, and well liked. In 1874 he voted the conservative licket. This was proved by the commissioner who received his ballot: and on the Friday before his death he informed the same gentleman that he had always voted with the white people, and intended to do so again.

The person with whom Brooks worked at the time of Pinkston's death appeared before your subcommittee, and testified that his pistols—a six shooter and a Deringer—were taken out of his chest, to which Brooks had access, the Saturday evening of the murder, and were returned on Monday morning, all discharged. He then dismissed Brooks from his employment. (See testimony of W. A. Gustine.)

FORMATION OF RIFLE CLUBS.

FORMATION OF RIFLE CLURS.

10. Much stress was laid upon the formation of rifle clubs in Ouachita Parish. There were five or six clubs of this character, numbering about 175 active members in all, and having exactly 103 guns—67 breech-loaders and 36 common muzzle-loaders. As a general rule, said all the witnesses, the men in them were the best men in the parish. The reasons for their organization, and their whole history, will be found in the testimony of their chief, Dr. J. S. Aby, of Monroe. They rarely were out with their arms. They were out on the occasion of the uprising after the murder of Dr. Dinkgrave; a few were out on the order of the sheriff to follow the murderer; about thirty were out when Hathaway was arrested by them; and they were under arms for a day or so prior to the election; this was all.

infer the murder of Dr. Dinkgrave; a few were out on the order of the sheriff to follow the murderer; about thirty were out when Hathaway was arrested by them; and they were under arms for a day or so prior to the election; this was all.

The members of the clubs attended several republican meetings, but not with their guns. If they had side-arms, as is the custom, say the witnesses, with both white and black in that country, they were generally concealed in the usual manner. On one occasion a disturbance arose, but it was quickly ended.

While the existence of these clubs may have impressed the colored republicans with the power and strength of the white element if any armed conflict should arise between the races, there was no proof offered before your subcommittee showing any intimidation, violence, threats, or improper interference by them with the rights of the colored people, except one or two individual instances, that will be alluded to hereafter. Whether Ben. James was shot by some members, or, if so, under what circumstances, did not appear before us.

There was proof of great intolerance toward colored democrats by colored republicans. Several cases of severe beating had occurred. Colored men were afraid to join the democratic party in consequence. They so stated when the campaign opened. An excited campaign was expected. It had been heretofore conducted upon the color line, and promise to be heated in the same direction if the leaders could succeed. To protect colored democrats, and numbers, it was said, who wanted to become democrats, and to preserve peace, good order, and insure protection to their families, the rifle clubs were formed. And, so far as the testimony shows, these purposes were never deviated from. When they were under arms, it was a precautionary wiceautionary wiceautionary wiceautionary of the superior of the continuous control on which their action interfered with the colored men. members of the republican party, was when they picketed the roads leading to Monroe for the two days

Borden.

In two instances, persons were stopped by individual pickets, who were either unarmed or were going out from Mouroe.

Your subcommittee cannot go more into detail, and must be contented to refer to the testimony taken and he-ewith returned; and proceed to general statements referring in part as well to Morehouse as to Ouachita Parish.

The argument used against the count of the vote as cast in Ouachita, as well as in Morehouse, is chiefly the great change in the vote of the parish. And the argument used against the outside wards in Ouachita Parish is the small republican vote cast—in some cases none. But in Ouachita the programme was, as in Claiborne, to concentrate at Monroe. The vote cast at Monroe was 1,093; a village of 2,000 people. Of this vote, the republicans received 745, and the democrats only 348. The vote as cast in Ouachita was:

Democratic	793
Democratic majority	1,072
This vote was the largest cast for several years. This vote, as compiled by the returning board, after rejecting all but the M	ouroe

Republican majority.....

Figures become somewhat valuable in this connection.

The registration of 1876 shows the following number of white persons entitled to vote: 1,023. Of these nearly 1,000 are democratic, and at this election it is safe to say every one voted. There had always been in the parish about 100 or more democratic colored men, (see Stubbs's testimony.) making the democratic strength about 1,100 without changes from the republican party. But the testimony of a very large number of colored men—leading men among their people—shows that a very great change had taken place among the colored people from the arguments that are usual among the laboring men, and this not only in Ouachita, but in all Northern Louisiana.

Northern Louisiana.

We quote now from the republican census of 1875 some few instructive figures upon this point, illustrating the truth of this proposition.

Jackson Parish, with 1,752 colored population, gave only 23 votes for the Hayes electors in the late election.

Union Parish, with a colored population of 4,667, gave the Hayes electors only

Other Parish, with a colored population of 3,597, gave the Hayes electors only

Jackson Parish, with 1,25 colored population, gave only 23 votes for the Hayes electors in the late election.

Union Parish, with a colored population of 4,657, gave the Hayes electors only 31 cotes.

Yet in every one of these three parishes—lying in Northern Louislava and adjoining Quachina—it is conceded that the election and everything pertaining to it was free, fair, peaceably the was free, fair, peaceably the was the conceded that the election and everything pertaining to it was free, fair, peaceably the was the fair of Morchouse.

In Claiborne, in which only one poll was contested, there is a colored population of 7, 802; yet the vote for Hayes was only 432.

In Familia, in which only one poll was contested, there is a colored population of 7, 802; yet the vote for Hayes was only 129.

These fluores are exceedingly instructive, and compel us to believe that the changes which took place in Morchouse, Ouachita, and Richland, but particularly in Morchouse and Quachita, were the result chiefly, if not entirely, of other causes than the smallfestation. The 473 colored men who gave their affidavits for use before the returning board, that each one had voluntarily voted the democratic ticket, were surely not all intimidated men. And it is significant that in all the testimony submitted upon behalf of the Hayes electors to the returning board there can be found but sixtee excercise of the elective franchises. Your subcommittee hald before it a large number of colored men who had always voted the republican ticket. Their testimony was very clear not only that they had not been intimidated, but that intimidation had not been used. They gave unany reasons for the change in the colored of the colored men who had always voted the republicant icket. Their testimony was very clear not only that they had not been intimidated, but that intimidation had not been used. They gave unany reasons for the change accomplication of the properties of the colored properties of the colo ers into political crimes, and published as part of a plan to intimidate the colored voter.

It has occurred to your subcommittee as strange that, with all the machinery of the law, as well as of the election, in their hands in the parishes of Morehouse and Ouachita, no steps have been taken by the republican office-holders to arrest or to punish any of the persons named as offenders against the law before the returning board.

In support of the foregoing statements, your subcommittee refer to the testimony taken by them. There is no contrary voice in the whole record. The testimony is unanimous. The witnesses were of all races, colors, religions, occupations, and parties. They were generally men that seemed to your subcommittee to be entitled to credit. And, in the absence of any contradictory testimony, we are compelled to come to the following conclusion:

1. That a very great change took place in the colored vote of Northern Louisiana and of the parish of Ouachita for reasons already stated.

2. That while the white people and democrats of Ouachita took pains to impress the colored people with their strength and power, no acts of intimidation or political violence were proved which materially influenced the vote in the late election.

Several noted cotton and hog thieves, like Randall Driver, Bryant Simms, and others, may have been whipped; but if they were republicans, their politics had nothing to do with the punishment.

3. That the republicans of Ouachita, as shown by the testimony, endeavored to provoke the democrats to acts of violence to justify the anticipated action of the returning board, public notice having been given in advance, after the colored men had joined the democratic party, that Ouachita would be ruled out as a "bull-dozed" parish.

4. That the democrats, becoming aware very early in the campaign that they would carry the parish, took unusual pains to avoid all acts of violence, tunuit, intimidation, &c., for fear of the anticipated action of the returning board.

5. That the returning board made an indiscriminate onslaught upon the polls in the parish, rejecting not less than two where the republican vote was as large as it had ever been, and where the voters had always or nearly always voted the democratic ticket, and were almost exclusively white.

6. That the returning board counted the four boxes in Monroe, where by secret pre-arrangement they had concentrated their whole vote, when the proofs of intimidation and of violence were as conclusive of intimidation in the town of Monroe as at any other point. The picketing of the roads, if it produced any effect, provented the vote at Monroe from being as fall as it would have otherwise been.

7. That by retaining imangers changed a democratic majority of 1,073 in the parish to a cepublican mangers changed a democratic majority of 1,073 in the parish to a cepublican majority of 307, thus saving their parish officers, and materially contributing to the assistance of the Hayes electors.

8. That by this action the democratic party was allowed the benefit of all their vote actually cast but 48. If the 600 alleged intimidated voters had all voted the republican tisk, was at least 1,000; and the republicans received the benefit of all their vote actually cast but 48. If the 6

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

MONROE, December 30, 1876.

At the opening of executive session, the chairman stated that the examination as to the parishes of Caldwell, Morebouse, Ouachita, Richland, and Concordia had been concluded, and that the committee as to these parishes was ready to hear testimony on behalf of the Hayes and Wheeler electors. Thereupon Hon. Mr. Caro gave the following notice:

Mr. Caro gives notice to the subcommittee that he desires to examine witnesses who are now in New Orleans, and who are expected to be there the coming week, and that he will make the request for the examination of witnesses after his return to New Orleans; that the proposed examination relates to the election in the various parishes which this subcommittee has under consideration.

The chairman made the inquiry of Mr. Caro whether he had any witnesses whom he desired to call at the city of Monroe, and whom he desired to examine while sitting here.

whom he desired to can't the city of Monroe, and whom he desired to examine while sitting here.

In response thereto, Mr. Crapo said that he had no witnesses at present in Monroe, the parties he desired to examine being in New Orleans in attendance under subpensa from the Senate committee, where he believed they were likely to be detained for a week.

ros, the parties he desired to examine being in New Orleans in attendance under subpens from the Senate committee, where he believed they were likely to be detained for a week.

The chairman responded to Mr. Crapo, and inquired whether he had asubpens issued for any of these witnesses to appear before the subcommittee of the House. Mr. Crapo answered that none had been issued that he was aware of. The chairman then asked Mr. Crapo shether he desired to come back to Monroe at the expiration of one week to take the testimony on behalf of the Hayes and Wheeler electors.

Mr. Crapo stated that he did not personally desire to return to Monroe, and he further believed that the public interest in this examination would be promoted by taking the testimony in New Orleans, and he inquired of the chairman and of Mr. Ross if they desired to return to Monroe at the expiration of the current week to finish taking testimony.

Mr. Ross responded, "Yes, sir."

The chairman said that he did not desire to return; that the loss of time of one week would delay the investigation and the publication of the testimony, and also the making of the report of the subcommittee to the whole committee, and thereby prevent the whole committee from making its report to the House of Representatives in proper time for the consideration of the matters covered by the resolution under which the committee was appointed; that this subcommittee is ready to proceed with the examination of such witnesses as may be presented on the formal proper time for the consideration of the matters covered by the resolution under which the committee was appointed; that this subcommittee is ready to proceed with the examination of such witnesses on as may be presented on the parishes of Richland, Morehouse, and Onachita specially, should proceed with the examination of all the witnesses on either side to explain or contradict testimony that may be given.

The chairman further wished to notify Mr. Crapo officially, as he had done previously in private, that the subcomm

The chairman stated that he was unwilling to adjourn the committee to New Orleans; and, Mr. Ross concurring therein, the motion to adjourn to New Orleans was lost.

The chairman, Mr. McMahon, then renewed the offer to take testimony at Mon-

The Charles of the Committee then adjourned to meet in Washington City on the day of the assembling of the whole committee, the vote standing—yea Ross, nay, Charo; and, there being a tie vote, the chairman voted yea; and the committee adjourned.

as follows:

This committee was assigned the parishes of West Baton Rouge, East Baton Rouge, West Feliciana, and East Feliciana.

EAST BATON ROUGE.

It is necessary to a full understanding of the location and numbering of the polling places in this parish to give the number of the wards and the polls established in each. There are twelve wards. Wards 1 and 2 embrace the city of Baton Rouge, and each of these wards had two polling places. In ward 1 the polling-places are designated on the consolidated return of the supervisor of registration as polls 1 and 2. In ward 2, that the same numbers may not be repeated, the polls are numbered 3 and 4. Poll 1 was at the court-house; 2 at Murphy's school-house; 3 at the tengine-house, and 4 at Free Market Hall.

The other ten wards had one polling place each, and, on account of there being four polls in wards 1 and 2, the poll in ward 3 is poll No. 5; in ward 4, No. 6; in ward 5, No. 7; in ward 6, No. 8, &c.

The following table gives the votes actually cast at the fourteen different polls for electors:

Under the election law of Louisiana persons are permitted to vote at any polling

Under the election law of Louisiana persons are permitted to vote at any polling place in the parish.

F. A. Clover, the supervisor of registration for this parish, disregarded and discarded the votes cast at polls 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 13; the six last named representing, as will be remembered, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 11, poll 1 being the court-house poll in the city of Baton Rouge. The polls omitted by the supervisor cast 150 votes for Hayes and 1,136 for Tilden. Upon the vote as cast at all the polls, the majority for Hayes is 374, and by omitting also polls 12 and 14, thrown out by the returning board, the majority for Hayes will be 636.

Whether the result thus obtained and declared is fair and to be respected must depend upon what the powers of the returning board and supervisor of registration are, and whether upon the law and facts those powers were excised lawfully and without fraud. It is not proposed here to refer to the law except where the commentary upon facts seems to make it unavoidable.

By reference to sections 2, 3, and 43 of the Louisiana election law, it will be found that the returning board is required to canvass the vote from the statements of the commissioners of the election. These statements are the "lists" and papers which by section 43 the commissioners are required to keep and make out upon the close of the polls.

Section 43 makes it the duty of the supervisor of registration within twenty-four hours after he receives from the commissioners all the returning board all "the originals received by him" from the commissioners. What statement or papers other than the originals already named is the supervisor authorized or required by law to forward with this consolidated return to the returning board?

If, "during the time of registration or revision of registration," there shall be any riot, tunult, acts of violence, intimidation or disturbance, bribery or corrupt influences at any place in the parish, at or near the places of registration or revision of registration or all the facts relat all the facts relating thereto, corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified electors of the parish. One of these duplicates they must give to the supervisor of registration, and by him must be sent with his consolidated return to the returning board; the other duplicate must be delivered to the clerk of the district court for the use of the district attorney.

The supervisor of registration has no statement or report to make to the returning board upon the subject of riots, tumults, intimidation, &c., unless these occurred during registration or revision of registration, and prevented, or tended to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full registration or election. He is not empowered to the period of registration and revision of registration. He is not empowered to make any statement or report as to intimidation, &c., occurring on the day of the election unless the commissioners have filed such statement with him, in which event he must forward the same to the returning board with his consolidated return.

election unless the commissioners have filed such statement with him, in which event he must forward the same to the returning board with his consolidated return.

The statement which the supervisor may make is limited to the period of which he would be expected to have the most definite knowledge. The same is true as to the commissioners of election. Thus the returning board would have before it, with the consolidated return and statements of commissioners of the votes cast, the complaints, so to speak, of supervisors of registration and commissioners of election as to matters about which they respectively would be best informed, in each case sworn to and corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, qualified voters of the parish. That this is the plain and obvious meaning and only construction to be given to the law cannot be doubted.

The returning board has no power except such as is given by statute, and acquires no jurisdiction as to intimidation, &c., occurring during registration or revision of registration, or on election day, except upon statements filed as already named.

Nothing can be more clear than that the supervisor of registration is not invested with the right to pass upon the regularity or sufficiency of the papers made out by the commissioners of election. He is a ministerial officer, and can have no powers except such as are conferred by statute.

On the consolidated statement of votes made out and filed by the supervisor are certain remarks, not upon the subject of intimidation, riots, &c., but giving his reasons for not returning with his consolidated return the votes cast at polls 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 13. He says that the statement of votes, written records, tally-sheets, &c., brought to him from those polls are illegal, informal, &c. His vicws upon the subject of whether these polls should be counted were wholly immaterial, innsmuch as the law had not attached enough importance to his opinions to call for their expression.

The following answer by the supervisor of registrat pression.

The following answer by the supervisor of registration to questions asked him before the committee at New Orleans will throw some light upon the kind of material he is composed of:

By Mr. JENKS:

By Mr. Jenes.

Question. Now come back and answer my question. Did you not exclude from your consolidated statement a number of polls in that parish of East Baton Rouge? Answer. I did not exclude from my consolidated statement the votes cast at any polls returned according to law.

Q. Did you exclude from your consolidated statement the polls returned by the commissioners of election, whether according to law or not?

A. I don't recollect. Let me refresh my memory for a few minutes.
Q. State whether you did not exclude from your consolidated statement certain polls returned to you by the commissioners of election.

A. I did not exclude from my report any returns made in accordance with law.
Q. Did you exclude any made not in accordance with law, as you judged the law?

A. I did not exclude from my consolidated statement the result of the election at any polling-place made in accordance with the law.
Q. Did you not exclude from your consolidated statement returns of several polling-places in the parish of East Baton Rougeas returned to you by the commissioners of election?

A. That is going a little outside, I think. I did not include in my consolidated statement the returns from any polling precinct not made in accordance with law.
Q. Did you exclude any, whether made in accordance with law or not, that were returned by the commissioners?

A. I understand I have answered that question. I did not include in my statement the returns from any polling places Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 13 in the parish of East Baton Rouge?

A. Lexhuded those not made in accordance with law.

East Baton Rouge ?

A. I excluded those not made in accordance with law.

A. I excluded those not made in accordance with law.

The papers used and made out by the commissioners of election as to votes cast, &c., at the polls rejected by the supervisor, were not returned to the board. These papers should have been examined by the board without regard to the supervisor's opinion oraction. While this parish was being considered by the board, efforts were repeatedly made by authorized representatives of the democratic party to have those papers produced. The board flatly refused to do this, declaring that they would not go behind the report made to them by the supervisor; that they intended to be governed entirely by his return as to those polls, and that all reports from the commissioners of election must come to them through the supervisor. Finally, after the strongest pressure, the board permitted two out of seven of the ballot-boxes representing the seven polls rejected by the supervisor to be opened and contents inspected, General Anderson, one of the board, participating in the examination. The boxes opened were those belonging to polls 6 and 8. They are called in Sherman's report boxes 4 and 6, because they were the boxes used in those wards.

Before speaking of the contents of these two boxes we wish to say that under the old law the practice was to make the returns to the sheriff, who would lock them up for safe keeping in the box and afterward take them out for compilation.

From force of habit, imperfect knowledge of the present law, or design, the papers required to be used by the commissioners of election were put into the boxes and locked up.

From force of habit, imperfect knowledge of the present law, or design, the papers required to be used by the commissioners of election were put into the boxes and locked up.

Box 8, that is the box used in ward 6, when opened, was found by General Anderson to contain the tally-sheets, statement of votes, and poll-list, and the vote was found to be 12 for Hayes and 64 for Tilden. It is not pretended that there was found the slightest irregularity in the papers relating to this poll; and yet it was not counted by the board.

Box 6, that is the box used in the fourth ward, was opened by General Anderson, and the only irregularity found was that the statement of votes cast was not signed by the commissioners. The tally-sheets were signed, and it appeared therefrom that Tilden received 373 votes and Hayes 7. The statement of votes cast was the least important paper, for without it, the accuracy of the tally-sheets could be tested by the ballots. The board refused to count these votes. It will be seen that it was of the utmost importance to examine the papers and ballots of all the seven polls discarded by the supervisor, so that it might be known by the board what appeared therefrom. The law is well settled that very little attention should ordinarily be paid to mere irregularities in the proceedings of election officers which do not affect the merits of the case.

The supervisor's consolidated return purports to have been made out and sworn to at Baton Ronge, before the clerk of the district court, on the 11th of November. He swears that he went to New Orleans with his return on the 11th or 12th of November, and that he did not file the same with the clerk of the returning board until ten or twelve days thereafter. After arriving at New Orleans he swore to what is termed in Sherman's report his protest.

The law requires that his protest or statement upon the subject of intimidation, &c., shall be 'annexed to his consolidated return by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance," and that his return shall be forwarded by mail within twenty-four hours after he has received returns from the several polls. The law further provides that his return (consolidated) and the statements of votes cast, &c., prepared and used by the commissioners of election, are by him "to be inclosed in an envelope of strong paper or cloth, securely scaled." He did not forward his return by mail, but took it to New Orleans in person, and did not file it for ten or twelve days thereafter. We do not believe that his protest was filed with the returning board at the time of the filing of his consolidated return. We think this will appear from the proceedings of the board as set out in the Sherman report, as also from the testimony of Clover. He swears upon this point before the committee at New Orleans as follows:

By Mr. JENKS:

Q. I ask you plainly if you filed a protest under section 26 of the election law with your consolidated statement?

A. I don't think I filed anything with those papers, except those under the head or remarks.

Q. You know what I mean by a protest under section 26 of the election law?

A. Well, I will look at it; I have it here, [witness examining the law;] I don't think that I made a statement, any such statement, the one contemplated by this law, with my returns.

Q. Did you send such a statement to the board after you made your returns?

A. I don't recollect having done it; I testified, however; my testimony is on file.

Q. It does not make any difference; we are taking your testimony is one file.

A. No, sir; I don't think they did in writing?

A. No, sir; I don't think they did in writing.

Q. Did they make any returns to you of any such threats or violence under oath to you as supervisor of registration?

A. No, sir; they made none; for the reason that many of them were very badly frightened; were too badly frightened to think of it.

By Mr. Berber.

By Mr. BEEBE:

By Mr. Berbe:

Q. Was any statement made to you or to the returning board corroborated by three witnesses under the section of the law requiring that process?

A. I think there was, if that is what you have reference to. I don't know whether that accompanied the consolidated statement or not; I did not read the section all through; I will read it again. [Witness refers to the law.] I made such a statement as this, but I do not recollect positively whether it was included with my return to the board or not. Now that you call my attention in reference to the three witnesses reminds me that such a statement was made; now by whom I don't say; now I don't know whether it accompanied my report; I don't know that it did; I recollect now making such a statement?

Q. To whom did you make such a statement.

Q. I do not ask you what your duty was; I ask you plainly to whom did you make it?

A. Il don't know.

A. I don't know.

Q. Did the commissioners make any such statement in writing and under oath?

A. I don't know, sir. No, I think not.

By Mr. JENKS:

Q. On reflection you think you did return a statement or protest to the returning board in regard to threats, violence, and intimidation?

A. I don't recollect. I think I did make such a statement.
Q. And that you returned it to the returning board?

A. I don't recollect whether it was included in my statement. I don't know how begund in regard to threats, violence, and intimidation?

A. I don't recollect. I think I did make such a statement.

Q. And tha's you returned it to the returning board?

A. I don't recollect whether it was included in my statement. I don't know how it did go.

His power as a ministerial officer to file a protest ceased whenever he parted with the custody of his consolidated return.

The supervisor, in his protests, gives the names of three persons said to be maltreated. The first, William Payne, colored, he says was killed "shortly before or during registration." He does not say that Payne was a republican or that politics had anything to do with it. The second person named is Isadore Herron, colored, who, he says, was dragged by the neck with a rope until he was nearly dead, says Herron was a republican, but does not say that the act was committed because he was a republican. Herron filed an affidavit before the returning board, and does not charge that politics was in any manner involved. He says it occurred in February, 1876, which was long before registration began, and at a time when there was no political excitement in the parish. The fact is that at that time lynching of persons guilty of stealing hogs, cattle, and cotton in the seed was of very frequent occurrence; often very summary and very severe. The third and last person named is one Alexander Gilbert, said by the supervisor to be a prominent colored republican. Those seeking to do Gilbert some bodily harm, not finding him at home, are said to have put a rope around Mrs. Gilbert's neck, with the threat that if she did not disclose where her husband was she should be hung. This is the statement of the supervisor. He does not enlighten us as to the cause of this unlawful conduct, nor how it affected, if at all, the matter of Mr. Gilbert's registration. It is a fact of some significance that Gilbert was at that time having trouble with his own party, and was taken off the republican ticket as a candidate for representative. It is also not to be lost

There is a complaint or statement as to poll 2 in ward 2, which is poll 4 as known and numbered on the supervisor's consolidated return. Also, as to polls 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, and 14, as numbered on the supervisor's return, as heretofore explained. All of these statements purport to be corroborated by three witnesses, except those relating to poll 6, ward 4; poll 9, ward 7; and poll 11, ward 9. In all respects all of said statements are insufficient in substance and in form, and conferred no jurisdiction on the board to inquire into any of the matters which by law could be lawfully stated therein.

B. V. Baranco is the republican commissioner who makes complaint, as aforesaid, to poll 4. He swears there was general intimidation at that poll, &c. Notwithstanding Mr. Baranco's formidable statement, the board did not throw it out. It gave Hayes a majority of 233. Lieutenant Gerlach, Third United States Infantry, stationed at Baton Rouge, testified before this subcommittee that this man Baranco called him aside and said, "We fixed them; we got them tally-sheets and papers locked up in the boxes where they've got big democratic majorities, and they can't count them now."

anco called him aside and said, "We fixed them; we got them tally-sheets and ppers locked up in the boxes where they've got big democratic majorities, and they can't count them now."

Can it be that the failure to throw out poll 4 was in any degree due to the fact that Hayes had a majority there?

Was poll 10, in ward 8, retained for any such reason? There Hayes had a majority of 271. They threw out poll 6, where Hayes received 7 votes and Tilden 373, although the commissioner's statement was not corroborated by three witnesses. The same is true of poll 9, where Hayes got 8 votes and Tilden 177. They retained poll 11. Whether that was because the complaint of the commissioner was not corroborated by three witnesses, or because at that poll Hayes had a majority of 81, the board alone can with certainty know.

If there was so much intimidation on the day of the election, and colored men were coerced into voting the democratic ticket against their will, it seems most remarkable that but one of these commissioners mentions the name of a colored man who voted againsthis will. John McVeltz, a commissioner in ward 10, poll 12, names one Cooper, a colored man, as having voted against his will. The testimony of Cooper was not taken before the board, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. McVeltz had furnished the name of so valuable a witness.

Leroy Price (colored) made affidavit before the board that he went to poll 1, in the city of Baton Rouge, early in the morning, and waited until 3 o'clock p. m. without being able to vote, the democrats having possession of the poll and keeping all republicans from voting. This story is a little too much for average human credulity, for there were only 23 votes cast at that poll, and Hayes got 22 out of the 23.

credulity, for there were only 23 votes east at that poll, and Hayes got 22 out of the 23.

POLL 5.

Joseph Williams, republican, is the commissioner who makes complaint as to poll 5 in ward 3. First, he says that while on his way to the poll that morning he met two men on horseback, who said, "Come on; we are waiting for you;" says the two men then turned back and fired off their pistols; says that when he got to the polls those men took the ballot-box away from him; that he remonstrated, and they gave it back to him; that they took charge of the poll, saying they "did not care for the 4-d negro ofieer nor the soldiers that had charge of the poll, and they were going to run it," &c.

One Jacob Shields also made affidavit before the returning board that he was acting as a United States deputy marshal at that poll. That the democrats said they did not recognize any d-d-d negro officer, that it was a democratic ward, and they intended to carry it. That they had the negroes the way they wanted them, and that if they did not vote their way they would not be found alive on Wednesday morning. That they were inside the room, and had a dozen bottles of whisky sitting by the ballot-box. That they drove him away, &c. V. M. Lange, colored, was the other republican commissioner. Mr. Lange is a man of sound sense and of unquestioned character. He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1867-83 and of the Legislature in 1863; was the most active and influential colored republican in the parish, and made speeches in several of the wards during the last canvass, and was well received and well treated wherever he went by white and black. He contradicts most positively the statements of Williams and Shields. Says that Shields walked into the room about the time they were clearing it up preparatory to voting. The commissioners requested Shields to step outside, who exclamed. "Do you know who I am I" They told him they did not know who is was, but that they wishedhim to step outside. Shields then said, "By God, I know my Question. Of course you participated in making up the returns at that poll as one of the commissioners?

Answer. I was one of the commissioners, Jos. Williams was one, and Mr. Ed.

Answer. I was one of the commissioners, Jos. Williams was one, and Mr. Ed. Davis.

Q. You may state whether the poll-list, tally-sheets, statement of persons voted for, &c.—whether they were regularly conducted.

A. We complied with the instructions all the way through of the supervisor of registration; we furnished the boxes that the law required us to do, and we furnished Mr. Davis, representing the democratic party, with a tilly-sheet and statement, and we also kept one as republican commissioners. There was no stone left unturned.

Q. Do you know that these papers were returned to the supervisor of registration?

tion?

A. Mr. Williams came in that morning with me as commissioner, and he himself had the tally-sheet and statement turned over to Mr. Clover, and I think, if I am not mistaken, as soon as I had a conversation with him, that he turned over the tally-sheet to Mr. Clover, but the statement closed—no, it was the original—Mr. Clover refused to take it. At least, he told him he was not ready for it. He told him he would take it in a few minutes. I saw Mr. Williams three or four days afterward, and he told me Mr. Clover had not consented to take the original. That is the sheet that was to be sworn to before the close of the poll. I think it is the "original" that they call it.

- Q. Did you have any conversation with Clover yourself about that paper ?
  A. Yes, sir.
  Q. Did he give any reason why he did not take it?
  A. No, sir. He asked me who had the tally-sheet; who had the original.
  Im Mr. Williams, as he was the ticket-receiver; that Mr. Williams was the him Mr. innissioner.

  You may state whether at the close of the poll you counted the vote.

  Yes, sir.
- Yes, sir.

  Before you counted it, did you make out the list of the persons that voted?

  Yes, sir; persons voted for, and all complete.

  Did you state the number of votes received by each?

  Yes, sir.

  Did you state the number of ballots contained in the box?

- Yes, sir.
  Were any ballots rejected?
  No, sir.
  So there was no statement to make as to that?
  No, sir.
  State whether you made out two of those lists.
- We made three.

  A. Yes, sir.
  Q. By each of you?
  A. Yes, sir.
  Q. By whom were you sworn?
  A. Mr. T. R. Brady. He is a gentlemen who is justice of the peace in the third ward. Our instructions were from Mr. Clover that we could get any ci izen.
  Q. You offered one of these with the papers to the supervisor of registration, Clover?
- Q. You offered one of the Clover?
  A. Yes, sir.
  Q. One of the triplicate sheets sworn to be refused to take?
  A. Yes, sir; that is what I understood from Mr. Williams.
  Q. He refused in your presence?
  A. Mr. Williams told me that he refused to take them. I saw Mr. Clover, and be gave me no reason for refusing to take them.
  Q. (By Mr. Beebe.) Did he admit that he had refused?
  A. No, sir.

  A. No, sir.
  Q. (By Judge New.) Do you mean that you spoke to him about it?
  A. Yes, sir; he told me that he would see Mr. Williams.
  Q. Did you mention to him when you approached him the matter of his having refused to take the sheet that you speak of?
  A. No, sir; the question came up in this way: I asked him had Mr. Williams delivered it to him. He told me that he would see Mr. Williams
  Q. He did not state whether Mr. Williams had offered it or delivered it to him?
  A. Mr. Williams told me that he had refused. I am satisfied that he had that in
- his possession.

  Q. Do you know whether one of these triplicate sheets was filed with the clerk of the district court?

  A. I could not say. Mr. Davis and I drew a receipt for the box and set down the votes cast at that precinct, and I gave the receipt to Mr. Ed. Davis.

  POLL 6.

- the votes cast at that precinct, and I gave the receipt to Mr. Ed. Davis.

  POLL 6.

  J. L. Lapierre is the republican commissioner, who complains as to poll 6, in ward 4. His statement was not corrob orated by three witnesses, and was, therefore, as well as for other reasons, wholly insufficient. His statement is as follows as to the day of the election:

  J. L. Lapierre, sworn and examined, says:
  I reside in the first ward of the city of Baton Rouge. I was one of the three commissioners of election appointed to attend at poll No. I, in the fourth ward. I arrived at poll on the morning of the 7th day of November, 1876, a few minutes before six o'clock a. m. My duty as commissioner of election was to keep a written record of all persons voting at said poll. I kept this list until the closing of the polls. After the polls were closed, at six o'clock p. m., I began to keep the tally sheets, or lists. I progressed until about ten o'clock p. m., when I became so exhausted for the want of proper sustenance that I could proceed no further. I had received no food during the day, and was so completely overcome that I had to stop work. At this time there were some unauthorized persons inside of the poll who assumed to continue and complete my work at the tally-sheets during a period of five hours, when I recovered, and assumed and completed the work began by me. When the tally-sheets were completed, the original written records, tally-sheets, and poll-book, or lists, were locked up and sealed in the ballot-box. I insisted upon taking the tally-sheets and written records into my possession, intending to bring them to the city of Baton Rouge and deliver them to the supervisor of re_istration, as required by law, but an outsider said that these original papers should be sealed up in the ballot-box. These unauthorized persons insisted that I should not take them to twen. I was sworn by the supervisor of registration to bring these returns to town.

  Inside of the poll, on the day of election, I was offered liquor, and refused i

- in the ballot-box. These unauthorized persons insisted that I should not take them to town. I was sworn by the supervisor of registration to bring these returns to town.

  Inside of the poll, on the day of election, I was offered liquor, and refused it. I believe that in the building where the poll was located there was liquor. I saw one man under the influence of liquor myself. The reason I did not bring the tally-sheets to town was because I could not convince these people that the records should be intrusted to me.

  It will be rembered that the box for this poll is one of the boxes which, after much entreaty, was opened by the beard.

  It will be seen from Lapierre's statement that when the original papers were completed they were locked up in the box. He says that some unauthorized person insisted that he should not be permitted to take charge of the papers; that they should be locked up in the box. He says also, "The reason I did not bring the tally-sheets to town was because I could not convince these people that the records should be intrusted to me." It seems that the papers were locked up in the box and taken to the supervisor well guarded by "thirty-five or forty horse-men." Lapierre was not "exhausted," but leading the advance.

  Alonzo Woods, democrat, and Gustave Le Blane, colored republican, were the other commissioners. Woods sewears there was no intimidation, and that he gave out republican tickets himself. Le Blane swears that everything was quiet, and that there was no trouble at all; that there was no disorderly conduct or ugly behavior on the part of anybody. That all had an opportunity of voting, and that he saw no interference and heard no complaint. (See his testimony on page 68) That the exhausted state into which Mr. Lapierre fell, and that his place was filled for a time by another, not sworn, but called by one of the officers of the election, will not make the election void is very clear from the authorities.

  But to cap the elimax as to this poll. Mr. Lapierre himself appeared and testi

- H. F. Billups, republican, is the commissioner who complains as to poll 7, (Port Hudson), ward 5. His complaint as to the day of election is as follows:

  I, H. F. Billups, was a commissioner of election at this poll. I was at Port Hudson at four o'clock in the morning. West Woodside, the democratic commissioner, at about five o'clock, procured a house to hold the election at. He said that there was no use putting up stakes to keep the people from crowding the poll, and that my instructions to do so were not worth a dann.

  About nine o'clock in the morning there were about fifty democrats marched about thirty colored men in line to the polls and handed them the democratic ticket, and stood there and guarded them until they had voted; they would not allow them to get republican tickets. They fold the United States marshal that they would have him arrested if he did not stop distributing republican tickets. They did not allow any republicans to vote till about three or four o'clock. They crowled the room while the count was going on, and outsiders kept tally-sheets, and made the republican commissioner correct his by theirs.

  I have heard many reports of republicans being bull-dozed, and there was great fear and apprehension among the republican people.

  I have seen bands of masked men armed with guns and pistols riding around in the night at the hour of twelve o'clock; and I know that the colored people are in fear of their lives on account of these men, and I have been told by colored men that they voted the democratic ticket to save their lives.

  We have already called attention to the fact that four colored republicans made affidavit before the board that they voted the republican ticket at that poll without molestation. There were 92 republican votes cast at that poll; nearly, if not quite, all must have been colored. We now submit the affidavit of A. H. Levi, esq. This affidavit was furnished to the returning board while it was entertaining and considering as evidence exparte affidavits:

- STATE OF LOUISIANA,
  Parish of East Baton Rouge:
- Parish of East Baton Rouge:

  Personally came and appeared before me, the undersigned authority, a justice of the peace in and for said parish and State, holding in the first ward, city of Baton Rouge, A. Levi, now residing in said city, who, on eath, does deposes and says that he is a colored man, raised in the State of Massachusetts, where he was admitted as an attorney at law; that for the last two years he has been following his profession in the parish and city of Baton Rouge. Avers that at the election for State and national officers held on the 7th day of November, 1876, this present month and year, he was a United States supervisor of election for the fifth ward of said parish; that he was present when the voting began, and remained until the last ballot was counted by the commissioners; that he saw no threats, acts of violence, or intimidation used by either political party for the purpose of preventing or obstructing any person, either white or black, from exercising the right of suffrage as they thought best. The voting was done by both parties in a quiet and orderly manner. There was a feeling of kindness manifested by both white and black, democrats and republicans. I am and have always been a pronounced republican; alwocated, publicly and privately, the election of the national and State republican it cket, and so voted on the day of the election. Was appointed a United States supervisor in the interest of the republican party.

  A. H. LEVI.

  Sworn to and subscribed before me officially this the 20th day of November, A.

  D. 1876.
  - F. W. NEPHLER, Justice of the Peace.

- Oliver McKitrick, republican commissioner, makes the following allegation as to what occurred on the day of the election at poll 8, ward 6:
- "That on the day of the election at poil 8, ward 6:

  "That on the day of election, at and near the said poll, there were menaces, threats, violence, and other acts of intimidation used which tended to prevent and did prevent a fair, free, and peaceable full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish. The facts relating thereto are as follows: I have had many colored men tell me they had to vote the democratic ticket or they would be compelled to leave the parish. Every colored man who voted democratic was given a guarantee against the bull-dozers, who they were to show it to if they came to see them. They would not give this guarantee to any colored man until they saw him vote the democratic ticket."
- not give this guarantee to any colored man until they saw him vote the democratic ticket."

  It is difficult to tell whether "the facts relating thereto," which the commissioner undertakes to give, came under his personal observation or not on the day of election; nor is it at all clear that he means to be understood as swearing that anything of that kind occurred at that poll. Especially is this in doubt when it is observed that the introductory sentence is the stereotyped phraseology with which almost every one commences, those words being intended to cover the law. A. Williams, colored republican, swears that he visited this ward, and saw nothing that could interfere with a fair registration and vote. He also swears that the election throughout the parish was quiet. He is the business manager of the Grand Era, the republican paper of that parish.

  Mortimer Price, a colored man, seventy-five years old, who voted at this poll, swears that all was quiet so far as he could see. Says that he knows of "no threats before the election nor dissatisfaction afterward." Says he is a republican, but does "not follow party discipline." That he voted the democratic ticket, believing that good would follow. William Martin was the democratic commissioner at this poll. He swears that the election passed off in good order, and was in all respects fair. Says, also, that he attended a republican meeting in this ward, and that it was held without difficulty or disorder. Unless Mr. Martin is to be discredited because he is white and votes the democratic ticket, his testimony cannot be disregarded. We invite particular attention to the testimony of Tony Foster, colored, of this ward, page 111. (See, also, testimony by Peter Williams, colored, page 97.)

POLL 9.

- J. P. Furlow, one of the republican commissioners for poll 9, ward 7, makes the following statement of what took place at that poll on the day of the election:

  1, J. P. Furlow, was a commissioner of election on the 7th of Novembor, 1876, at poll No. 1, ward 7, parish of East Baton Ronge.

  On my way to the poll at which I was stationed I was halted by an armed body of democrats—about eight or ton in the body. They interrogated us; then let us pass. When we got to the poll there was an armed body of democrats—about twenty-five—who surrounded the poll. By the time the poll opened they had increased their number to upward of fifty. When we were ready to open the poll one Andrew Booth and one H. Harelson, both democrats, said that our poll-list was a damned radical trick, and they were not going to have the voting conducted according to it or to my instructions, and when I told them they were my guide and I must obey them, he said if we tried it we would have hell right there, as they were going to run things to suit themselves; but after a while we compromised the affair and I opened the poll. Out of what is usually a republican majority of from 75 to 100 there was but 8 republican votes cast, and 5 of them were the commissioners, mar shals, and constables. I had conversation with many colored men on that day, and they told me although they wanted to vote the republican ricket, yet that if they did they had been threatened with death or bodily harm. They said also that they would have staid at home, but were told that they must come out and vote the democratic ticket or they would be regulated. The democrats would bring colored men up to the polls, look at their registration papers, give them a democratic ticket, and turn them over to their master of ceremonies, who conducted him to the box and made him deposit his ticket, then passhim over to another democrat, who gave him a certificate against the bull-dozers. All colored men were made to vote an open democratic ticket, and the master of ceremonies then called out his name and number, and he got his certificate against the regulators.

All day the democrats drank whisky and whooped and hallooed around the outside of the poll, and thus terrorized and drove away all republican voters.

W. H. Patterson, the other republican commissioner for this poll, swears that it was quiet there, and that he saw no intimidation or unfair treatment of the colored voters. Mr. Patterson gives the following account of the men Furlow says he met: "I was ahead with Mr. Furlow—I was in the buggy and he was on horse-back—and some man hallooed, 'Hallo!' I think, three times. Furlow answered back, 'Hallo it is.' They stopped then, and I got off a little piece, and they came up and asked where I was bound. I said, 'Going down to the polls.' They said, 'Are you commissioners?' Furlow said, 'Yos.' And they said, 'All right; go ahead.''' He also swears that he did not see these men at the polls.

Jackson Hamilton (colored) testified as follows about this poll and ward:

Question. What is your age?
Answer. Fifty-two the 7th of October last.
Q. Where do you live—what ward?
A. Seventh ward, in this parish.
Q. How long have you lived in this parish?
A. I lived here about thirty-five or thirty-six years, more or less.
Q. Are you pretty well acquainted in your ward?
A. I am. I ought to be pretty well acquainted.
Q. How long have you lived in the seventh ward?
A. All the time, except when I went to New Orleans or to Port Hudson to get something. Outside of that I always lived right here.
Q. What is your polities? What ticket did you vote at the last election?
A. Democrat ticket.
Q. You are a minister of the gospel, are you not?
A. Yee, sir.

something. Outside of that I always lived right here.

Q. What is your polities? What ticket did you vote at the last election?

A. Democrat ticket.

Q. You are a minister of the gospel, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state whether you voted the democratic ticket of your own free will and choice.

A. Well, I voted it of my own free will and mind; I wasn't forced by nobody. I voted it because I thought it was best to do it, and I done it with all my heart. No mistake about that.

Q. State whether there were other colored men who voted the democratic ticket in your ward or not.

A. Yes, sir; several hundred.

Q. Can you name any of them?

A. Well, there was Harvey Scott, and Edmund Henry, and others; I don't recollect all the names.

A. Well, there was harvey scott, and Edmund Henry, and others; I don't recollect all the names.

Q. How many colored men, in your judgment, voted the democratic ticket in your ward? What would be your estimate of the number?

A. Well, I was at the poll from sun-up, and I seen about fifty or sixty. I believe all voted the democratic ticket except eight that didn't vote it. They all voted all voted the democratic ticket except eight this data.

Q. Was there a Tilden and Hendricks club in your ward?

A. No, sir; I don't know if there was. There was a party of men come there and spoke there. I didn't see them. I don't know.

Q. I ask you if there was a Tilden and Hendricks club organized in your ward which colored men joined?

A. Yes sir.

Which colored men joined?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you a member of that club?
A. I was.
Q. State whether you were an officer of that club.
A. Yes, sir, vice-president.
Q. How many colored members were there in that club? Give your best recollection.

Q. How many colored members were there in that club? Give your best recollection.

A. I believe there was sixty-five or seventy. Mr. Ed. Burnett has got the number; he is the secretary.

Q. Was the majority of the club colored men?

A. Yes, sir. At first there wasn't but thirty or forty colored men. I don't know how many white gentlemen belonged to it.

Q. Do you know whether the colored men who joined that club did so of their own free will and choice?

A. Yes, sir; they did; that is according to the conversations I had with them.

Q. Do you know, or did you hear, of any intimidation, or any threats, or any means of any kind used by the white men in order to get the colored men to join their club?

A. No, sir; not any; not a word was said except to do as we like; the word was for the colored people to come in and join of his own free will and mind.

Q. Did you attend any republican speaking?

A. Yes, sir; one.

Q. Where was that?

A. On Mr. Forman's plantation, at his residence, in the yard; that was on a Sunday.

A. Yes, sir; one.
Q. Where was that?
A. On Mr. Forman's plantation, at his residence, in the yard; that was on a Sunday.
Q. You state that was a republican meeting?
A. Yes, sir; they had it in the yard.
Q. Who spoke there; do you recollect?
A. I don't know, sir; there was some black and white men spoke there.
Q. Were there any democrats present?
A. Yes, sir; outside the fence; they didn't go in there; the republicans was inside the fence. I was on the fence, sitting there; I didn't have nothing to see, but I was right there; yes, sir.
Q. On the day of election did you give out tickets to men who wanted to vote?
A. I didn't have but two.
Q. Did you see any colored men there distributing tickets to voters?
A. No, sir; there was one man, I believe. One man give me a ticket; that was a republican ticket, and he said that was the right ticket, and to put it in the ballot-box,
Q. Who gave you the other ticket?
A. He is here. I disremember his name. This man that gave me that radical ticket was Mr. McMahon. When he told me to put it in the box. I was the third man voted.
Q. Do you know, from the talk you had with your colored friends, what reasons they assigned for voting the democratic ticket this time; I mean when you were alone, outside of the hearing of white men?
A. Yes, sir; I talked to one.
Q. What did he say?
A. Well, that the colored men ought to have a change. Harvey Scott said that we was all poor men, and the times was bad, and he thought a change would be for the better; that it was better to try the democratis than keep on like we'd been doing and go to starvation. I was determined to have a change if my vote had anything to do with it.
Q. Did you hear other colored men speak in that way when not in the hearing of white men?
A. Yes, sir; I heard men talk when they was coming along on the road jogging along and in the grog-shop; they all pretty much said that they must have a change, and they was going to try the democrats and see if they would do better. Some few said that it wouldn't make a change.

Q. How long have you lived there in that ward?
A. I am fifty-two years old, and I came here when I was fifteen years old; you can count it yourself.
Q. You are pretty well acquainted all over the parish?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you ever been out of the parish?
A. Yes, sir.; I have been over to West Baton Rouge Parish.
Q. When you went out to preach, you electioneered some?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You believe that politics and religion go together?
A. No, sir; I don't believe that. I don't believe they mixes up, but I am constrained to do something or other.
Q. Who are the leading democrats in your ward? I mean colored.
A. Harvey Scott is one, Edmund Harris, and me.
Q. Who are the leading white democrats in your ward?
A. Mr. Ed. Burnet, Samuel Halsom. I can't tell you much about the white men because I can't get close to them. They talks for themselves.
Q. You can't talk to white men?
A. I can talk to them, but I don't.
Q. When you joined that Tilden and Hendricks club there was not many members?
A. No, sir; there was about three or four.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was the President?
A. Sam. Harrison.
Q. Did you make any political speeches during the campaign?
A. Only two; poor ones at that.
Q. Where was that?
A. Near Mr. Charles's store, in the doctor's garden.
Q. You did not cast many republican votes in your ward?
A. No, sir.
Q. How many?
A. Eight, I believe; I don't know how many.
Q. You do not mean to cast any at the next election?
A. Not if I can help it.
Q. You do not know anything as to what influences were brought to bear upon the colored people generally to join these Tilden clubs?
A. No, sir.
Q. You say nobody attempted to influence you in any way?
A. No, sir; never did.
Q. Nobody ever said anything to you about it?
A. No, sir; I was satisfied.
Q. Who came to you and importuned you to join the club?
A. No one; I was going around the colored club, and Harvey Scott said, "Let's get together and do something." So we got together, a few of us, and we elected Sam. Harrison president. We didn't know exactly how to go about it, because we is colored men and we didn't have no education, and we thought we'd call on the white gentlemen to help us.
Q. Did you see any acts of violence toward colored republicans because they were republicans?
A. I didn't see it; I heard it.

A. I heard there was some intimidated; some was beat; but I didn't believe it.
I can't tell anything about other people.
Q. Had you no other reason assigned for this?
A. Than for being republicans?
Q. Yes.
A. Well, it was for stealing hogs and beeves.
Q. Did you see anything about it?
A. I seen that, and I was willing to join the democrats to take down that stealing.

See testimony of Alfred Nelson and David Jones, colored republicans, as to this poll and ward, pages 52 and 34. See also pages 41 and 82.

The statement of this commissioner, it will be remembered, is not corroborated by three witnesses.

Joseph M. Henry, republican commissioner for poll 11, in ward 9, says that "the election at said poll was reasonably fair, free, and peaceable." This ward gave Hayes a majority of 81.

John McVeltz, republican commissioner for poll 12, ward 10, makes the following statement. We quote from it all that relates to the day of the election. After the usual introduction, he says:

"I, John McVeltz, was a commissioner of election on the 7th day of November, 1876, at poll 1, ward 10, parish of East Baton Rouge; when the hour for opening the poll came the democratis appointed four men, who acted as democratic, on their own responsibility, to act as commissioners; the republicans had two. Mr. Morgan, of the democratic commissioners, then marched a large democratic club, took charge of about fifty or seventy-five colored men, told them they must vote the democratic ticket; marched them to the polls, handed them democratic tickets, and made them vote them; marched them to a democrat, who gave them each a safe-conduct against the regulators; they did not allow any republican tickets to be distributed or voted; there was but four republican tickets voted, and they were cast by the commissioners and marshals. I talked to many colored men; they said they were republicans, and wanted to vote the republican tickets, but that they had been told that if they did they would be killed; one colored man especially. Cooper, said he had a crop there which would be taken away from him and he killed unless he voted the democratic ticket; after he voted and got his certificate against the regulators, while speaking to me, he began to cry and tear up the paper the democrate gave him, and said he only voted the ticket to save his life; many others told me the same thing; there was no republican allowed to come to that poll to vote; and the democrate poenly said that unless they carried that poll the bull-dozing had but just commenced, for they were determined the damned radicals should not have the parish. When we went to count the votes the tally-sheets were all kept by the democrate, and when morning came they crarsed them, as they said they had made some mistake.

"My poll ought to have gone at least 150 majority for th and when morning came they erased them, as they said they had made some mistake.

"My poll ought to have gone at least 150 majority for the republicans, and would, had the colored men been allowed to vote as they wanted to.

"The democratic called off the names of some colored men who went to town to vote, and say that unless they vote the democratic ticket they would fix him, the son of a bitch; the democratic commissioner took the box after the election; the supervisor told me to take charge of the box, but the democrats said it was their box, and they were going to do as they pleased with it; they made me sign the tally-list that was fixed up.

"My poll was ten miles from town, and there being no republicans but us four officers, the democrats forced us to do as they said, and told us unless we did they would give us hell. Two democrats voted whose names were not on the poll-list;

they brought an affidavit from a justice of the peace that they were entitled to vote, and we were compelled to take their ticket. Ulover, in the remarks indorsed on his consolidated return, makes no allusion to this poll. If McVeltz was "made to sign the tally-list that was fixed up," is it not a little remarkable that he did not so inform the supervisor? It is evident that he did not, for Clover would have been only too glad of such an opportunity to throw out this poll.

We have carefully inspected each affidavit filed by the republicans before the returning board, and have been able to find but one which can be said to corroborate McVeltz as to what occurred on the day of the election at his poll. The affidavit to which we refer contains this language: "I know that there was not a free, fair, and peaceable election in the tenth ward on the 7th of November last, and that colored men and republicans did not dare to have a republican ticket or to give one to others." It is impossible to tell from this language whether he was present or not. He does notsay he was, and does not mention any particular occurrence or act committed.

Frank Everson, (colored,) of this ward, swore that he talked among his colored neighbors about voting the democratic ticket. We quote from him as follows:

Question. In what ward do you live?
Answer. Tenth ward.
Q. How long have you lived there?
A. This year makes eleven years.
Q. Have you lived anywhere clee in the parish?
A. I lived twenty-two years at Mr. McCabe's.
Q. Are you well acquainted in the ward where you live?
A. Yes, sir,
Q. Do you know most of the colored people there?
A. Yes, sir; pretty much.

Q. Have you lived anywhere else in the parish?
A. I lived twenty-two years at Mr. McCabe's.
Q. Are you well acquainted in the ward where you live?
A. Yes, sir,
Q. Do you know most of the colored people there?
A. Yes, sir; pretty much.
Q. How did you vote at the last election?
A. Democratic tirket.
Q. How did you vote before?
A. Radical ticket.
Q. Did you talk with any of your neighbors and friends about voting the democratic ticket, and did they talk to you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did you talk with each other? What did you say?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did you talk with each other? What did you say?
A. We just studied over the whole thing, and saw exactly how we were treated in this last election; and it grieved me right smart. I had little children growing up. I didn't see no way and no how that I could get along at all. I talked it over with my colored friends, and then I went to my white friends and advised with them, and asked them what was the matter that we didn't have schools. They said they didn't know. I said "Something looks wrong. It looks like we were all going to destruction. I work hard and have taxes to pay, and think my children ought to have some of it." I talked with some colored people and said, "What do you think of it?" They said, "We cannot do anything but come together and see if we cannot put in a better government, and then may be probably we will have better times, and have schools to educate our children."
Q. Did any of these men who talked in that way belong to the democratic club in your ward?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any of these men who taked in that way belong to the democratic club in your ward?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you belong to that club?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you join the club of your own free will?
A. Yes, sir, we talked over the thing long before the election.
Q. Was it your own opinion and conviction that you ought to vote the democratic ticket?

A. Yes, sir, we talked over the thing long before the election.

Q. Was it your own opinion and conviction that you ought to vote the democratic ticket?

A. That was my opinion, because I talked to them long before the election—some of my colored friends—and we all advised and looked into that thing. Some didn't look into it. I don't suppose they had knowledge to look and see how their children were going. I looked into it and saw that my children were going to destruction. In place of playing and romping, I wanted them to go to school. In a little while they would be in the field, and then they would be too big. I wanted them to go now, while they can attend to it, and put their minds to it.

Q. You say this thing has been thought of and talked of by you for a good while?

A. Yes sir.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long ago did you get to thinking and talking about this to your colored friends?
A. We have been talking about it—it has been a right smart while—since the last

A. We have been tanking about 17—18 has been a right-stank election.
Q. That is, within the last four years?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you talked with any old men of your color?
A. Yes, sir; Brother Winfrey. I talked with my brother, and we talked the thing

A. Yes, sir; Brother Winfrey. I talked withmy brother, and we talked the thing over.
Q. You speak of them as brothers in the church?
A. Yes, sir; we talked the thing over, and I would go to some of my old white friends, and advise with them. We considered into the matter.
Q. A good many of you colored people were getting pretty hot over this thing of not having any schools?
A. Yes, sir; I was. I fought on that thing last August before this election; I fought on it on account of my children, and I thought that I would keep fighting and see how it would be. I wanted my children educated. We have to pay taxes, and I wanted my children to have their rights.
Q. How old a man are you?
A. I was born in 1824.
Q. These colored men that belonged to the club that you belonged to, did they talk and act as though they wanted to vote the democratic ticket?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know of any case in your ward, or anywhere else in the parish, where it was pretended by a colored man that he had joined a democratic club or had voted the democratic ticket because he was afraid to do otherwise?
A. I never heard of it.
Other colored witnesses testified to the same effect. (See testimony of Edward Taylor and Simeon Williams, on page 120.) Williams gives his opinion of the cause of Jerry Myers being lynched. (See also on this subject the testimony of Alfred Peun, page 103, &c.) This is one of the wards in which A. V. Lange says he made republican speeches.

FOLL 13,

Cyrus Strother and James Casby, the republican commissioners for the poll 13, in ward 11, gave separate statements. That of Strother as to day of election is as follows:

"That on the said day of election, at and near the poll, there was intimidation and threats used to colored men which tended to prevent, and did prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish. The facts relating thereto are as follows:

"They opened the poll on the morning of election at six o'clock, and that everything progressed smoothly until about the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., when a man from the parish of Livingston, who was not a citizen of the parish of East Baton Rouge, attempted to vote at a poll where he was a commissioner. Upon being refused the right to vote, the democratic supervisor insisted that the man's vote should be received notwithstanding he had not a certificate entitling him to do so. He says that upon his refusing to receive the man's vote the crowd outside the polling place began to make violent demonstrations, and that he felt insecure in his position as a commissioner, and was in fear of bodily harm. He says that the life of a colored republican in East Baton Ronge is very insecure, and that he has known colored men to have been whipped on account of being republicans, and that he is afraid to return to the parish for fear of bodily harm.

"The colored men were brought to the polls by white democrats, who held the registration-papers of the colored men in their hands and compelled them to vote an open democratic ticket, and compelled the white men around the poll to stand back until the colored men had voted the democratic ticket, and did not deliver to the colored men their registration-certificates until they were ready to deposit their votes. Persons presented themselves (white democrats) and demanded the right to vote on written affidavits, and we were compelled to receive their ballots against our protests through fear of bodily harm.

"The original written record of votes cast at the polls having been lost or mislaid, the crowd insisted on me signing what purported to be a duplicate copy of the written record of votes, but I refused to do so, because I knew it was not correct."

That of Casby is as follows:

"I, James Casby, was a commissioner of election at this poll. On the morning of the election the democrats formed outside of the poll, and as each colored man came up they asked him for his registration-paper, and then handed him a democratic ticket, and walked with him to the box, handed in his registration-paper, and made the voter hand in a democratic ticket. They did not allow any republican tickets to be shown or distributed, and there were but three voted at that poll, and they were cast by the two republican regulators; out those who due not have this sare-conduct were tout that they would be visited some night.

Strother says that, the original record of votes cast at these polls having been lost or mislaid, the crowd insisted on him signing what purported to be a duplicate copy of the written record of votes, and that he refused to do so, because he knew that it was not correct. Casby says that at night, when counting the tickets, the democratis crowded in and filled the room, and made the republican commissioner conform his tally-sheet to that made out by a democratic by-stander, and that himself and the other republican commissioner both refused to sign the tally-sheet. Says he took them to the clerk of the parish. Says the original records were afterward lost or carried away by some person. That then the democrats wanted them to swear to a list made out by them, which they refused to do.

The returning board, with the statement of Casby before it, made no effort to find out what had become of those papers. At this precinct Tilden's majority was 192. We believe that if the majority had been the other way, the original papers would not have been lost or mislaid, and that if they had been, the board would have used every diligence to find them. W. E. Atkinson was the democratic commissioner at this poll. His testimony is as follows:

By Judge New:

Question. Did you act as a commissioner at the last election?

Answer. I did.
Q. In what ward?
A. Eleventh ward, poll 13.
Q. On behalf of what party did you act?
A. The democratic party.
Q. Who were the other commissioners?
A. James Casby and Silas Strother.
Q. You may state, sir, as to whether the law was complied with as to the poll-ist, tally-sheet, and account of persons voted for, and in other respects.
A. Yes, sir; it was carried out completely to the instructions we received.
Q. After the close of the poll, what was done with the papers?
A. The tally-sheets were made there.
Q. The instructions were received from whom?
A. F. A. Clover.
Q. After the polls were closed, what did you do?
A. The ballots were counted and tally-sheets made out.
Q. Was there a list made out of persons that had voted?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a statement of the votes received by each candidate †
A. Yes, sir; a statement of votes was made out, according to the instructions, at the head of the tally-sheets.

Q. Did you make out a statement of the ballots in the box?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, these statements of votes that were made out, state if they were made out in duplicate or not.

A. From the instructions we received, there was one original and one duplicate Copy.

Q. What was done with those duplicates after they were made out?

A. They were brought to the clerk's office.

Q. Who took them there?

A. Ourselves, the comissioners; I bring one tally-sheet and James Casby the other.

Q. Did all three of the commissioners go to the clerk's office?

A. You mean when we made out those papers? Yes, sir; and Cyrus Strother brought the poll-list.

Q. What took place when you got there; did you see Mr. Clover?

A. I brought in the papers here at the office.

Q. To whom?

A. I brought them to Mr. Clover in the clerk's office, and handed him the original.

Q. Of each paper?

A. No, sir; there was an original copy, two tally-sheets, made out one by each party, and a duplicate copy was handed to the clerk of the court; but the tally-list couldn't be found.

Q. Where was the tally-list?

A. I saw it in the possession of Cyrus Strother up to five minutes of Mr. Clover demanding the tally-list.

Q. Where did you last see it?

A. In the court-room, in the possession of Mr. Cyrus Strother, in his side-pocket, sticking out right here.

Q. Did Clover ask for it?

Q. Did Clover ask for it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What reply was made to him, if any?
A. The reply was made, "I throwed it down on the table."
Q. Who said that?
A. Cyrus Strother. He said, "I threw it down here on the table."
Q. What reply did Clover make to that, if any?
A. I don't exactly remember his words.
Q. Was anything more said by Strother than that?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What else did he say?
A. I asked him, just before we came in with the papers, where the tally-list was and he said, "I have got it here," at the same time showing it to me in his side-pocket of his coat. I asked him the question because I was anxious to keep the papers together.
Q. Did you see him throw any papers down on the table in the clerk's office?
A. No, sir; I did not.
Q. Were you with him all the time after he told you he had the tally-list in his side-pocket and up to the time he said he threw it down on the table?
A. Yes, sir; I was.
Q. Were you in his immediate presence?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Let me understand you well. You say it was the tally-list or poll-list?
A. I mean poll-list.
Q. What conversation took place, if any, between Strother and Clover after Strother had made the remark that he had thrown the paper down on the table?
A. Mr. Clover didn't pay any attention to him.
Q. Do you recollect any conversation that took place between them upon that subject after the remark was made by Strother?
A. No, sir; I don't.
Q. Was that paper found?
A. I never saw it again. I don't know.

A. 1 never saw it again. I don't know.

By Mr. GAINEY:

Q. Were you commissioner in the eleventh ward on the day of the election ?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You were the democratic commissioner there ?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Mr. James Casby and Cyrus Strother were the republican commissioners?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you present at the poll throughout the day?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. All the time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Until the vote was tallied?
A. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. All the time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Until the vote was tallied?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know of any persons voting at that poll without registration-papers?
A. No, sir.
Q. Was there any person who presented an affidavit there who voted thereon?
A. There was one person tried to vote on an affidavit, but the republican commissioners refused him.
Q. Where did he live?
A. He lived in the eleventh ward, in this parish.
Q. Did you come back with the ballot-boxes to the court-house here?
A. I did.
Q. With the tally-sheets and poll-list locked up in that box?
A. No, sir; they were not locked up in the box.
Q. Who carried them?
A. I carried one and James Casby carried the other.
Q. What did you carry?
A. Tally-sheets, one of them.
Q. And I understand you to say Strother carried the poll-list?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What became of that poll-list?
A. I can't tell you what became of it; the last time I saw it it was in the possession of the republican commissioner, Mr. Strother.
Q. When did you see it last?
A. Within five minutes of the time Mr. Clover called for the papers.
Q. That was where?
A. In the clerk's office.
Q. Did the republican commissioner hand that poll-list to the supervisor?
A. He did.
Q. What was his answer?
A. "I threw it on the table among those papers;" that was the answer of the commissioner.
O. Do you belong to any secret political organization in this parish?

A. He did.
Q. What was his answer?
A. "I threw it on the table among those papers;" that was the answer of the commissioner.
Q. Do you belong to any secret political organization in this parish?
A. I don't.
Q. Have you heard of any organization existing here known as "bull-dozers" or "regulators?"
A. No, sir; I have not.
Q. Do you not know, from report and otherwise, that a great many colored men have been hung, shot, and otherwise maltreated in this parish by these regulators and bull-dozers?
A. Not a great many. I have heard of three or four instances, but I didn't hear it was done by these parties.
Q. Who did you hear it was done by?
A. Some unknown persons; none were designated.
Q. How did you ascertain it was done by unknown persons?
A. It was so reported in the neighborhood.
Q. What was the report in the neighborhood? Wasn't it that the bull-dozers had done it?
A. No; it was said to have been done by unknown persons.
Q. Now have not you heard your neighbors say that these outrages upon these colored people had been perpetrated by bull-dozers, or regulators?
A. Well, I think I have in one or two instances.
Q. Do you not know that a great many of the colored people throughout the parish were very much intimidated by these parties of bull-dozers?
A. No, sir; I on't know any such a thing.
Q. Do you know of any colored men being brought to the polls to vote the democratic teket by white men?
A. No, sir; not at the poll I was at.
Q. Did the colored men voting at your poll vote the democratic ticket openly?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did the republican colored men vote? Did they vote their ticket openly?
A. Yes, sir, to an not.
Q. You say you are not a bull-dozer?
A. No, sir I don't.
There can be but little doubt that the papers relating to this poll were purposely "lost or carried eway."

Henry Raymond is the republican commissioner who complains of poll 14, ward 12:

"That on the said day of election, at or near the said poll, there were threats' menaces, violences, and other acts of intimidation, which tended to prevent, and did prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish. The facts relating thereto are as follows: It was not safe for a colored man to vote the republican ticket. He heard that a large democratic meeting had been held the night before the election to force colored men to vote their ticket, and to make them do so or leave the country, and if they refused to leave that they must stand the consequences. The republicans of East Baton Rouge were generally afraid, in dread of their lives and of bodily harm from the democrats. He says that he is afraid to return to the parish for fear of bodily harm on account of his politics, he being a republican. He says that the majority of colored men in the parish were forced to join the democratic clubs and vote the democratic ticket."

The utter want of specific statement as to what transpired on the day of the election will be observed.

A.V. Lange swears that he made a republican speech in this ward. He says: "We fired, I suppose, about four or five cannon, calling the people to assemble, notifying them. We took them on surprise, and we fired cannon, and the people immediately gathered the moment that they heard the cannon."

He says there were democrats present, and they paid particular attention to the speeches and made no disturbance. He says that himself and the other speakers were cheered by the republicans when they concluded. He says that this meeting was held to rally the republicans of that ward to attend a republican barbecue to be held in Baton Rouge.

Question. In what ward do you live?

Answer. The second ward.
Q. Is that in this city?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are a magistrate, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you attend at any voting-places the day of election in this city?
A. I voted in the second ward. I was around at all polls in the town here.
Q. State how the election went off.
A. Peaceably and quietly, as far as I saw, sir, at each poll here in town.
Q. Have any complaints been filed with you or made before you on account of any difficulties on the day of election?
A. Not any, sir.
Q. During the period of registration, say between the 28th of August and the 28th of October, what was the state and condition of the city and parish, so far as known to you, as to a quiet and orderly state of things?

A. It was very quiet so far as I know. I was in the house most of the time. I have been sick for a long time. I didn't hear of any difficulties that I can remember.

Q. You have no recollection of any complaints made to you, or during that period!

A. I know that there has been none made to me directly.

Q. What do you know on the subject of colored men voting the republican or democratic ticket of their own free will, or on account of intimidation, or what upon the subject do you know?

A. I have been called upon to make affidavits from republicans and democrats, colored men, and they all testified that they all went to the poll and voted without intimidation: no trouble whatever.

Q. Were these affidavits made before you for the purpose of being used at New Orleans?

A. Some were printed blanks and some were written out; some I wrote out. Those for the republicans—we had no blank form for them—about as many republicans as there were democrats.

A. As far as I can recollect, there may have been some three hundred, probably about three hundred.
Q. Mostly from the country?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. About equally divided as to polities?
A. Yes, sir; very near. I think there was two or three more democratic affidavits than there was republicans.
Q. You have been confined to the house so that you have not been circulating through the parish?
A. Just got out previous to the election—about a week or so.
Q. What is your polities?
A. Republican, sir.

We find, upon examination, that over three hundred citizens of this parish made affidavit before the returning board that the election was in all respects fair, free, and without intimidation. More than half of these affidavits were made by colored voters. Lieutenant William Gerlach's sworn statement was furnished to the returning board. Lieutenant Gerlach favored the election of Hayes. His statement before the board was as follows:

BATON ROUGE, November 16, 1876.

Hon. L. PASTERESKI, Mayor, Dr. J. W. DUPERE, Oldy:

GENTIZENT: In compliance with your request of this morning. I take pleasure for turnish you the folliwing account of my personal observations of the namer in the votes has been conducted since.

I was present on the morning of election day when a report was made to my commissioners at the Marphy school-house poll, and I accompanied him to a conference between leaders of both political parties. It away and bear witness to the fact that the representatives of the democratic party did all in their power to make a fair archival to the property of the conference of the conference of the political parties. United States officer is sufficient protection against any violence, in performing any duty, such as assisting a marshal in making an arrest or the like.

I have above given simply a statement of what I saw myself. I have purposely avoided making any remarks on the conduct of the officers sent here to conduct the election, although it appeared strange to me that they should be on the most intimate terms with leaders and candidates for office on the republican side, and consult with them often in the course of their official labors. The following facts should, however, be well known:

While on duty at the court-house, I was approached in a very confidential man ner by one Baranco, colored, who had, if my memory is correct, acted in some capacity at the engine-house poll, and who claims to be a deenty United States marshal. He informed me that they (the radicals) had fixed the democrats by locking uptally-sheets and other papers in the ballot-boxes in places where a democratic majority was cast. I was also informed later by Mr. Clover that he had completed his returns so far as he could under instructions, excepting some remarks he kept in his head, which he would add after he got safely in the city, (New Orleans).

That the statement I have here made may be correctly judged, I will state that I have never been an active partisan of any political party. I have been in the United States Army continuously since 1856, and a reference to my testimony given before a congressional committee in New Orleans in 1875, with a letter published in the appendix to their report, will show that I have always pleaded for the rights of the negro.

Going back a short time when the canvass was in full blast, I attended a democratic meeting held here, followed by a barbeene. I there noticed that the negroes were fully impressed with the arguments there advocated; that they liked and believed the promises made to them regarding schools and other privileges. I have been assured by several negroes that they voted the democratic ticket b

In every club colored members of democratic-conservative clubs in this parish. In every club colored members of democratic voters not only cast their ballots in good faith, but did it with enthusiasm.

We refer to the testimony of Zebulon Lange and Edward Plunket, both colored, on pages 113 and 114, as giving an intelligent account of how the colored democratic and how the canvass was conducted with reference to the colored people, men from other sections of the country, most of whom had been unappreciated at home, notwith-standing their loud protestations of devotion to the Union, went among the colored people asking and receiving office at their hands. Those men were not only thus placed in office without the consent of the white race, but, discovering that the latter must in the very nature of things soon exercise a large influence over the colored people, they devoted themselves exclusively to the work of keeping in office and their colored constituency organized for united work at the ballot box. The result was that these office-holders had no other interest in the country than to procure office, and it was so manifest even to them that no distant day would find the negro with his eyes open, that it made the scramble intense and bitter for place, each one fearing that the harvest would be gone before he would be provided for. By Mr. Bebee:

Q. Who was the parish judge preceding the time of election?

A. Judge Davis was, until three or four months, when Governor Kellogg appointed a man named Shorter.

Q. Was Davis's conduct satisfactory to these men?

A. I know that it was not.

Q. Did they urge any objections?

A. Yes, sir; there was a good deal of objection urged against Mr. Davis while he was here. He was not a candidate at the last election. While he was sitting as judge there was a good deal of objection was?

A. As to his moral character, he was not at all recognized by any decent man. That was one objection against him. Another objection was, that nobody considered him at all learned in the law—he was not fit for the place. His judgments were biased and founded mostly on prejudice.

Q. Did he hold more than one office?

A. Yes, sir; he was parish judge, member of the police jury, chairman of the finance committee, and as chairman of the finance committee has proved his own bills against the parish and had them paid. He was an internal-revenue officer, and connected with the school board.

Q. Did he hold these offices at the time?

A. Yes, sir; all at the same time.

Q. Did you ever hear any objection to his official conduct as a member of the police jury?

A. Yes, sir; there was a good deal of opposition to him. I was at that time attorney for the parish, and I know of a good many acts and tried to prevent them, to the best of my ability. I know there was a good deal of opposition to him—several of his acts.

Q. Did you ever hear anything with reference to his public conduct as a member of the police jury?

A. Yes, sir. In the first place he was parish jud ish, and none of them never owned a cent in the parish. The president of the jury didn't own a cent; they run the expenses of $3,700.

Q. How long had Judge Davis been judge ?

A. He was elected two terms.
Q. You say from $2,600 to $3,700 ?

A. Yes, sir; I have a memorandum here—no; the parish expenses were $20,700. I made a mistake; it was $20,700 before Judge Davis and Underwood took charge. When they took charge they increased it to $37,500.
Q. Your statement of $2,600 should have been $20,700 under the old police jury, to $37,500 under the new ?

A. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had Judge Davis been a resident of this parish before he became parish judge 1

A. I don't know that he had resided here at all. He came here and was a clerk in the internal-revenue department, and never gave up his position; he was a clerk in the internal-revenue department, and never gave up his position; he was a clerk until he left here.

Q. How long after he came before he became parish judge †
A. I think the first election after he arrived here. I think so; I am not positive. I may be mistaken, but I think so.

Q. Do I understand you to say that there was objection made to him by the voters, white and black, especially by voters who had been colored republicans, on account of his moral character?

A. Yes, sir; I heard several. I can name one, because I recollect the circumstances attending this more than anything else. I had known him all my life as a boy. I heard that somebody had shot at the judge. I heard that it was a man by the name of Polect. The next morning I met him and asked him if he had shot at the judge. He said, "No; I have not shot at him; but, the son of a bitch, I ought to have done it;" and then he told me that the judge had taken his wife from him.

Q. How?

the judge. He said, "No; I have not shot at him; but, the son of a bitch, I ought to have done it;" and then he told me that the judge had taken his wife from him.

Q. How?

A. To live with her.

Q. Was he a married man himself?

A. He was, sir.

Q. Was that all you heard about it?

A. I heard afterward—there was a lady who lived adjoining Judge Davis, and who rented the property to Judge Davis. She is now living in Nashville, Tennessee. I boarded at her house, and I heard her state a conversation that she had with Mrs. Davis. That is all the information I have with reference to Judge Davis and his family affairs.

Q. This man that said he ought to have shot at him, was he a white man or a colored man?

A. A colored man.

- Q. This man that said he ought to have shot at him, was he a white man or a colored man?

  A. A colored man.

  Q. Was this alleged conduct on the part of Judge Davis with reference to this man's wife a matter of current notoricty through the parish?

  A. Yes, sir; everybody in the parish knew who came to town and talked with the people. It was publicly known in the town of Baton Rouge; everybody knew it, I suppose.

  Q. Was his own wife living with him at the time?

  A. She was part of the time with him, and he sent her away. She came back in September of last year; she came back immediately after the difficulty in New Orleans. She was near Cincinnati, and when she heard of the difficulty, without saying to anybody at all, she got aboard the boat and came to Baton Rouge and landed in the night, and when she came to the house—she got a man to go with her—she arrived at the house and found the judge in his dishabille with this negro woman; this woman I have spoken of. A few days after that, if I am not mistaken it was the day afterward, she took morphine and attempted to kill herself.

  Q. Was that a matter generally talked of in the place?

  A. I believe everybody knew it. It was no secret at all.

  Q. What became of this colored woman?

  A. She was of with the judge.

  Q. Did her husband and herself live together afterward?

  A. No, sir; there was a divorce suit filed by one of the members of the bar—I think Mr. Greves—I think he was the member of the bar that filed the suit.

  Q. For divorce as between the colored man and his wife?

  A. Yes, sir, to be tried before Judge Davis.

  Q. Was it tried?

  A. No, sir. I didn't pay any attention to it.

  Q. Was any other matter talked of in the community about the judge's conduct with women other than his wife?

  A. This negro woman she had a sister, and she gave birth to a child, and everybody understood it also as being a child of Judge Davis. As to whether this was so I am not prepared to say.

  Q. Did members of the republican party criticise this conduct?

  A. Yes, sir.

By Judge NEW:

- By Judge New:

  Q. The woman who had the child was a sister of the colored woman?

  A. Yes, sir; own sister, sir.

  Q. Was there alleged misconduct on the part of other parish officers than those you have named?

  A. To make it brief, there was in every case that I know of here, every officer that I know of; there was always some charge made against him for misconduct in their offices; some were grievous and some were not. The clerk of the court, who was a candidate for re-election; he would get on the boat and go to New Or-leans and stay four or five weeks, sometimes six or eight weeks, and there would be many things that we would have to do, and we would have to wait. I recollect in my own professional business I had to wait to send a deed to Indiana.

  Q. Have there been schools through the parish for the accommodation of the white and colored people?

  A. Wherever I have been, in every ward, with the exception of two or three wards, I heard complaints all the time that they had no schools.

  Q. Did the colored people attribute the responsibility and blame to the republican party?

party !
A. Entirely.

By Mr. GAINEY:

By Mr. Gainey:

Q. You have a most remarkable memory, Mr. Buckner?

A. Not particularly.

Judge New. Mr. Gainey, that remark was entirely uncalled for. Confine yourself to the examination of the witness.

Mr. Gainey, that remark as a basis for my question. How long after Mr. Davis came into this city before this charge alleged against him of stopping with this colored woman took place?

A. That I could not tell distinctly; I could state to you, though, that this colored woman lived in the same yard where Judge Davis had his office. The judge's residence was right here on this street, and the colored woman had a room right back of Judge Davis's office. That is the time that she was living with her husband. I heard, a year before this became public, I heard that Judge Davis was living with this woman; kept her, were the words that they used.

Q. How long had he been living in this community before you heard any reports of that character?

Q. How long had he been living in this community before you heard any reports of that character?

A. I don't know. The truth is I didn't know Judge Davis at all until he came into public life. He may have been clerk for some time without my knowing it. I think, if my memory serves me, that it was about a year and a half after he came here that this occurrence happened.

Q. After Judge Davis's arrival here, and before these reports were scattered about him, was he ever received in society at all?

A. Well, sir, I was boarding, and Judge Davis's wife used to go over to my landlady's. I never spoke to her; nor did I ever visit Judge Davis, except on business. I heard this landlady speak of her as being an excellent lady, and the neighbors gave her that name.

gave her that name.
Q. Did you ever hear of her being out as other ladies are usually?
A. I never heard of her being invited. I know that she did go to different gentlemen's houses. I think she visited a gentleman who is now in the room—his family. I think the ladies called on her. I am not a married man and don't know much about those things.

temen's houses. I think she visited a gentleman who is now in the room—his family. I think the laddes called on her. I am not a married man and don't know much about those things.

A large proportion of the parochial offices, such as clerk of the court, sheriff tax-collector, police jurors, &c., were held by colored men, most of whom of necessity were wholly unfitted for those positions. Can it be wondered at that the white people became dissatisfied and asked such men to resign! Would a northern community have been more tolerant!

About the time this state of things had become as bad as it could be, a new element or cause of disorder made its appearance. The stealing of hogs, cattle, cotton in the seed, &c., became very frequent in all the parishes embraced in this report. The defiance and boldness of the guilty parties were such as to provoke to the last degree those who sustained losses. The stealing of cotton in the seed—that is, before it had been ginned—was carried on so extensively that small stores were established by unscrupulous men at various points in the parishes for its purchase. For a time, the courts and law-officers were appealed to for redress. It was impossible, in most cases, to obtain conviction. The juries would generally be composed, in part at least, of persons in sympathy with the offenders. The belief became prevalent among those who were the sufferers that the courts and officers thereof winked at the packing of juries in the interest of these evil-doers. It was while the public mind was thus agitated and incensed that the parish judge and some other officers in this parish were requested to resign, and did resign in 1875.

In the latter part of the year 1874, the people most interested determined that their property should no longer be taken by persons having no right thereto. Companies called regulators or bull-dozers were formed, and thereafter, until early in the year 1876, they made themselves active in lynching those then engaged in stealing, or who had been guilty of it. WEST FELICIANA.

The registration in this parish was commenced, conducted, and completed, and the revision thereof made, without any challenge or complaint by the supervisor or any other officer or person, and the inquiry, so far as this parish is concerned, is therefore limited to the period subsequent to the revision of the registration. All the preliminary provisions prescribed by the laws of the State governing the conduct of elections appear to have been observed, except that the polls for two wards, the eighth and twelfth, were not established within the territorial limits thereof, and the commissioners appointed to hold the election for those wards opened and conducted the polls at the parish site, some twelve or fitteen miles distant from the usual voting-place in the eighth, and about nine miles from that in the twelfth ward. The law provides that there shall be at least one poll for each ward, and the supervisor saw fit to construe this provision as requiring only the establishment of a poll for the ward, at his option, at any place in the parish, either within or without the ward limits. This construction of the law we regard as clearly violative of its true intent and meaning. As the consequence of this, there were four polls established within half a mile of each other. Three were held at the courthouse, for the first, eighth, and twelfth wards,) and one, (for the ninth ward,) at Bayou Sara, a few rods distant from the other three, while the voters residing in the eighth and twelfth were compelled to travel long distances to voting-places outside of their respective wards. Notwithstanding this irregularity, the polls for both these wards were counted and compiled by the returning board.

The vote as returned for the eighth ward poll was 146 republican and none democratic. The return for the twelfth ward was republican, 213; democratic, 1. With the exception of this action, the supervisor seems to hav dozing" was in punishment of stealing. Both colored and white republicans concurred in this statement.

The testimony of Brevet Major Bascom and Lieutenants Jamar and Fornance, of the United States Army, who were stationed in the parish; the postmaster at Saint Francisville; James Wells and Charles Spencer, northern men and soldiers of the Union Army during the rebellion; Thomas T. Moore, a republican and northern man; District Judge Hewes; C. J. Howell, clerk of the district court, and others, fully corroborates that of some fifty or sixty colored democratis residing in various parts of the parish in this regard. Leading republicans were conspicuously identified with these organizations and their deeds, and it was entirely an after-thought with them to utilize the actions of the regulators for political-intimidation capital.

The supervisor of registration, in his so-called protest, assigns as ground therefor, as to ward 2, "intimidation," and by way of specification asserts that Dr. William Ball, white democrat, discharged five men from his plantation for refusing to sign a pledge to vote the democratic ticket. He does not give the names of the discharged men, nor does he name the witnessesto prove his statement. Dr. Ball died since the election, and before the subcommittee reached the parish. His manager and others testified that no men had been discharged from the plantation; that about thirty were employed, some of whom voted the republican and some the democratic ticket. Not one of the five men claimed to have been discharged were produced or sworn in support of the protest, and yet upon this filmsy and unsupported pretext the returning board, rejected the nutle of the parish. His manager produced or sworn is support and the protest, and yet upon this filmsy and unsupported pretext the returning board. He protest, and yet upon this filmsy and unsupported pretext the returning board and the protest is also on the ground of intimidation. The specification is that "the United States supervisor and republican he as squarely charged intimidation upon the republicans. Such was the testimony upon which this ward was thrown out. Its vote was democratic 322, republican 1.

The "protest" as to the ninth ward went only to a certain number of the votes, and was not made on any ground contemplated by the law; still it was thrown out entire. Vote, 123 democratic and 2 republican.

In the ninth and tenth wards, it will be observed but 3 republican votes were cast as against 445 democratic. In view of the fact that under the law an elector could vote anywhere in the parish, this raises no presumption of fraud or intimidation. A reference to the certified returns will show that at the poll for the eighth ward 146 republican and no democratic votes were cast. In the eleventh ward the vote was republican 171, democratic 8. In the twelfth ward it was 213 republican, democratic 1. These wards, where large numbers of republicans and few or no democrats voted, were all counted, while, where the reverse was the case, they were in every instance thrown out. The democrats residing in the eighth and twelfth wards, instead of going from nine to fourteen miles to the court-house where the polls for their wards were established, voted at the tenth-ward poll, which was much nearer and more convenient. Thus the vote at this poll represented the democratic vote of the three wards, and in rejecting it the returning board disfranchised the 322 democratic voters thereof, while the republican votes cast at the polls at the court-house for the eighth and twelfth wards, numbering 359, were counted. At the tenth-ward poll one republican voted. At the poll for the eighth ward not democratic vote was cast, while at that for the twelfth but one democrat voted. Q. How did he treat you before?
A. Just as he would anybody else.
Q. Do you know of any colored men who were scared into voting the democratic ticket?
A. No, sir; I didn't have no talk; I only told them I was going with the republicans, and I didn't want to have nothing to do with the democratic ticket.
Q. Did the men voting the democratic ticket do so of their own free will?
A. Yes, sir; they had it up there, and they said that was the ticket they was going to vote. I only seen them; I never tarried there long.
In addition to the foregoing a number of others who voted at the poll in this ward testified to the perfect fairness with which the election was conducted. Neither of the two republican commissioners made any protest or statement of intimidation or other unlawful conduct. But it was necessary, in order to carry the parish, for the republicans to throw out this vote—a necessity which, with the returning board, "knew no law."
The poll for the ninth ward was held at Bayou Sara, about half a mile from the court-house in Saint Francisville, where the three polls for the first, eighth, and twelfth wards were held. The absurdity of the charge of intimidation at this poll is apparent in view of the fact that the Federal troops under Captain Bascom were stationed at Bayou Sara, and within about a quarter of a mile from where the election was held. And, too, let it be borne in mind, that if, in deflance of the troops, there had been intimidation, the voters had only to go a few rods to the court-bouse where the polls for wards 8 and 12 were held, at which 359 republican votes were cast and only 1 democratic. In regard to these polls the evidence clearly indicates a pre-arranged plot to have the republicans vote at polls 8 and 12 for the purpose of rejecting all the democratic votes cast in the ninth and tenth wards. By this seheme 444 democratic votes were rejected, involving only the loss of 4 republican votes.

A large amount of testimony was taken as to what causes operated upon the minds of colored voters to scheme 444 democratic votes were rejected, involving only the loss of 4 republican votes.

A large amount of testimony was taken as to what causes operated upon the minds of colored voters to induce them to change and vote with the democrats. They gave as reasons that their school moneys had been stolen or not applied to maintaining schools; that the local affairs of the parish had been badly managed; that they had lost confidence in the republican leaders; that bad government had brought on hard times; that they believed their interests were to act with the resident property-holding whites, &c. It was also developed that, by co-operating with them and associating in club organizations, public parades, meetings, &c., the whites won their confidence and secured their support. Clubs were formed in each ward. Colored men were made officers, invited to speak, and sent out to canvass for the party and organize other clubs, &c. By these means there were established some twelve or fifteen clubs with a colored membership aggregating nearly or quite one thousand voters. Colored members and officers of these clubs were before the subcommittee and fully established the fact that the colored voters voluntarily, cheerfully, and enthusiastically supported the democratic-conservative party. With the large accessions thus secured, the white residents of the parish were confident of success, and, so far from having any motive to interfere with the lawful course of the canvass, were most deeply interested in having the election pass off without any cause or pretext for challenging its fairness or questioning its result.

Much testimony was also taken with regard to homicides and various other out-off without any cause or protect the suit.

Much testimony was also taken with regard to homicides and various other outrages committed in the parish and alleged to have been on account of politics. By reference to the testimony of the coroner and others it will be seen that nearly thirty homicides have occurred in the parish since April, 1875. The following is a detail of the cases given from the coroner's record, with extracts and memoranda made by him:

Dated West Feliciana, November 28, 1876.

L. S. McCRINDELL, Coroner.

It is impracticable to review all the testimony taken bearing on each of these cases, but brief attention may be given to a few that have been most conspicuously paraded as having had political significance. The case of the killing of Gilbert Carter has received perhaps more publicity than any other, and the evidence taken by the subcommittee with reference to it has been as full as opportunity and circumstances admitted. The facts, as established by the testimony of Major Bascom, Lieutenant Jamar, Ben Clark, Nace Johnson, and ethers, show that Gilbert Carter was the mover and leader in a plot to organize a club of colored men sworn to kill certain white persons and the women and children of their families, and to burn their houses, capture wagons loaded with provisions, &c. One of the members revealed the plot to one of the white men whose life was to be taken. He, with others, went to major Bascom, in command of the Federal troops, and requested that a Federal officer be sent with them to bear testimony as to their proceedings, they being then organized to surprise the colored club at a night rendezvous fixed for its meeting. Lieutenant Jamar was permitted to go, upon the assurance that it was intended only to arrest the leaders and turn them over to the proper legal authorities. The party went, but the negroes, having become alarmed, did not rendezvous as they had agreed; and the whites then separated, a part of them, with Lieutenant Jamar, returning. The other portion of the party, however, went to the cabins of Carter and Vessels, the alleged leaders, and arrested them. Vessels escaped, but Carter in attempting to escape (as his captors claim) was shot and killed. The next day Vessels gave himself up and made a full confession of the plot. Other members also, on examinations before Major Bascom, in command of the United States troops, to whom full confession of the plot. Other members also, on examinations before hajor Bascom, in command

By Mr. BEBE:

Q. Do you know anything of an alleged conspiracy in the parish for the purpose of killing any of the whites; did you ever hear of anything of the kind?

A. I did; the date I cannot fix just now. My first notification of it was two of the citizens coming to me and stating that they had heard of such an organization, and bringing to me a colored man who claimed to have attended the meeting. There was to be another meeting on Wednesday night following. I think it was, and they were going to see if they could surprise the meeting, and I, at their request, so that they could have an outside party as a witness if there was any occasion, I sent Lieutenant Jamar out with them.

Q. Do you remember the name of the colored man whom they brought with them?

A. His name was Ben Clark.
Q. Was he the only colored man you examined in reference to it?
A. No, sir; I examined three or four afterward—Isaac Vessels. There were three or four that I examined and talked with; took them off to one side in a room alone, and I forwarded their statements, the substance of them, at least, to department headquarters.

alone, and I forwarded their statements, and successful and the statements and the statements.

Q. You say you examined these parties aside from others; were there any whites present when you examined them?

A. No, sir; nobody but myself and the witness.

Q. Were they assured of safety by you?

A. They were. I was careful to tell each man that if he had an object in telling the story that it would be of no use, because the thing would not be used there and not be known. I tried to persuade them if they were telling a false story to give me the secret. They were all very frank and very free in their statement.

By Judge New:

Q. Do you remember whether one of the colored men was named Nace Johnson

A. Yes, sir; I summoned one or two others, whose statements I took no notice of, because they didn't attend the meeting, but they had heard of it from the others.
Q. In the examination you made, were colored men free from intimidation, or fear, or constraint of any kind?

A. They apparently were. I endeavored to find out if there was anything of the kind. Their manner did not indicate it. They came in and were around town alone. They were sent for after the gentlemen found me, and they came in freely, one at a time, and talked very freely.

one at a time, and talked very freely.

The facts with reference to the killing of Isaac Mitchell, as proven before the coroner's jury, and as shown by the testimony herewith submitted, most positively negative the charge that it was in any sense on account of politics. The only witness whose testimony could positively fix the guilt upon the perpetrator of the murder was the wife of the murdered man, and she, with others whom it was thought could throw light upon the deed, were spirited away by the assistance of leading republicans, and, when finally followed by the process of the coroner to New Orleans, were released by the republican authorities at that place. Whatever the cause of or motive for this murder, it certainly was not for any political purpose in aid of the democratic-conservative party. The testimony of the coroner is as follows:

The next case is Isaac Mitchell, the increase purpose in aid of the democratic-conservative party. The testimony of the coroner is as follows:

The next case is Isaac Mitchell; the inquest was kept open from September 26 to October 6. I went out there on the 27th—that was Friday, I think—and on my way out I met Mr. E. L. Weber's carriage coming out, and in his carriage there was two colored women. I went on to the place which was owned by Mrs. Weber, and I took measures to obtain witnesses. There was two persons I found there who didn't seem to know anything about it, and I was informed that the witnesses who had seen it had gone to town; that was Amy Mitchell and Lea Green, they had gone to town. I asked when they would be back, and they said they didn't know, and I was unable to take testimony that day. I adjourned the inquest to the following day, which was Saturday, and left word for them to come and give their testimony. I never was under the necessity of subpensing witnesses. I left word for them to come to Bayon Sara. In the evening, when I came back home, I went to Mr. Weber and asked him what right he had to take witnesses away; he said he didn't take them away. I said, "They were in your carriage, for I saw them." He said, "I loaned my carriage, it is true, but I don't know to whom." I asked him if he was in the habit of lending his carriage to people he didn't know, and he said some one asked him for the carriage and he told him to take it. He added, "I don't charge my memory with such things." I then said to Mr. Weber that it was a very unnatural thing for a wife to leave her husband after being killed, and I would like him to explain why she went off in his carriage. He said, "I don't know; maybe they wanted to go to town to do some shopping, buy some trimmings." He supposed they went to town for that purpose. At first he pretended that he didn't know they had gone to town. I afterward learned they did come back to attend the funeral.

The following day they didn't make their apppearance, and on Saturday evening.

supposed they went to town for that purpose. At first he pretended that he didn't know they had gone to town. I then asked him if they had come back, and he said he didn't know. I afterward learned they did come back to attend the funeral.

The following day they didn't make their apppearance, and on Saturday evening, they same day, I was informed that they wouldn't attend because they hadn't been subpensed. I immediately issued subpense and put them in the hands of one of the jurymen to serve on these parties. The subpensa were served, and Lea Green made her appearance, but Amy Mitchell and Julius Green didn't make their appearance at all; so I took the testimony of Lea Green and adjourned the inquest over to Monday. Then I put the subpensa in the hands of the sheriff himself, and he made return that he couldn't find Amy Mitchell or Julius Green, and consequently I was unable to take their testimony that day. I didn't hear anything more of them, I think, until the 17th of October, when I heard that Julius Green was over the river and Amy Mitchell was in New Orleans at a hotel called the Conti Verandah, on Contistreet. I went to Dr. Kaufman, the sheriff, and told him I had been unable to get the witnesses, that he had my subpensas and couldn't serve them; but if he would give me a depaty sheriff I thought I could have them served. He appeared to be willing, and he gave me an order on the clerk of the court to swear in Mr. Spencer as deputy sheriff to serve my paper. I sent Mr. Spencer to New Orleans, and he went to this house and saw the parties, Amy Mitchell, Lea Green, and another party, which I afterward learned was Thomas Stewart. He served the subpensa on Amy Mitchell and Stewart. Amy Mitchell said she wouldn't come unless the person brought her there told her to go, when this man Stewart spoke up and remarked, "Weber isn't coming here any more." She then said, "He will be down Thursday." Thomas Stewart and he would come to Bayou Sara, but he didn't. Mr. Spencer right back to New Orleans, when he arrived t

A. I don't know that positively.

Q. Has she been in the parish since then?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has sno been in the parish since then?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where is Lea Green?
A. She is here; she gave her testimony. I had to subposa her regularly; she refused the verbal summons.
Q. Do you remember what her testimony was on the subject?

A. Yes, sir; she said, as near as I can remember, that she was on her way to church when she heard shooting in front of her, about a half a mile ahead, in the same house, it seemed to her, or the next house to Mitchell. When she heard the shooting she ran back to Mr. Smith's quarters, where they had a church, and she met Julius Green, who asked her if she was hurt and who had been firing. She said no, and the next day she went to the place and spoke to Amy Mitchell, and asked her who killed her husband, and she said she didn't know who they were.

The killing of Ephrain Armstrong is another case that was made to figure before the returning board as an outrage perpetrated by white democrata for a political object; but the evidence conclusively shows that Armstrong was a democrat, and thoroughly known as such throughout the section in which he lived. (See the teatmony of William Gardner, Henry West, both colored, and others.) The testimony of the coroner who held the inquest colored and others.) Parish of East Feticiana:

I hereby certify the above and foregoing to be a true and correct compilation of all the statements of votes for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States at the election precincts of the parish of East Feliciana, at the general election held November 7, 1876, under the provisions of "An act to regulate the conduct and to maintain the freedom and purity of elections," &c., approved November 20, 1872, and the amendments thereto, rendered to the clerk of the court by the commissioners of election, on file in this office; that no affidavits of riots, tumults, acts of violence, intimidation, disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences were attached

Deputy Olerk Fifth Judicial District Court,

State of Louisiana, Parish of Bast Feliciana.

The consolidated return of James E. Anderson, supervisor of registration, showing the vote as above, was filed with the returning board November 13 without remarks. No protest, or paper purporting to be a protest, was filed by him with the board until November 23, which was received by the board in a separate package. He does not allege in his protest that anything occurred during the period for registration or revision of registration to prevent a fair and full registration. He was absent from the parish during the last nineteen days of the period fixed by law for registration or revision for registration to prevent a fair and full registration. He was absent from the parish during the last nineteen days of the period fixed by law for registration or revision for the insecurity of his life; that an attempt was made to take his life. He returned before the election, not in time to renew registration, but in time to renew registration. The proof shows that it was and is the better opinion of those who investigated the alleged attempt to take his life that he did the shooting himself. Capitain Benjamin H. Rogers, of the United States Army, Colonel Frank Powers, and J. P. Mony-han, the two former republicans and the latter a democrata and sheriff of the parish, gave the subject a careful investigation. Capitain Regers swears that he never could rully satisfy himself whether Anderson was shot at or not; says that if it had been any other man than Anderson he might not have been so much in doubt, but asys, "I could not believe him under oath, in any way, shape, or form." He was a manual proper to the subject to the control Question. You say you voted the democratic parish ticket, but you felt no particular zeal. How am I to understand you?

Answer. I mean what I say. I felt no particular zeal for a republican parish ticket. I voted very heartily for the candidates on the parish ticket because I was interested.

Q. Did you feel any considerable zeal for the democratic parish ticket?

A. Yes, sir; that is what I say.

Q. You did not vote the democratic parish ticket, then, because there was no republican ticket?

A. No, sir; they were the men of my choice. They were the men I had selected before the ticket was made up.

Q. You would not have voted a republican parish ticket if it had not had those names upon it?

names upon it!

A. If I had been making a republican parish ticket I would have put those same ames upon it.

The democratic parish ticket being thus supported by leading white republicans colored men were easily persuaded to give it their support. The result was that no republican parish ticket was nominated. This gave the democratic ticket, parish, State, and national, a strong send-off early in the canvass. The testimony clearly discloses the fact that there are quite a number of colored men in this parish who have always been democrats. In the past, there have been frequent and serious dissensions among the republicans, and the colored republicans have been very frequently voting a mixed ticket. It appears from the concurrent testimony of witnesses of both colors and both parties that there has been an increasing and loud complaint among the colored people about official corruption generally, but more especially about high taxes and misappropriation of the school funds. These had become and are such crying evils that every witness, colored and white, tells the same story, and tells it with such look and emphasis as to leave no doubt that his feelings are intense on these subjects.

The democrats were not slow to discover the situation, and they went to work with a determination to win. Places were appointed for public speaking in every neighborhood. Democratic-conservative clubs were formed in every ward, and the original colored democrats were among the most active. They were posted and put forward. They, in fact, constituted the advance—organizing clubs and making speeches at the club meetings and elsewhere. They devoted their time almost exclusively to the work. Old-fashioned barbecues were gotten up, addressed by speakers of both races. The colored people turned out in large numbers. At the close of the canvass there were democratic-conservative clubs in every ward, the colored membership numbering in the aggregate eight hundred and sixty-three. The republicans seemed to have lost all hope early in the canvass. It may be that some colored men, upon going to the polls and finding no republican tickets, fell in with the current, thus swelling the democratic vote, who would have voted the republican ticket if their leaders had provided one.

It was proven that Anderson admitted upon several occasions that the election was fair, and he congratulated democrats upon their victory.

The canvass was conducted in the most orderly manner.

In this connection, we wish to call attention to the testimony of Mr. J. W. Mann, a most estimable gentleman, and recognized as one of the best citizens in this parish. Mr. Mann is a large planter near Port Hudson.

By Judge New:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. About four miles from Port Hudson.
Q. How long have you lived there?
A. Seven years.
Q. Are you a native of this State?
A. No, sir.
Q. Of what State?
A. Massachusetts.
Q. Were you in the first ward most of the time during the late campaign?
A. All of the time.
Q. You may state the condition that society was in during the period of registration, say from the 28th of August until the registration was completed, or so much of the registration as was done up to the time of the election.
A. As far as I know it was quiet and peaceable.
Q. What are your politics?
A. I am a republican.
Q. Did you vote on the day of the election?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did the election go off?
A. I went off very quietly.
Q. Are you acquainted with some of the colored people in the ward?
A. I am acquainted with some that are near me on plantations. I am not extensively acquainted.
Q. Do you know whether any of those that you are acquainted with belonged to democratic clubs?
A. No, sir; I could not say certain of any.
Q. Do you know whether any of those known to you voted the democratic citcket?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You may state whether, during the canvass, you talked with any of them, or heard them express themselves as to the reason why they were going to vote the democratic ticket—how they talked about it; have you heard any expressions from them?
A. They thought that they could get a better government and more security unterestive them?

democratic ticket—how they talked about it; have you heard any expressions from them?

A. They thought that they could get a better government and more security under Nicholls's administration, provided he was elected—those that I talked with.

Q. You may state whether they made complaints about the State government that they had.

A. They did, sir.

Q. Do you remember whether the matter of the misappropriation of the school fund was talked of, or the failure to have schools?

A. That was one grievance.

Q. Anything else that they mentioned as a grievance you may state.

A. Well, they didn't think that they were secure enough in their rights.

Q. In what respect?

A. Sometimes for stealing they were molested not by law—when they were caught stealing, or something of the kind.

Q. They did not like the idea of being summarily dealt with; is that it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you may give to the committee your opinion whether, from what you saw among the colored men of your acquaintance who voted the democratic ticket in the ward—whether they did it of their own free will, and voted because they wanted to make a change.

A. Those that I know did vote it I thought voted it from their own free will.

Q. Is it not a fact that several colored men of that ward who had been active in politics before as republicans were very active this time as democrats?

A. I don't think there was any very active as democrats. I know some used their infinence that way.

Q. Do you know Henry Rivers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it with him as to activity?

A. The most activity I saw him do was on election day, distributing votes.

Q. Did he act like a man who was in earnest?

A. I didn't see much of him. I saw him doing it—going to his friends with them.

Q. Your politics were known to the colored people who were acquainted with Your politics were known to the colored people who were acquainted with

Q. Yes, sir.
Q. Were any of them in your employment?
A. Yes, sir, I employed about thirty or thirty-five.
Q. Did you hear any complaints from any of those in your employ of intimidation or threats, politically?
A. I did in one case. I can describe it and you can judge.
Q. Tell what it was.
A. There was one man on my place that was accused; he and some others were getting up a club and resisting those democratic freedmen who were joining democratic clubs. They would do something to them for joining democratic clubs. That was the report that came to me. They were told that they had not better come and attend this democratic meeting. One of them lived with me, and came and asked me about it. I told them that they should not make such remarks as that, but if they were asked to attend a democratic meeting it was no more than right that they should do so. That is the fullest extent of any intimidation that I know of.

right that they should do so. That is the fullest extent of any intimidation that I know of.

Q. That is the only thing said to you by any colored men in the ward who was making any sort of complaint at all?

A. That is the only one that complained to me.

Q. Some of these men who were working for you had been working for you for a considerable period?

A. Some had been working for me for seven years—ever since I have been here.

Q. Did some of these men vote the democratic ticket?

A. One did, I know.

Q. Did he ever make any complaint of any intimidation or threat?

A. No, sir; and he was very free to talk to me; I think he would, if there had been anything said to him.

Q. Did he ever tell you that he had heard of any threats or intimidation toward other colored persons?

A. No, sir.
Q. Now, you may state whether, in your opinion, if republicans had desired to vote in that ward on the day of election—whether, from your knowledge of the condition that the ward had been in during the campaign, and from the way that the election did go off, and whatever facts you may predicate an opinion on—whether they could have voted peaceably and without interference?

A. I think they could.
Q. Do you know of any preconcerted arrangement or purpose on the part of republicans to have no ticket in the field that day?

A. No, sir; I do not.
Q. Had you any knowledge or information before the day of election that there would not be republican tickets?

A. No, sir; I was looking for one on the day of election, and I didn't find any.
Q. Do you know whether other republicans than yourself—whether there were colored republicans who went away without voting?

A. Yes, sir; there was. I met some of my men returning.
Q. Did they give you some reason why they were returning without voting?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was that?
A. They didn't find the right kind of tickets at the polls. They didn't say what kind.
Q. You knew them to be republicans, though?

Q. You knew them to be republicans, though?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know, or did you hear, in your ward of any difficulties between whites and colored men, in which it was claimed or alleged that politics had anything to do with it?

do with it?

A. No, sir; I don't know of any.

Q. Have any such cases in your ward come to your knowledge or information?

A. No, sir; I should think it would come to my knowledge.

Q. If there had been you think you would have heard of it?

A. Yes, sir; I should think so.

Q. There are white democrats in that ward who employ colored labor, do they not?

not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you heard of any colored men being turned off by their employers on account of not having voted the democratic ticket?
A. No, sir.
Q. Nor on account of refusing to vote the democratic ticket?
A. No, sir.
Q. Nothing of the kind?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you known any colored men to be turned off since the election by their employers on account of having failed to attend the election and vote the democratic ticket?
A. No, sir.

oratic ticket?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have known no change in your ward in that respect either before or since the election?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is it not a fact that democrats in your ward, both before and since the election, have employed colored labor without regard to the politics of the men?

A. Yes, sir; I know that they do.

Q. You do that still, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Although you are a republican?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JOYCE: Did you vote at the last election?

Q. Da you work at the has election?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What ticket did you vote?
A. I voted the democratic State ticket, and I voted for Hayes and Wheeler for resident and Vice-President.
Q. Do you reside in this parish?

You

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you vote for Hayes and Wheeler; did you vote a ticket with the names of the republican electors for the State on it?
A. No, sir; I could not find the electors. I didn't know them and could not find them. of the republican electors for the State on it?

A. No, sir; I could not find the electors. I didn't know them and could not find them.

Q. So you put in a vote with Hayes's and Wheeler's names on it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of course that didn't amount to anything?

A. Yes, sir; I knew it did not.

Q. Aside from that you voted the democratic ticket?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has there been any republican club in your ward?

A. Yes, sir; there has been.

Q. When?

A. I think there was in 1874 and 1872; every year, I think, but this.

Q. Did you belong?

A. No, sir; I never belonged to it.

Q. Never belonged to any one of them?

A. No, sir.

Q. Has there been any republican club in the ward this year?

A. I think not.

Q. Do you know whether there was or not?

A. I think not.

Q. Do you know whether there was or not?

A. No; I don't know.

Q. Why didn't you go to work and get up one?

A. I am not a politician, and don't follow that business at all.

Q. What do you call a politician?

A. Any one who would get up a club and be active in it, I would call a politician.

Q. Is not that the duty of every man?

A. No, sir; I don't think it is.

Q. Can you give any reason in the world, except the one you have given, why you didn't go to work and get up a club in your ward?

A. Republicanism is not popular here. That is one thing.

By Judge NEW:

Q. Would you have apprehended any personal violence to yourself, or injury to your property in that ward, if you had attempted to organize a republican club? Do you think you would have been mistreated by the democrats of the ward if you had attempted it?

A. I hardly think I would.

Q. It was not from any apprehension of the kind that you did not do it?

A. No, sir; I never did it.

Q. Now, when you say that the republican party is not very popular, I will ask you whether it is not a fact that in your ward there has been a great change among the colored people upon that subject, as expressed at the late election?

A. Yes, sir; there has a great many voted the democratic ticket that used to vote the republican ticket. I suppose there was, because very few of the colored people voted the democratic ticket before.

Q. Did you attend any republican meetings anywhere in the parish?

A. No, sir.

Your committee investigated with great thoroughness the unlawful acts, lynchings, killings, &c., which are noted in the protest of the supervisor and affidavits and answers filed before the returning board. It is impossible to embrace within any reasonable compass a critical and detailed account of all that is alleged and the testimony taken before this subcommittee. The following are the leading cases, and comprise nearly all:

The name of Thomas H. Jenks figures more prominently before the returning board as a witness against the white people of this parish than that of any other person. He says that Jerry Norman, colored, was shot at church by a band of regulators in August, 1875. The proof is that he was shot by one Eugene Thompson, white, at whom Norman had fired the day before, the ball entering a sack of meal upon which Thompson was sitting. It was an old fend, not involving politics, and the killing was not done at church, nor in the presence of but one person, a colored man, who testified before the committee. He also says that Dr. Wood passed sentence of death on two colored girls, and that the sentence was executed by one hundred armed men. The proof is that a party of colored men were in the act of hanging these girls because they believed them to be guilty of stealing some clothing from a colored family, and Dr. Wood, hearing of it for the first time, hastened to the spot and saved their lives.

Jenks says further:

"On the 7th day of November, instant, I visited the fifth, seventh, and eighth polls in said parish, heard the democratic till the colored people that there were no republican tickets, and that they must vote the democratic ticket or not vote at all. This was openly said, and notroinus."

William Kneeland swears that he went with Jenks to those polls, and that the latter said that everything was going on quietly; also says that Jenks expressed no surprise that there were no republican tickets. (See page 435.)

L. B. Rheaves swears that he saw Jenks at the eighth poll in company with Kne Question. Are you acquainted with Thomas H. Jenks?

Answer. Yes, sir; I have known him since 1868; I believe fifteen years, I reckon.

Q. You may state whether you met with him during the last canvass in this town.

A. I met him here. He came here and sent up to my house for me. I was at home. I think it was Friday.

Q. State what interview you had with him.

A. The day before I received a dispatch from Colonel Patton, stating that he had been appointed United States deputy marshal, and he was passing by here, and that he would make a favorable report if things were right. I knew his politics to be republican. I knew that he had been acting with the republican party ever since he had been a voter, and I felt a little suspicious of him. However, I went to the hotel to him. He told me that he had just seen Colonel Patton, and that he was sent up here by Colonel Patton, and his object in coming up here was to make a favorable report for the democratic party. About that time Captain Rogers and Lieutenant Davies came into the parlor, and said, "Sh—sh—I would not have these men to hear us talking together for anything in the world. I don't want them to hear any conversation that I have with you;" and we walked out of the gallery of the hotel, out of the way and hearing. He said that he knew the election would be perfectly quiet and all right, but he thought I had better go over to the printing-office and have some republican tickets printed. He says, "It will look better." I told him that I could not work on both sides, and if he wanted anything of the kind he would have to do it. It was not my business to put a republican ticket in the field, but he could use his own judgment about it. The next day I saw him. That is all that was said on that subject. He staid there until election day, and I was with him on that morning. Captain Rogers came to me and said that he did not believe that the man was a United States marshal; that he was a fraud. I wentup to Mr. Jenks and exa port.

Q. Is that the last you saw of Mr. Jenks?
A. No, sir; he went to Baton Ronge, and I went down in the carriage with him.
We slept in the same room all night, and I took breakfast with him the next morning. He was waiting for a boat.
Q. Who else went to Baton Ronge with the same party?
A. Mr. Anderson and Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones drove the carriage.
Q. That is the gentlemen who testified yesterday about going down?
A. Yes, sir; that is the one.
Q. Is there anything else you know upon that subject?
A. That is all.

Joseph Jones testified as follows:

A. He was, sir; I took him to Baton Rouge, I think the next day, on his way to New Orleans.

Q. Did he have anything to say upon the subject of election in your presence? A. Yee, sir.

Q. What did he say?

A. Mr. J. E. Anderson was the supervisor of registration for this parish and Mr. Thomas H. Jenks was deputy United States marshal. I took them down in a carriage, on their way to New Orleans; Mr. Jenks taunted Mr. Anderson and laughed at him, and told him he was afraid "we were gone up." That is the expression that he used. Mr. Anderson says, "No, never mind, that is all right," and put it off, and didn't like to talk about the election to Mr. Jenks. When we got to Baton Rouge he still taunted him, and said, "If everything goes on all over the State as it has in East Feliciana, we are gone up." Anderson remarked that he didn't care a damn about this parish; all he wanted was for Hayes to be President; and they talked over the fairness of the election, and both told me, coming down in the carriage, and after we got to Baton Rouge, that they had never seen a more peaceable, fairer, or more quiet election in any country. They repeated it several times, and it was a joke. Mr. Jenks took occasion to ridicule Mr. Anderson.

Q. What is your occupation?
A. I am a lawyer.
Q. Were you acquainted with Thomas H. Jenks?
A. I was.
Q. Did he ever live here?
A. Yes, sir; he came here as a tax-collector. He came here in May or June, I think, as tax-collector under appointment from Governor Warmoth, and he remained until, I think, in April, 1871; somewhere in the neighborhood of two years.
Q. Do you know whether he got into any legal troubles as tax-collector?
A. There were some rumors around that he was a defaulter, and a few days afterward he disappeared, and then it was found that he was a defaulter to the State and parish of $20,000 in the suit of James Graham, auditor, for the benefit of the State and of the parish jury for the benefit of the parish; also criminal proceedings against him.

Q. Were there any judgments rendered?

A. Yes, sir; one at the suit of the State, under the name of James Graham, auditor, for the benefit of the State of Louisiana, against Thomas H. Jenks, judgment for $10,322.22; and the case of the police jury against Thomas H. Jenks, judgment was rendered for $10,072.56, I think.

Q. What were the dates of these judgments?

A. The judgment in the case of the State was the 14th of January, 1872, and I think on the same day in favor of the parish.

Jared W. Harrell (white) says be was cursed for being a damnednigger-loving radical, by men who came to his house armed with shot-guns, and threatened to hang him. Says, also, that they stripped his servant woman and whipped her almost to death. The proof is, that he was and had been for a long time living in open and notorious adultery with this colored servant woman. It had become the standard and stereotyped scandal of the community, and his own wife had sent word to some young men of the neighborhood that she wanted their intimacy broken up. They did not need a second invitation. Harrell had always been a democrat, and nothing to the contrary was ever heard until his affidavit was filed before the returning board.

Henry Smith, (colored,) ex-sheriff, says that Colonel Hardy, of Clinton, said to him in July, 1875, that it was the intention to get rid of him, Rea, and other redical officials.

G. J. Reily, son of Rev. John A. Reily, says that on the evening of a democratic barbecne held at Clinton, a large body of white men rode by his father's house and threatened to kill a colored man named Charles Wilson; saying that if they could get rid of him they would be able to control the rest of the colored men on the place, and make them vote the democratic tieket. Mr. Reil ing to secure Wilson's co-operation in order to obtain the votes of the other colored men.

It was in proof that this Mr. G. J. Reily had been active in the work of flogging colored men for stealing.

Ezekiel Glover (colored) says that on the Saturday night before the election he was whipped by some white men for distributing republican papers. It is in proof that afterward, in the presence of Captain Rogers, Mr. Wedge, and others, he said that he did not know why he was whipped, but that politics had nothing to do with it. One witness swore that he heard Glover was whipped for killing another man's hog. Henry Johnson (colored) says that Captain Lanier, democratic candidate for clerk, said that no torture would be worse than would be received by any one who voted the republican ticket. Captain Lanier swore that he never gave expression to any such sentiment, in public or in private.

The same man says that S. A. Norwood said to him that there would be but one ticket in the field in that parish, and that the democratic ticket. Joseph A. Norwood, an active democrat, is no doubt here meant, for there is no such man as S. A. Norwood in the parish. Joseph A. Norwood swears that he never made such a declaration to Henry Johnson or any other person.

William Alexander (colored) says that on the day of the election he was met by Joseph A. Norwood, who handed him a democratic ticket and told him he must go up to the poll and vote it. Norwood swears that Alexander asked him for a ticket, and he gave him one, at the same time telling him that there was no other kind, and that Alexander replied that that was the kind he wanted.

Alexander Smith (colored) says that Colonel Hardy made a speech in which he said that if the colored men did not vote the democratic ticket, the bull dozing and killing would go on for forty years. Colonel Hardy swears that what he said was this: "That disorder would continue to prevail under this government we had, and that we would have to look for a good governor to get order and peace; that we and that if that government was continued there would be no peace or order in the parish."

Alonzo Brooks (colored) says he was told by Fred Woods that if the colored men did not vote the democratic ticket they would be killed after the election, and that no colored or white republicans would be allowed to remain in the parish. Mr. Woods swears he never said anything of the kind. This is the Dr. Woods who saved the lives of the two colored girls.

Alexander Pool (colored) says that on the day of the election he was met by Mr. John A. White, who gave him a democratic ticket and told him to go up and vote it, which he did, fearing for his life.

Mr. Pool swore before this subcommittee that he had never voted a straight-out republican ticket in his life, but he did upon one occasion vote a straight democratic ticket; that he always votes for the men he believes to be the best fitted for the office, and that he knows of a great many other colored men who have been in the habit of doing the same thing; swore that "the election before the last was a mighty split ticket;" swore that he voted the democratic ticket at the late election, and in so voting voted his own honest sentiments and convictions.

Edgar A. Rigby (colored) says that he was told by Lewis C. Moore that they intended to kill every d——d radical leader in the parish. Moore swears that he never made any such declaration.

Rigby further says:

"When I was up there about four or five weeks ago, I saw a man, Aaron Robinson, who had been a republican leader, but was then a democrat; he told me not to stay there; that it was not safe for me to do so. He said that he had been forced to join the democratic party and make speeches for them, to save himself and many others, so that they could live there in peace. That he made the democratic speeches as light as possible, and he would tell people whom he could trust, after these meetings, that they must come there to protect themselves from harm, but that he hoped that before election they would have protection and

Aaron Robinson here referred to was, as has been already stated, one of the colored democratic leaders and speakers in this parish. He positively denies Rigsby's statement, as follows:

A. No, sir.
Q. Or by any majority?

A. No, sir.
Q. Did you say to him that the colored voters did not get any protection, and they had to vote the democratic ticket or not vote at all?

A. No, sir, be asked me what I thought about the colored people voting the democratic ticket, and I told him that I believed a majority of them had come to the conclusion that it was just as good to vote the democratic ticket, or better than to vote the republican ticket. That is what I said to him.

See page 271 for an account of a murderous assault made by republicans upon

See page 371 for an account of a murderous assault made by republicans upon Mr. Robinson just after election.

Wesley Smith, colored, says he voted the democratic ticket at Clinton, and is certain he would have been killed if he had not voted it. The Rev. John A. Reiley swears that he is certain that five hundred republican tickets could have been voted there without any danger. Smith says the democrats at the Clinton polls were all armed with pistols. He testified before this subcommittee, and then swore that he did not see a pistol exhibited. He says that he was not permitted to put his ticket in the box himself, but swears that the usual practice has always been for one of the commissioners of election to receive the ticket and put it in the box. He admits that he did not indicate that he wished to put it in himself. Why he was so anxious to deposit the ballot in the box when he was voting it against his will he does not explain. He says that persons came from Wilkinson County, Mississippi, and assisted the democrats of East Feliciana in intimidating the colored republican voters, and raiding through the parish. He now swears that he never heard of anything of that kind, and that this was put into the affidavit without his knowledge. Says that John Butler, one of the commissioners of election, ordered him to open his ticket. This is shown by the testimony of Mr. Butler to be without the shadow of truth. Butler testified as follows:

Q. Do you know of any other John Butler living in this ward?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear Wesley Smith testify a few evenings since?

A. I did.

Q. Are you the gentleman who was sitting to his left, and to whom he pointed when he spoke of John Butler?

A. Yes, sir.; I am the one.

Q. Were you a commissioner in the last election in this ward?

A. No, sir.; I was not.

Q. Did you state to Wesley Smith, on election day, in this ward, when he was at the polls—did you tell him to open the ticket so and come right around me here?

A. I don't recollect seeing him on that day. I have tried to study it up since that day, since he pointed me out.

Q. Did you use that language to any one?

A. No, sir.; I didn't say that thing to any one. I used a portion of it.

Q. What did you say?

A. I was standing in front of the box. The commissioners asked me to assist them, so as to facilitate matters and get through quicker. I did say to several of them to open their register papers and they could go and vote faster. They came in on my right and passed out on my left.

Q. Did you tell any one to open their tickets?

A. No, sir.

Q. It was the registering papers?

Q. Did you hear any of the commissioners of election make any such remark to him or any other person?

A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you say to him or any other person, "Open your ticket, and take the ticket in one hand and the registering paper in the other, and pass right around me?"

A. No, sir; I did not.
Q. Did you hear any of the commissioners make use of any such language?
A. No, sir; I did not.
Smith further says that colored republicans were whipped and killed repeatedly during the last canvass. He now swears that he never heard of any one being either whipped or killed during the canvass. He swears that the affidavit was read to him, and he has no recollection of anything of that kind being in it. Says he could not have made such a statement to the party who wrote the affidavit, "because I (he) never heard of any killed on that account."

Upon the subject of persons being whipped, the following questions were propounded to this witness and answers given.

By Judge New.

By Judge New:

Q. Do you know of any colored men having been whipped on account of their political opinions, of your own personal knowledge?

A. No, sir; I don't know of it myself.

Q. Well, do you know of any facts or circumstances or the surroundings to any praticular case of whipping which makes you believe that the whipping took place on account of the politics of the man who was whipped?

L. No; I don't know of any man being—really, to tell you the truth, being whipped about his political opinions. They have been whipped for stealing.

Q. They were whipped for stealing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any complaint of that at the time?

A. No; I did not make any complaint, because I didn't care anything about it.

Q. Is it not a fact that there has been a good deal of whipping in this parish on account of stealing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the fact?

A. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that the fact \(^1\)
A. Yes, sir.
Q. If this man that you heard of being whipped was whipped on account of stealing, why did you attach any importance to that and put it in this affidavit \(^1\)
A. That question was not asked me in that respect, whether a man was whipped about stealing or his political opinions or not.
Q. You say in this affidavit, "I know that Henry Lawson, Charles Williams, Allen Meyer, Austin Sloan, and Dangerfield Sloan, all colored men and voters, were whipped."
A. But about what \(^1\)
Q. If you did not believe they were whipped on account of their political opinions, why didn't you tell him so\(^1\)
A. He didn't ask me.
Q. Why didn't you say to him, "But these men were not whipped on account of politics\(^1\)
A. I didn't think that was the fact, why didn't you put that in your affidavit\(^1\)
A. I didn't think that was for me to correct. I didn't know he wanted to find out what they were whipped about.
Q. He would not have known they were whipped if you had not told him.
A. He asked me if I knew of any man being whipped in the ward or in the parish, and of course I told him.
It will be found, upon examination of the testimony, that Smith's statements as

It will be found, upon examination of the testimony, that Smith's statements as to what he heard Captain Fuqua, Mr. Kernan, and others say is fully met by the evidence of those involved.

Aaron McKenzie, before the returning board, made affidavit to the following:

"That the employer of affiant, Henry Clay East, told him that the report had been circulated in town that affiant had made a complaint that he had been whipped, and that the bull-dozers threatened to visit affiant for circulating said report; but that be (affiant's employer) had got said bull-dozers to defer their visit on condition that he would get affiant to promise not to mention to any one the circumstances of his whipping." whipping.

Mr. East, as to this, testifies as follows:

By Judge New:
Question. In what ward do you live?
Answer. The eighth ward.
Q. State if you are acquainted with Aaron McKenzie. He is a colored man?
A. Yes, sir; he lived on my place last year.
Q. State whether you ever said to him that a report had been circulated in town that he had made a complaint that he had been whipped, and that the bull-dozers had threatened to visit him for circulating the report, but that you had got the bull-dozers to defer their visit on condition that you would get him to promise not to mention any circumstances of his whipping.
A. I did not.
Q. Did you ever say anything to him that was substantially that?
A. I never did.
Q. Did you have any conversation with him on the subject of his whipping?
A. He was up at my house the next morning after he had been whipped. He came up and told me that he had got whipped the night before. I asked him what he was whipped for, and he said because he had not been at work. There was a rumor that he was accused of stealing. I was sick at the time, affilicted with the rheumatism.

rheumatism.
Q. You had no conversation of this kind with him ?
A. No, sir.

George T. Norwood made affidavit before the returning board to the following: "Deponent says that on the day a public meeting was held in Clinton, during the recent political campaign, he heard a white man named J. W. Robbins threaten a colored man that he would find out the name of every negro who voted the republican ticket and make him smell hell after the election."

Mr. Robbins swears as follows:

Py Judge New:

Question. What ward do you live in?

Answer. The sixth ward.

Q. Are you acquainted with George T. Norwood?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember to have said at any time during the late campaign, or at any time, to George T. Norwood or any other person, at the town of Clinton or elsewhere, that you would find out the name of every colored man that would vote the republican ticket and "make them smell hell after the election?"

A. No, sir; I did not say so.

Q. Did you ever say anything that was in substance that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your name is J. M. Robbins?

A. It is.

Q. Is there any such man, to your knowledge, it is.

A. It is.
Q. Is there any such man, to your knowledge, in the parish as J. W. Robbins ?
A. No, sir.
Q. Are you the only one of the mame of J. M. Robbins ?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. JOYCE:

Q. What ticket did you vote?
A. Democratic ticket.
There were no whippings at any time in this parish on account of politics, and during the canvass there were but two of which we could hear of any kind; one the case of Ezekiel Glover, already spoken of, and the other Ananias Richardson, who entered the storchouse of Rev. John A. Reiley, and, without permission, helped himself to meat out of the pork barrel. All persons having property, without regard to party, were, it seems, foraged upon alike.

John Marston testified as follows:

"Mr. Parson Reiley told me that he had lost most of his crop of 1874, and a good deal of the crop of 1875, by negroes stealing it, and that the regulators had saved his crop of 1876. This is the conversation I had with Mr. Reiley a short while ago. He was very much in favor of the regulators."

Rev. John A. Reiley was chairman of one of these lynching organizations, and assisted in organizing it. (See page 411.) White men were regulated and run out of the parish for stealing. Joseph A. Norwood tells of one Robinson thus driven off because he had stolen hogs from a colored man, and of one Brown compelled to leave the parish by the regulators on account of stealing cattle from a colored man. As a further specimen of the utter recklessness with which allidavis were prepared to order for use before the returning board, we invite attention to that of James Law, colored. In his affidavit he says: "I have heard of many instances of colored men in said parish having been whipped and shot for attending republican meetings."

When examined before this subcommittee he said he did not become of the test of the test of the resulting that having been whipped and shot for attending republican

Can meetings."

When examined before this subcommittee he said he did not know of but one republican meeting being held in the parish, and had heard of but one case where blows were struck, and of no case where a colored man was shot for attending republican meetings.

The following testimony by Law shows how anxious he was to sustain the affidavit which he had made before the returning board:

By Judge New:

Question. Take the year of 1875. Can you state any case in that parish where a colored man was shot on account of having attended a republican meeting; if so, who was it?

was it?

Answer. What we understand—we understand a man to be a republican when he attends a republican meeting and votes the republican ticket.

Q. State any one in the year 1875, in that parish, who was shot on account of having attended a republican meeting.

A. I know of the sheriff, Henry Smith; he is a republican, and attended republican meetings all the time, and figured conspicuously.

Q. What republican meeting did he attend on account of which he was shot in the year 1875.

oan meetings and Q. What republican meeting did he attend on account very year 1875?

A. There was no republican meetings in 1875.
Q. What republican meeting at any time prior to 1875 was Henry Smith shot for attending?

They were shot because they were republicans.

Name republican meeting at any time prior to 1875 was Henry Smith shot for attending!

A. They were shot because they were republicans.

Q. You do not know of his being shot on account of his having attended a republican meeting at a republican.

Q. Why did you state in your affidavit that it was on account of having attended a republican meetings that republicans were shot!

A. Yell, not outside of his being a republican.

Q. Why did you state in your affidavit that it was on account of having attended republican meetings that republicans were shot!

A. I just told you that that was an error.

Q. This, then, is not true!

A. That portion is not true. That is an error that crept in.

It would seem from the following answer to an interrogatory propounded to Thomas D. Carnly before the returning board, that Law had seriously thought of casting his fortunes with the democratic party:

"Answer of Thomas D. Carnly.

"To interrogatory I. James Law had a conversation with witness during the recent campaign. Witness asked him if he would join the democratic party. Law replied, 'They will not receive me.' Witness replied, 'You are responsible for it, because you sold out both parties at the previous election.' Witness knows that at least twenty leading colored democrats told him that if Law joined their club they would quit the party; they had no confidence in him. This was said to me as presidend of the third ward club."

Law shot a colored man a few years since at Port Hudson, in a political campaign. Law was a botter at that time from the regular republican organization.

called him out of his house and told him they had heard that he was a radical, and that he must leave the parish within ten days, that in the fall of 1875 the same men came to his house and took therefrom "his three young children by a colored woman, whom affiant was living with," and notified him that he must leave the parish. The proof, by the brother-in-law of Sparkman and others, is, that he was living in adultery with the colored woman, and had Warrants were sued out for John George and John Gair. The deputy sheriff, with a posse, went to Baton Rouge, where George was supposed to be, and where Gair was then living. They failed to find George, but arrested Gair on the 12th day of October, 1876, and on their way with him to Clinton, just after entering East Feliciana Parish, the party of men referred to, about sundown, undisguised, made their appearance, overpowered and disarmed the deputy sheriff and his posse, and shot Gair, the latter protesting that he was innocent. That the deputy sheriff and his party acted in good faith, and were in no way in collusion with the men who killed Gair, is very clear from the testimony. That evening, Babe Matthews, who in the mean time had been in custody, was hung to a tree in the court-house yard at Clinton, at about nine o'clock. We used every possible industry to learn the names of the guilty parties, and obtained a large number, but not all. Gair had for a time was the leader of his race in that parish. He was a man of violent temper, and had become very odious to the white people of the parish. Before removing to Baton Rouge he had lost his rank and influence in a great degree among his people, on account of party divisions and his defeat for office. He drank to excess at times, and was at such times often demonstrative and violent in his conduct. Upon one occasion, not long prior to leaving the parish, the town of Clinton was in quarantine because of yellow fever. Gair had been away, and upon his return forced himself by the guards, and upon entering the town talked with great bitterness, making threats that he would burn the town.

Upon another occasion, when defeated for the Legislature on account of a division in the republican party, he again threatened to burn the town of Clinton. Whether Gair was guilty of procuring the poisoning of Dr. Saunders, we do not know. That he was believed to be guilty, we do not doubt. A chemical analysis was made of the contents of the stomach by p

We do not believe that the killing of Gair was because of his being a republican. He had removed from the parish of East Feliciana, and he was killed at a time when there was no evidence of his ever having had any personal difficulty growing out of politics with any white man. There is no evidence that Gair had been in the parish after his removal.

A few colored men in this parish testified that they voted the democratic ticket, not because they preferred its success but for the reason that they apprehended some sort of evil would befall them if they did not. We believe from the evidence that they could have voted a republican ticket with entire safety. It may be that in the absence of such a ticket some colored republicans were prevailed upon, against their own inclinations, to vote the democratic ticket. It is not difficult to see how this might be true in any community where one party had abandoned the field at the beginning, and when the other was therefore having it all its own way. It would not be remarkable if under such circumstances some votes were secured by the prevailing party against the secret desire and choice of persons voting.

In this connection we wish to call attention to the fact that Captain Rogers, of the United States Army, a republican, stationed in this parish, gives it as his best indigment that about two-thirds of the colored vote, if minifluenced by others, would be cast for the republican party. The registered democratic vote is placed in Sherman's report at 1,004, and the republican vote at 2,127. Subtract from the latter number two-thirds of the same, and there would remain 709 colored vote which would be democratic. This added to the democratic ore gistered vote would make 1,713 votes, which is within 23 votes of the number cast for the democratic electors. It will be seen, therefore, that the democratic vote is not any larger than it would be entitled to on a full vote. This cannot be denied, for in addition to the 1,736 votes cast for the democratic candidates, there were a s

What has been said about the causes of disorders in East Baton Rouge and West Feliciana parishes applies to this as well. Over one thousand affidavits from this parish were filed before the returning board, from both white and colored, declaring the election to have been fair and without intimidation.

We close our report as to this parish by quoting from the testimony of J. G. Kilburn, who was elected judge.

Judge Kilburn was upon the ticket so warmly commended by Rev. John A. Reiley.

Judge Kilburn's testimony is as follows:

CLINTON, LOUISIANA, January 9, 1877.

By Judge NEW:

Question. What is your profession ?

By Judge New:

Question. What is your profession?

Answer. A lawyer.

Q. How long have you lived in this parish?

A. Since 1857.

Q. What do you know of the expulsion, so to speak, of Gair, Ray, and Smith?

Ray and Smith, I believe, were sheriffs at one time. I would like you to give us, as clearly as you can, a brief statement of what you know about the conduct of those three men; what you know, and so on, without any further questions upon the conductase citizens and office-holders.

Q. Take the case of John Gair. Under what circumstances did he leave the parish? I have made use of the word expulsion; I do not know whether he was expelled or not; I do not know how that may have been. What have you to say of the circumstances under which he left the parish?

A. Immediately before he left the parish here were a number of men arrested here in different paris of the parish on the charge of assantiand battery and brought carried to the magistrates of their own wards, but they were brought to this town for crimes that they were said to have perpetrated in other parts of the parish, and over which the justice of the peace in the ward had jurisdiction. It was generally thought, it was understood here, that they had been brought bere to make fees for the justice of the peace here at that time, and that Ray and Gair were in with him for that purpose. It was an extraordinary proceeding to bring people here on those charges. Those were the only cases of criminals being tried in this city for crimes having been committed out in the different parts of the parish. The own of the parish had found the charge against them, so that he could make fees. They claimed that Ray and Smith and Gair were in with him for that purpose. It was an extraordinary proceeding to bring people here on turned the country of the parish that the parish that the parish can be made to the parish the parish that the parish that the parish that the parish that the parish can be parished that the parish that the parish that the parish that the parish th

A. It is names were bad. They would get drink and riot and carry on in the lost outrageous manner.

Q. What was Ray's age at the time he figured here?

A. Twenty-eight or twenty-nine years; about the same age as Gair.

Q. And Smith; how old was he?

A. I knew him as a boy belonging to Colonel Fugur; I think twenty-six or twentyeight years. Q. What have you to say as to the matter of the late canvass in this parish of

Q. What have you to say as to the matter of the late canvass in this parish of the election?

A. In the late canvass there was first a primary election held for candidates before the white people of the persons who wished to be candidates. I think there were some nine hundred votes cast at that primary election. Every white men and a great many colored men were very anxious that law and order should be fully restored and that all violations of the law should be settled according to law. That was the general desire expressed. Men who wished to be elected to office were compelled to have the necessary qualifications to make them proficient in carrying out the objects of their offices. They wanted to see all this bull-dozing and so on stopped, and that all crimes should be punished by the law; we should have courts established and men elected to offices who would punish offenses proven to have been committed. There was a general condemnation of the late state of affairs and disorder expressed by both white and black. The primary election was held for candidates for office, and all who desired to vote voted at that election. There were some few colored men, but principally white men voted; nine hundred, I believe, in all. And I know that all men elected by that primary election were conservative men, men who would see that all offenses were settled by law. Then we commenced the canvass; and it seemed to me that every man in the whole community became at once a politician and seemed to think it was important to carry the election and elect those men. We had barbecues and political speaking, and used all means publicly and privately to induce white and black to come with us and vote for the men nominated at that time. I don't think that those meetings, one of which was held here while General Nicholls was here and a barbecue here and at Jackson, was in any way disturbed. The speeches were all conservative. General Nicholls's arguments and those of other speakers were addressed to both white and black; and their advice was for the people to be quiet and orderly, and to elect their men to office, so that all this disorder, which forced as it were the people to take the law in their own hands on account of the incompetency of the officers, should be storpped, and that all offenses should be punished in accordance with law. Those speeches were made over and over again. We dwelt largely upon our future prosperity to guard against that condition of affairs. And General Nicholls promised to the negroes schools, and that they should have small taxes to pay, and that no man should have any taxes to pay over what was reasonable. There were illustrations of many cases of the present taxation amounting almost to confiscation of a man's property, and many of the colored men were sufferers; and, after realizing their position, they became very eloquent and enthusiastic in their support of the democrats; and, in fact, a great many of them in their speeches advocated the very points initiated by the white canvassers. I did not attend very many public meetings myself, but I heard of them; and at those I did attend I saw no threats or intimidation; in fact, everything was very conciliatory.

Q. State what interest the colored men of property and infinence in the parish seemed to take in the canvass, and the effort they made to establish the new order of things spoken of.

A. Every colored man I know of who had property in the community was as anxious as I was or anybody else; at least, seemed to be desirous of restoring that state of affairs, and have good order and good government.

Q. Is it not the idea the colored people of the parish, and the white people, too, had become tired and disgusted with the condition black.

Q. What would you estimate the colored attendance at that barbecue?

A. Fully fifteen hundred. I would place it at that.

Q. State whether the entire parish was represented by the colored people.

A. It was. They came in with their clubs, mostly on horseback, some on foot. It was the largest congregation I have seen.

Q. State whether families of them came.

A. Yes; women and children. There was a general gathering of white and black.

- Q. State whether there was a large attendance of women and children with - them

Q. State whether there was a large attendance of women and children with them.

A. I think so. I saw a great many. Everybody was invited to come.

Q. Is there anything else you wish to state?

A. Well, I heard a witness on the stand speak; I think it was Mr. Norwood. He was questioned as to some men who were made to leave the parish on account of some talk before the election—white men. I happen to know one of the paries, having acted as attorney for him. Some time before the election, three white men, two named Robertson and one named Wilkins, were charged with the killing of a colored man charged with stealing hogs. They were arrested and brought before the parish judge. Judge Lions acquitted them for want of evidence. The killing was committed by Robertson and Wilkins when they attempted to arrest Wilkins, charged with hog stealing. One of the Robertsons was re-arrested and remained in jail; and one of the family of Robertson brought a note addressed to Robertson, which they said was left at their house one night, which I read. It was to the effect that Robertson and Wilkins must leave the parish or they would be punished. This was signed, "Headquarters of the regulators." I don't know who they were. Robertson was at large on bond not to leave the parish bortoe his trial came on, on the hog-stealing question. The other Robertson and Williams were sent to the penitentiary for one year for stealing the logs. From the colored men I came dhat the other Robertson and Williams were democrats, and voted at the primary election as democrats. I merely speak of that case because I happened to know it. I know of no case of intimidation or violence to any man, and of no threatening of violence on account of politics. I know I and my friends, and I know a large number in this community, were extremely anxious that law and order should be restored and all charges and offenses should be punished by the law only.

J. D. NEW, GEORGE M. BEEBE, Majority of Subcommittee.

Report to the whole committee of the subcommittee to which was referred the investiga-tion of the Louisiana election in the Shreveport or fourth congressional district of that State.

Mr. E. R. MEADE, from the subcommittee appointed for the Shreveport or fourth congressional district of Louisiana, submitted the following report:

To the Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, Chairman, &c. :

The subcommittee appointed for the Shreveport or fourth congressional district

The subcommittee appointed for the Shreveport or fourth congressional district of Louisiana reports:
That said district comprises the parishes of Bienville, Bossier, Caddo, De Soto, Natchitoches, Red River, Winn, Sabine, Rapides, Vernon, and Grant.
That changes were made by the returning board in the vote of Webster, Bossier, De Soto, Vernon, and Natchitoches Parishes, and the vote in Grant Parish was entirely rejected.
The question involved in Grant Parish has been examined by your committee in New Orleans, so, therefore, this subcommittee presents the result of its labors and investigations in the five parishes of Webster, Bossier, De Soto, Vernon, and Natchitoches, which were visited by your committee, or the immediate vicinity thereof.

Before leaving New Orleans we diligently endeavored to obtain from the return-Natchitoches, which were visited by your committee, or the immediate vicinity thereof.

Before leaving New Orleans we diligently endeavored to obtain from the returning board copies of papers on which they had predicated their action respecting the polls in this district. For this purpose we delayed eight days, and although it was pretended that sixteen clerks were engaged in this particular service, yet the amount of incomplete work actually performed could have been done by an expert copyist in less than twenty-four hours. As further delay by us was impracticable we therefore commenced our labors under some disadvantages in lack of the official returning-board data.

It has been understood by this committee that an inquiry into the various questions of law, constitutional and statutory, will be considered in general committee; we therefore, except by incidental and necessary reference, omit such inquiry in this report, confining our attention so far as possible to the facts elicited.

One hundred and ninety-eight wittesses were examined, and a much larger number was subpœnaed. As many of these witnesses, we ascertained, would but accumulate the evidence already taken by us there, their testimony was omitted for want of sufficient time, and also from our desire to reduce our reported testimony to as comprehensive a size as possible. The testimony taken is herewith reported in fall.

WEBSTER.

In this parish polls 1 and 5 were rejected for the alleged reason that the tally-sheets were not footed at the polling places, but at the parish-seat of Minden, and also, that at each of these polls the regular commissioners were aided in their duties, in the case of poll 1 by a person not named, and at poll 5 by a Mr. Goodwill. No protest or objections were made by any commissioner of election, and the supervisor of registration makes no protest respecting registration or revision of registration, while the protest as to election filed bears date of verification November 13, at Shreveport.

The vote at these polls was as follows:

The vote at these pons was as follows:	Rep.	Dem.
Poll 1
Poll 5	121	- 251

No suggestion of fraud or unfairness anywhere appears, nor were any charges of intimidation made with respect to these polls, or to the parish generally. The Hon. A. B. George, a State senator holding over, representing the twentieth district, including this parish, testified before this committee that he was present on election-day at poll 5, and that everything there was conducted fairly and properly—he himself saw the tally-sheets; that the supervisor of registration of the parish was present, as well as all the commissioners of the election for that poll, viz, Fort, Webb, and Dr. Harper; that Webb was incompetent to act as such commissioner, and Dr. Harper not in condition, so that Alfred Goodwill was asked to assist in making up the tally, there being five democrats and five republicans present as witnesses; that the election throughout the parish was remarkably quiet; that there was no intimidation, no force, and no bribery, so far as the knowledge of witness extended.

T. B. Neal, a prominent merchant in the parish, testified that the election at poll 1 was peaceable, and that on the counting of the votes one of the commissioners. Commissioner Lewis, was taken sick, and John A Colbert, United States supervisor, was sworn in in his place, and assisted in making out the tally-sheets, and that the count was entirely fair, and the election peaceable and without disturbance; that the fairness of the election at this poll, as well as poll 5, has never been questioned by any one, and that the returns made to the supervisor of registration were also without question.

F. M. Turner, clerk of the district court, produced the original returns as filed with him by the commissioners of election of the various polls in the parish.

The returns from poll 1 were all in due form, signed by all the commissioners, before Morrow, supervisor of registration, and no protest or remarks accompanied the same.

At poll 5 also the returns were made out by the commissioners of election, and the same.

At poll 5 also the returns were made out by the commissioners of election, and sworn to before the supervisor of registration. No protest accompanied the returns of this poll, or remarks of any kind. The supervisor of registration, the clerk also testified, had never filed with him any protest respecting the recent election, and to the best of his or their knowledge, the election was full and fair, and that the supervisor of registration had expressed himself to him that such was the case.

was the case.

Witnesses further testified that at poll 4 the returns were only signed by one commissioner, and never had been signed by any one else. This was a republican

Bowling Webb, republican, a commissioner of election at poll 5, stated that Goodwill acted for the commissioners, at their request, in the presence of all parties; that he saw all that was done, and that it was fairly and honestly performed; that Commissioner Fort kept a tally-sheet.

Goodwill himself testified as to the part he took in the counting of the votes at poll 5 at the request of the commissioners, and that he performed the service fairly and honestly and to the best of his ability. Goodwill's general character is indorsed by a large number of citizens of the parish.

R. C. Drew canvased the parish, and was at box 5, where the conduct of the election and canvass of votes was entirely fair.

J. A. Colbert, the United States supervisor at poll 1, testified that he took Lewis's place as commissioner when the latter became sick; that he was duly sworn and installed into office, and that everything at this poll was fair, peaceable, and honest.

Respecting the general condition of the parish, W. H. Bury testified that there as no intimidation of any kind, except of radical negroes toward democratic ne-

At poll 4 several parties, other than the commissioners, handled the ballots; James F. Taylor canvassed the parish; and that, during the period of registration and the day of election, it was entirely peaceable, and everything was conducted fairly, and, as he termed it, squarely. He was United States supervisor of election, and was cognizant of Goodwill having acted at poll 5 at the request of all parties.

Referring to Silverstein, who had made an affidavit for use by the returning board, which appears in the Sherman report, witness stated that he was a man of bad character, and who had been impeached in their courts. R. C. Drow also testified to the bad character of Silverstein.

W. W. Carlos was the democratic candidate for the Legislature, and canvassed the parish previous and up to the day of election; that the election was a peaceable and quiet one.

His own majority, he had heard, was 5 or 8, but he had been counted out by the returning board.

A. L. Lewis, who was the clerk for the supervisor of registration, testified to the tally-sheets and ballot-boxes having been handed over to the clerk in due form.

Nolan Lewis, a constable at poli 1, testified that the election was fair and peaceable.

McDonald also impeached Silverstein in the general reputation of the lat-

McDonald also impeached Silverstein in the general reputation of the latter, and speech of people respecting him.

Elijah Powell, Methodist presiding elder; Calvert Simmons, preacher; Dave Morton, O. Barrow, P. Johnson, Charles Harris, Thomas Patterson, and Levi Morrow, all colored men, testified to having voted the democratic ticket; that the registration and election were peaceable and fair, and that they voted the democratic ticket freely and voluntarily.

On the other hand, the minority committee produced but two witnesses, to wit, Isaac Silverstein, above referred to, and Basel Prince, a colored republican, who both attended a democratic torch-light procession at Minden. They both hurrahed for Hayes. During the proceedings, by some remarkable coincidence, both got hit about the same time by some one in the crowd, whom they did not distinctly identify, and this appears to have been the substance of the intimidation they were cognizant of in that parish.

BOSSIER.

In this parish polls Nos. 1 and 3 were rejected by the returning board. These polls are commonly distinguished as Atkins Landing and Red Land respectively. A protest accompanies the consolidated return of the supervisor of registration in the case of Atkins Landing, on the ground that none of the commissioners came with the box to the supervisor, and tonly one tally-sheet was compiled. Other irregularities are in a general way charged. At the Red Land box the protest charges gross frauds; that three democratic commissioners officiated, and that the republicans were denied admittance to the room during the counting of the votes. Both of these polls were largely democratic, and all the others in the parish appear to have had a republican majority. The change produced by the rejection of these polls is shown by the following statement:

	Rep. electors.	Dem. electors
Poll 1	. 49	108
Poll 3	. 29	172

Your committee deemed it important that a very thorough investigation should be had respecting these polls, and especially as on visiting their neighborhood we found it asserted that no foundation whatever existed in point of fact for the action of the returning board in throwing out the same.

Henry W. Ogden, a gentleman of prominence in the parish and chairman of the democratic parish committee, was called as a witness and testified that he had made protest to the supervisor of registration against the receipt of votes from the five polls numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, and 8, all upon the alleged grounds that the returns had not been delivered in the time contemplated by the statute; and in the case of poll 2, that the same had only been signed by two of the commissioners of election. He said there was a democratic majority at Atkins, but thought it his election. He said there was a democratic majority at Atkins, but thought it his duty to protest.

At poll only two commissioners had signed the returns, and one was the parish judge, holding office by Governor Kellogg's appointment. This parish judge had said to witness that is mattered not how the election wont, the republicans would count it in. The judge's name was Fort, and he had kept the ballot-box of his when the votes were counted once ballots were counted out of the box than there were voters on the list—200 votes appearing, and only 508 voters to correspond when the votes were counted once ballots were counted out of the box than there were voters on the list—200 votes appearing, and only 508 voters to correspond with the same. Witness had called the attent ion of the supervisor of registration to this doscrepancy, with the same result as in the preceding instance.

The republican candidate for clerk of the district court was one of the commission of the commi

VOTES REJECTED.

Although the secret proceedings of the State returning board have not been fully ascertained, it is understood that the votes of wards 5 and 6 of this parish were thrown out in the canvass on the ground of intimidation. That the effect of such action may be seen, the following statement is made showing the actual vote of each of the two wards:

	Rep.	Dem.
Ward 5 gave for electors	. 2	150 193
Both wards	. 7	343
Democratic majority in the two wards		336

The testimony shows that no protest was made by the commissioners of election or supervisor of registration, or either of them, at the time or in the manner, or at any time or manner, as is required by the law of Louisiana, to authorize or empower the returning board to reject these votes.

(See testimony of F. W. Freeman and T. L. Matley, commissioners of election, ward 5; of A. H. Basto, commissioner of election, ward 6; and of John La Place and T. J. Bolt, parish clerks of registration.)

The report of the open proceedings of the returning board, published by the visiting committee, also shows that the returns from this parish, when opened by the board and passed to the clerk for compilation, were not accompanied by any pro-

Before considering the testimony in its general scope and effect, there are several particulars brought out or alluded to in it which the committee think it pertinent to notice in their relation to the purposes of this inquiry.

VIOLENCE AND MURDER.

The testimony of Mr. E. A. Breda, republican, coroner, treasurer, and police juror of the parish, discloses a lamentable condition of affairs exisiting there as regards lawlessness, violence, and bloodshed. Numerous cases of capital crime have occurred in the parish, and, except in two or three instances, have gone unpunished. Circumstances could hardly be stated showing a more lax administration of law, and calling more loudly for change and reform of government. But in all this dark picture, the responsibility of which must rest upon those who have had control of the State for the last few years, but a single outrage, as shown by the testimony of Coroner Breda, was attributable to political causes, and that the sequel to a long newspaper quarrel between two editors, which became a bitter personal feud, leading to a challenge to a duel, and finally culminating in a street encounter and the killing of one of the antagonists. Neither in point of time nor as regards their several causes could any of these affairs have had connection with or influence upon the election of 1876 in the parish, and especially in the wards in question.

THE WHITE CAMELIA, ETC.

The witness, Mr. Breda, also testified to a democratic organization, existing in 1868, of which he was a member, called "The White Camelias," the objects of which he considered, after a time, so objectionable that he abandoned it, and, after a long probation, in 1872 joined the republican party, (not for naught it would

As finally stated by him, after long cross-examination, and as fully explained by Mr. David Pearson in his testimony, the object of the order seems to have been to organize a white men's party, to operate by ordinary party methods, and maintain the government in the hands and control of white men. It existed but a short time, and was dissolved years ago; and whatever its character or the object of its introduction into the testimony, could have had no influence upon recent elections, nor relevancy to the subject of present inquiry.

Mr. Breda also speaks of threats of violence to himself and other prominent republicans. These appear to have been mere rumors, at second or third hands, to which he attached but little importance. (The matter of the desperado Horton will be noticed in another place.) The greatest discomfort his party relations brought upon him seems to have been the loss of accustomed prominence and enjoyment at barbecues, after joining the republicans. He does not allege any hinderance or molestation in the free exercise of his political rights; nor anything affecting the late election in wards 5 and 6.

TAX ASSOCIATION AND SHOT-GUNS

TAX ASSOCIATION AND SHOT-GUNS.

In 1874 a tax association, as it was called, was formed in the parish, and embraced in its membership leading men of both parties and races. It had no connection with party or party politics, but had for its object to protect its members and the people from spoliation, to which they were subjected under the name and form of taxation.

Mr. Isaac Ezenac, one of the republican witnesses, speaks in rambling terms of an organization, in 1874, which rode about the country armed with shot-guns and pistols. He states neither object nor action, except the riding about; but seems to attempt to connect the movement with the tax association, and that with hostility to republicans, as a party effort. All the testimony on the subject controverts that idea, and Mr. Pearson in his testimony explains the occasion and character of the shot-gun raid. Rumors got abroad that a body of negroes were arming and about to attack the town. The country people armed, mounted, and rode in to protect their parish capital and friends. As soon as they found that the reports were unfounded they returned to their homes, without harm or attempted injury to any one. In any view, this all had nothing to do with the election of 1876 in wards 5 and 6, which Mr. Ezenac even says was fair, peaceable, and free from intimidation.

THE MAYORALTY CONTEST.

The testimony of Mr. T. A. Simmons, one of the witnesses introduced on the part of the republicans, discloses a contest over the office of mayor of Natchitoches and the other municipal offices. It shows the lamentable condition the State government has been in, both as to its legislative and executive proceedings, as affecting the interests of localities; but does not appear to have been strictly a party contest, as between republicans and democrats, or to have had any special bearing upon the late election in the parish, more particularly the remote wards 5 and 6, as it affected only the city and not the parish at large.

THE MEETING AT CAMPTI.

Rayford Blunt, a colored man from South Carolina, and republican candidate in the Natchitoches district for the office of State senator, held a meeting at Campti some days before the late election, which he alleges was broken up by the interference of one Hynes or Hymes, a democrat. On the other hand, it was asserted that Blunt broke up his own meeting without cause, so as to have plausible grounds for alleging intimidation. The facts seem to have been that while Mr. Blunt was speaking, Hynes, from the outskirts of the crowd, interrupted him, more or less rudely, by asking him questions, which brought on a short wordy altercation, whereupon Blunt declared the meeting broken up and left. No violence was used nor hostile demonstration made. Whatever the object, there does not appear to have been any necessity for abandoning the meeting; and, in any view, it is not seen how the transaction could have influenced the election, occurring in other localities several days afterward, or the voters in any way.

(See testimony of David Boult, republican candidate for sheriff at the last election; Henry McCarty, republican; —— Summers, (colored,) republican, and W. H. Jack, democrat.)

NEGRO DEMOCRATS. The testimony of the colored witnesses examined furnishes full and conclusive answer, as matter of fact, to the argument or inference that because many negroes voted the democratic ticket, they must necessarily have been coerced or have done so under intimidation.

MADISON JONES (colored) examined by Mr. MEADE:

Question. Where do you reside? Answer. I stays with Mr. Macey, here in Natchitoches; about a mile out of

Q. What ticket did you vote the last election?
A. The democratic. Have voted that for the last two years. Before that voted the republican ticket.
Q. How did you come to change?

*If any protests have been made for the purpose of affecting the vote of either ward 5 or 6, they have been illegally and surreptitiously smuggled in, and only exhibits in the secret sessions of the returning board.

A. I thought that the country was going down, and I was with the people of the South, and they was the men that I had to look to for my support, and that is the reason I changed and went over to them.

Q. Well, were you of opinion that your property and your person would be in greater safety if the democrats were in power than if the republicans were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, are you a farmer?

A. Yes, sir. I work a little crop every year.

Q. Whose land do you work it on?

A. On Mr. Macey's this last year again.

Q. Well, what kind of laws have you had here, and how have they been enforced in this parish the last few years?

A. Well, sir, as far as I know, they have been enforced pretty bad.

Q. And you concluded to change, that you might have better laws?

A. Yes, sir; some way or other.

George Duncan, (colored,) aged sixty-three years, examined by Mr. House:

Have lived here in the town of Natchitoches thirty-five years; voted here at the last election the democratic ticket; have voted the democratic ticket since 1871; prior to that voted the republican ticket.

Question. State what caused you to change your political feelings.

Answer. The action of the republican party didn't exactly suit me with regard to some of their proceedings, and I concluded I would try the other side; I thought it my duty to do so; I was not under promise from the other side, for I have never been promised anything from any political party.

Q. What do you think of the state of the government—the republican State government?

A. It has been in a very bad condition in our section of the country. From what I have seen, from my little observation, it has been carried on very badly what I have seen, from my little observation, it has been carried on here?

Q. How has it been carried on here?
A. There has been no law or order, in the first place. It seems that the officers that has been in power don't execute the laws as they should have done; for what reason, I cannot say,

Q. Have you always voted the democratic ticket?
A. No, sir; have voted the republican ticket.
Q. How came you to change your political affiliation?
A. Because there was such a confusion in it nobody could follow them, and there was such tremendous taxes; and I thought I would change party for a change.
(See further the testimony of this witness at length, the testimony of C. Crockett, (colored,) and others.)

THE OUTLAW HORTON.

THE OUTLAW HORTON.

Some time after the election in November last, a drunken desperado named Horton came to the city of Natchitoches from Texas, and was reported to have given out that his business was to kill negroes and radicals, and to have threatened the lives of several leading republicans. These reports, in various forms of rumor, have doubtless farnished the foundation for many of the alleged threats of violence, detailed on hearsay and without specification as to time, which have been used to give color to the charge of intimidation as applied to the conduct of the late political campaign in this parish, although they all transpired after its close. The career of Horton was happily brief, and ended in his killing, instead of negroes and radicals, an estimable and prominente titizen, Mr. Garzia, a democrat, who was protecting a negro from violence at his hands, and wounding another citizen, also a democrat; he (Horton) being shot and killed by a party of citizens endeavoring to capture him against his armed resistance. (See testimony of Messrs. Breda, Simmons, Isenac, and Pearson.)

NEGRO TENANTS EVICTED.

It was attempted to be shown on the part of the republicans that three colored republicans were turned out of houses occupied by them, after the election, for having voted the republican ticket; probably that intimidation before the election might be inferred. The testimony of Joseph Ross, one of these tenants, does not show that the question of voting entered at all into the transaction with him one way or the other. The cases of Jack Culpepper and Joseph Worsley, as sworn to by them, are fully explained, and the allegation rebutted by the testimony of H. McKenner and W. H. Jack, respectively. Neither of these cases occurred in ward 5 or 6, and in neither were any threats or interference before the election pretended.

THE COMMITTEE'S CONCLUSIONS.

The testimony of the witnesses examined, with very few exceptions, was candidly and intelligently given, and, as a whole, fails to show any improper influence or practice regarding the conduct of the campaign on the part of the democrats; but, on the centrary, clearly shows that they acted throughout upon a line of policy adopted and pursued to preclude the possibility of any ground for again throwing out the votes of any of the polls of the parish. They designed to prevent, if possible, any act or occurrence that could give the least excuse, under the law or otherwise, for rejecting their votes; and it is matter of surprise that, in a district where the criminal laws have been so feebly administered, or rather almost totally unexecuted, they attained so complete success.

Mr. R. E. Burke, an intelligent merchant, a resident of the parish for over thirty years, a member of the democratic executive committee, and of the democratic campaign committee of the parish, stated, in his testimony, the policy adopted by his party for the campaign as follows:

"They [the democrats] were perfectly determined here to have a fair, free, and peaceable election, and in no case should intimidation be exercised on the part of any person toward any man, nor should any democrat intimidate or improperly influence any man, but we would use all proper and fair means, canvass the parish, make speeches, and give barbecues, as usual. It was our policy to avoid even the semblance of intimidation, and we not only adopted that policy but we carried it out. We knew we had a returning board in the State, who, upon the charge of intimidation and violence, threw out whole parishes, as we had experienced in our State. It became necessary not to give them the least excuse, but to make so clear a case that no honest republican but what must see it was a fair election, and therefore we became more cautious, probably, than any community at the North would have been, because we knew that the semblance of intimidation would throw out our parish, and we determined no such thing should happen."

Mr. W. H. Jack and Mr. David Pearson, prominent lawyers and democratic leaders in the parish, corroborated this statement, and the testimony shows that the purpose intended was completely attained. Not only was there no intimidation or improper influence proved, but the campaign and the election, both as to registration and voting, was shown to have been absolutely fair, free, peaceable, and in all respects properly conducted. And while this is true as to the parish generally, it is especially so as to the rejected wards 5 and 6. Against the entire fairness and freedom of the campaign in those wards on the part of the democratic and of the election as there conducted, not the shadow of a shade of proof exists in the testimony taken before the committee nor in any other quarter. The reasons for the rejection of their votes must be sought in the figures showing the democratic majority given by them.

The action of the returning board, as to these two polls, disfranchised 343 legal voters, and annihilated, without cause or excuse, and to subserve a purpose entirely indefensible, the democratic majority of 336 given in the two wards.

Extracts from testimony.

The two parish clerks of registration examined by the committee, Messrs, John La Place ad T. J. Bolt, testified substantially that they attended the registration in all parts of the parish; that is was fair, quiet, and peaceable; there was no intimidation; that they talked with the supervisor of registration, who expressed himself pleased with the manner in which the election had passed; said it had been fair, and that he made no protest. (See their testimony at length.)

R. W. FREEMAN, commissioner of election, ward 5, examined by Mr. HOUSE:

R. W. FREEMAN, commissioner of election, ward 5, examined by Mr. House:
Question. What sort of an election had you there?
Answer. Thoroughly fair, as far as I could judge; peaceable; no disturbance.
Q. Anybody interfered with in their right to vote?
A. None that I heard of.
Q. White and colored people allowed to vote as they liked?
A. Yes, sir; and they all mingled and came up together.
Q. Was there any intimidation that you witnessed that day?
A. None that I witnessed.

T. L. Motley, commissioner, same ward, by Mr. House:

T. L. Motley, commissioner, same ward, by Mr. House:
Question. Who was the republican commissioner there?
Answer. Mr. Ezenac.
Q. Did he say anything about the election?
A. That it was quiet as he ever witnessed. Signed the returns with the other commissioners. Heard no complaint on his part.
Q. Do you know of any intimidation up there practiced?
A. None at all.
Q. How was it during registration?
A. All peaceful, sir.
Q. Do you know of any intimidation in ward 5 of the colored voters?
A. No, sir; I have heard no complaint about it; don't know of any men being interfered with, white or colored, in ward 5 in their right to vote as they pleased. Silas Crump, bailiff, ward 5:

Attended the election from early in the morning till the votes were counted. It was quiet and peaceable. No disturbance, Did not see anybody interfere with any one in their right to vote.

A. H. Bristow, republican commissioner of election, ward 6, (in substance:)
The election was fair and peaceable—carried on fair and square. Offered to make affidavit to that effect. Signed the returns with the other commissioners without any protest or objection.

A. V. Carter, United States supervisor and commissioner of election, ward 6:

Was at the election from half past nine in the morning all through. Did not know of any republicans being prevented from voting. Had no trouble. Is a peaceable neighborhood. Quiet reigned. There is a perfectly good feeling between the white and colored people up there.

Z. Washburn:

Live in ward 5. Was there at the election. Saw no disorder at all. Everybody voted as they pleased, white and colored. Everything was peaceable and quiet during the registration as far as I know. Heard nothing to the contrary. The colored republicans voted the ticket openly; held it up and showed it when they voted it. I remember seeing a colored man with republican tickets in his hand electioneering openly for his side that day; held them out to most of the colored men. His name was Charley Connelly.

Charles Crockett, colored:

Charles Crockett, colored:

Live in ward 6. Voted there at last election. Election peaceable and quiet. Nobody interfered with at all while I was there. Everybody allowed to vote as they pleased during the time I was there. I voted the democratic ticket. Other colored fellow-citizens and acquaintances voted the democratic ticket. They said they done it freely. I never seed any one force them to vote.

Q. Was there in the parish such a condition of things as to compel the colored people to vote the democratic ticket, and were they afraid to vote the republican ticket?

A. No, sir; there was not anything like that.

(And see the whole body of the testimony, the above being only a small portion of that relating to the two rejected wards.)

(And see the whole body of the testimony, the above being only a small portion of that relating to the two rejected wards.)

In closing this branch of their report, the committee direct attention to the testimony of A. H. Basto, a republican witness, who acted as one of the commissioners of election in ward 6, and afterward went to New Orleans and made an ex parte deposition, which was appended to the Sherman report, and contains, we believe, the most important item of so-called proof accompanying that memorable document relating to either of the two rejected wards in Natchitoches Parish.

In that deposition the witness is made to say, in reference to this parish:
"Since 1874 a system of intimidation has been inaugurated by the democrats against the republicans, which was continued during the last registration and since, and that there is a sense of insecurity and a feeling of apprehension existing among republicans that prevents them from expressing their will at the ballot-box, causing many to vote the democratic ticket and many others not to vote at all; that it is matter of public notoriety that the republican leaders have been openly threatened with the loss of their lives, and the consequence of this and other threats deterred many republicans from exercising the right of suffrago; that at the poll in ward 6, where he was, only five republican votes were polled; whereas, if a free, fair, and full election could have been had, there would not have been less than thirty or forty republican votes at said poll," &c.

Upon his full and open examination before this committee the witness aid, substantially, as to much of his deposition as published by the Sherman committee, either that he did not make the statements therein set forth, or that they were nutrue, or were given, not upon knowledge, but upon the merest rumor. And as to that part relating to ward 6, where he attended and acted as one of the commissioners of election, he swears emphatically, "I did not hear that read. I did not say so;" that the electi that he knew of no intimidation; that he offered to make an affidavit to that effect at the close of the poll; and that he signed the returns with the other commissioners, without protest or objection.

The committee will not follow at greater length the testimony of this witness, as illustrating the character of his New Orleans deposition; but they call special attention to it in that connection. It should be read carefully and in full by any one desirous of arriving at correct conclusions on the important questions involved. It shows how falsehood and fraud have been evoked and bugbears manufactured to distract the attention and affright the soler sense of the nation; how vast clouds of wrong and intimidation have been made to hang, dark and portentous, in the distance, which, when approached and examined, vanish at the touch of truth like mist before the sunbeam. It discloses, too, some of the means and workings of a wicked and shameless conspiracy to cheat or rob the people, by any means of fraud or force, of their highest right—that to choose their chief executive servants by the majority of their rightful and honest votes.

DE SOTO PARISH.

The investigation in this parish was directed chiefly to the polls thrown out by Polls.	Hayes and Wheeler electors.	Tilden and Hen- dricks electors.

It will thus be seen that in the five excluded polls the republican presidential ticket received 181 votes, and the democratic presidential ticket received 692 votes, making a democratic majority of 511 at the said five polls. The ground on which this vote was excluded by the board is left, more or less, to conjecture, as the board deliberated in secret session, and have never given to the people of Louisiana or the country the reasons for their action or the process by which they reached their conclusions in throwing out or refusing to count votes which were cast by the citizens of the State in the last presidential election. Among the papers, copies of which were furnished the committee by the returning board, relating to this parish are two sworn statements or protests made by C. L. Ferguson, supervisor of registration for said parish, one dated November 17, 1876, which seems to have been made at Shreveport, Caddo Parish, Louisiana, and the other dated November 25, 1876, which seems to have been made in the city of New Orleans.

Under the election law of Louisiana which creates the returning board, and from which it derives its powers, if, "during the time of registration or revision of registration," there should be any riot, tunnult, acts of violence, intimidation, disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any place within the parish, which prevented or tended to prevent a full, fair, and free registration, it is made the duty of the supervisor of registration to make in duplicate, under oath, a clear and full statement of all the facts relating thereto, and the effect produced thereby, in preventing a fair and peaceable registration, and this statement must be corroborated under oath by three respectable citizens, who are qualified electors of the parish. One of these statements is to be annexed by the supervisor of registration to his returns of elections by paste, wax, or some adhesive substance, that the same may be kept together and sent with the returns to the returning board, together with the the supervisor's sworn statement or protest. (See act No. 98, 1872, sections 26 and 43.)

Whenever the returning board receives such sworn statement from the supervisor of registration or disturbances, riots, &c., during the period of registration or revision of registration, or from the commissioners of election, of like improper conduct on the day of election, if they are of opinion from the evidence of such statement from the supervisor of registration that the case merits investigation, they shall examine further testimony, and if they are convinced after such examination that such a state of things existed in the parish as prevented a sufficient number of persons from registering to materially change the result of the election, then they are to exclude the vote where such improper influences existed from the returns. If the sworn statement is made by the commissioners of election as to such violence, &c., on the day of election, they shall proceed in all respects to investigate the same, as in case of the sworn statement of the supervisor of registration; and if they are of opinion, after such investigation, that a sufficient number of persons were prevented from voting, or voted corruptly, to materially change the result of the election, they are to exclude from the count the vote of the poll where the same occurred. (See act No. 98, 1872, section 3.)

It will thus be seen that the right or power of the returning board to enter into any investigation whatever of the validity of any votes cast at an election depends on the receipt of a sworn statement made out by the supervisor or the commissioners of election, as the case may be, in the manner prescribed by law. Without such sworn statement, they cannot proceed one inch in the direction. It is the basis, a sine qua non, of their jurisdiction in the premises.

As has been seen, the supervisor of registration is authorized by law to file his sworn statement or protest only as to what took place on the day of election are empowered to file their protest only poll in the parish on the day of election, and cannot, therefore, be supposed to know what takes place at each poll, nor are the commissioners of election presumed to know what takes place in the entire parish during the period of registration; but each is supposed to know what occurs under his observation while engaged in the field of duty to which the law assigns him, and hence, if any of the improper things mentioned in the statute takes place within the territory which the law appoints him to guard, it is made his duty to communicate the same under coath to the proper authorities.

There was not a protest or sworn statement made by the commissioners of election as to anything improper at any poll in the parish on the day of election. The returning board therefore had no right or power to throw out a single vote in the parish for anything that may have occurred on the day of election. The returning board therefore had no right or power to throw out a single vote in the parish for anything that may have occurred on the day of election. The returning board therefore had no right or power to throw out a single vote in the parish for anything that may have occurred on the day of election. The returning board therefore had no right or power to throw out a single vote in the parish for anything that had had read to a sufficient number of persons from registering to materially change the result of the election.

In the sworn statement made by Furguson, after he reached New Orleans, to wit, on the 25th of November, he says that there was ageneral system of intimidation prevailing in De Soto Parish during the period of registration, and that he feared and had reason to believe he was in danger of assassination during the whole time; that there was one place in the parish—Logansport—to which he was a fraid to go to register voters. It is a noteworthy fact that in the sworn statement or protest made at Shreveport, on his way to New Orleans, to wit, on the 17th November, the fear and danger of assassination while perfor absence of any protest from the commissioners of election, how would the case then stand.

It is shown by the testimony of W. C. Reynolds, the clerk, that Furguson filed no sworn statement or protest whatever in his office, as the law requires should be done. This requirement of the law cannot be dispensed with. He must file a copy of his protest with the clerk, so that the people of the parish may know that their election is to be assailed before the returning board and the ground upon which it is to be attacked, and no better illustration of the necessity of such a requirement of the law can be found than is furnished by the facts proven in this case. Furguson, before leaving the parish for Shreveport and New Orleans, where his protest seems to have been made, told various persons in the parish that it was as fair and peaceable an election as he had ever witnessed in his life, and in order to satisfy the people of the parish (who had felt the heavy hand of the returning board upon them in former elections) that there was no objection or complaint on his part, he made a sworn statement to that effect before the clerk of the court and left it in the parish. The first intimation that the people of the parish had that any protest had been filed by Furguson was on the 26th or 27th of November, when Mr. Sutherlin, one of the leading citizens of the parish, who was in New Orleans, heard of the protest, and procured a copy of it. It was then about time for the returning board to act, and the citizens of the parish had, therefore, no time for proteinity to meet the charges against their election or to refute them. Judgment by default was taken against them without any service of process ever having been made upon them, or witbout their having had a day in court. There is no court in the world that would not, without hesitation, annul any judgment so obtained, even against the humblest citizen for the smallest sum. But waiving this point also, how do the facts of the case stand?

Poll No. 1 .- Keatchie.

Furguson swears in reference to this poll that he is credibly informed that bribery and other corrupt influences were used by the democrats to obtain votes; that threats of violence, bodily harm, loss of property, discharge from employment, and other illegal means were constantly used by white democrats of the parish to influence voters or to deter them from voting.

An ex parte affidavit of one Peter Coleman was placed before the returning board to the effect that he cropped on shares with Mr. Shaw; that Shaw, just before the election, tore up his registration papers and drove him off from his place, and would not allow him to return to gather his crops.

Philip Stark, whose evidence was taken by the committee, swears in an affidavit before the returning board, and also in his testimony before the committee, that he was living with William Carlton, and just before the election Carlton discharged him because he was a republican, and would not let him have his portion of the crop.

Major Blackshear makes an affidavit to go before the returning board to the effect that Mr. Gatlin, on whose land he lived, threatened colored men that they could not live on his place if they voted the republican ticket; that at poll 1, Keatchie, the democrats were favored and allowed to vote without delay, while the republicans were hindered and obstructed in voting; that he, Blackshear, voted the republican ticket, and Gatlin drove him off under a threat to kill him if he remained; that republican negroes were openly threatened at poll 1 if they voted the republican ticket.

Furguson, in his protest, says, in reference to this poll, that on the day of election large numbers of republican colored voters were forcibly and by threats of pecuniary and bodily harm forced and driven from the polls to the number of as least 109, and were thus prevented from voting the republican ticket. There it no evidence before the committee to sustain this charge, but, on the contrary, the evidence showing its falsity is abundant. One D. S. Tyler, colored, made an exparte affidavit before the returning board that 150 colored voters were driven away from poll 3, and not allowed to vote, and that one Prude kicked and threatened Peter Johnson, a colored voter. Robert Murphy swears that he knows D. S. Tyler, and that he was not at the election at poll 3 at all during any part of the day; that his statement about Prude kicking Johnson is wholly untrue; that nothing of that sort occurred during the day; that there were only two men by the name of Prude there, and they were both commissioners of election, and engaged during the day in their duties; says there was not a single colored man driven from the polls; says some went voluntarily to Mansfield, saying they thought they could vote sooner there, owing to the crowd at poll 3; all could have voted there, and those that went away were in no wise threatened, but went away in good humor and of their own accord, thinking they could vote sooner in Mansfield; everything was peaceable, quiet, and fair; no threat, no intimidation, or disturbance of any kind during the whole day; no colored men discharged after election for voting republican ticket, and no colored men forced to vote democratic ticket. Tyler once lived with witness; witness taught him to read; he is a tricky fellow; would not believe him on oath.

A 1 Leak was present and voted at poll 3. The election was quiet, peaceable, and fair; no threats or intimidation. Furguson's protest read to witness, and he denied the truth of it in toto. Not a colored man was threatened or driven away or denied the right to vo'e during the entire day. All were encouraged to vote, both white and black. Witness was present the entire day. Fifteen men were appointed to keep order, and not a cross word was spoken during the entire day by black or white. When the polls opened the colored people were given the privilege of voting first. There were 45 colored votes polled before a single white man voted. The colored men crowded each other so that they could not vote with any order, and some of them in consequence swore they would go to Mansfield; this was because they were crowding each other at the box and not in consequence of any threat or intimidation by white democra's. All could easily have voted if they had been patient. There was plenty of time for every one to vote. Witness says that on Sunday night after the election he had a conversation with Furguson, the supervisor of registration, in which he stated to witness that the election in De Soto Parish was the fairest he had ever seen held. The whites are in a majority at this poll, and it is a democratic poll and has so gone in former elections.

Ralph Walker (colored) testified that he voted the republicant ticket the would see if he couldn't find some law to get him off his farm. The colored man did not vote. Numbers of colored men voted the republicant ticket the would see if he couldn't find some law to get him off his farm. The colored man did not vote. ### Poll 5 .- Fortsen's Church.

Furguson states, in his protest as to this poll, that it was not opened until 9 o'clock; that when it was opened the white democrats crowded around, and would not let colored republicans vote until all the white men had voted; that threats and intimidations were constantly, violently, and persistently used during the entire day by white democrats toward colored republicans to deter them from voting the ticket of their choice.

Campbell, who was a commissioner of election at poll 5, swears that Furguson's starements are all wholly untrue; that the polls were opened about six o'cl. ck in the morning; that the white men did not crowd around the polls and prevent colored men from voting; that, in point of fact, the colored men voted first; says the vacancy in the commissioners was filled by the first man that came, who was a democrat, as the time had arrived for opening the polls—there was no republican who could read or write to fill the place; says there were no threats, intimidation, or violence of any kind—the election was fair, peaceable, and quiet, and Furguson's whole statement on this point is untrue. The affidavits of ticorge Hall and Jack Edwards were read to witness; he says the statements therein contained are wholly untrue; says the box was placed in full view of voters; denies that twelve or thirteen colored men were illegally deprived of the right to vote; says some four or five who had not proper papers were not allowed to vote. The witness denies, in short, the entire statement contained in said affidavits.

Poll 7 .- Dewlett's Spring.

Furguson, in his protest, says, in reference to this poll, that during the day of election the poll was surrounded by armed men, who constantly told colored men if they voted the republican ticket they would have to leave the parish; that those who did vote the republican ticket had their names taken down, and were told they were marked men, and that, in consequence, many colored men were deterred from voting as they desired.

Samuel Thigpen testified that he was United States supervisor of election at poll 7; was there all day, and it was the most peaceable and quiet election he ever saw; no armed men; no threats; no disturbance of any kind, and no complaint from any quarter of any such thing. There were no armed men nor anything like intimidation during the whole day. The commissioners were very strict in keeping order. Colored men voted—some republican, some democratic ticket—just as they wished, without any interference.

Albert Flores (colored) was constable at poll 7; was there all day; no armed men; no intimidation or threats, but everything peaceable and quiet; no one was interfered with.

H. K. Davis testified that he was a commissioner of election at poll 7. There were no armed men, and no disturbance or intimidation of any kind; all was fair, peaceable, and quiet. Furguson, the supervisor, boarded at the witness's house a while during the registration. He made no complaint of any one interfering with him, and no one did interfere with him.

Q. T. Howard testified that he was also a commissioner at poll 7. He fully corroborates H. K. Davis. Furguson's statement was read to witness; he pronounced it wholly false.

There is no excuse for disfranchising the 160 voters at this poll.

Poll 8 .- Logansport.

Furguson says in his protest, in reference to this poll, that it was surrounded during the day by armed men; that colored voters were driven away by force of arms from the polls, and that no one was allowed to vote the republican tichet at said poll during the day; that liquor was epenly and constantly used around the polls during the day; that liquor was epenly and constantly used around the polls during the day; that liquor was epenly and constantly used around the polls during the day; that a majority around the polls were drunk, and the grossest acts of violence were onenly threatened against republican voters who at tempted to approach the polls, and they were thus deterred from voting.

A. M. Garrett testified that he was a commissioner of election at polls, Logansport. He denies most emphatically the whole of Furguson's statement; says there was no violence; no one was threatened or driven from the polls; that all who offered to vote, white and colored, did so; there were no armed men around the polls, and no persons intoxicated. Witness is the only merchant in the place, and the only person who has liquor for sale there, and he sold none during the day; the crowd was sober and orderly, and there was no intimidation, disorder, or disturbance of any kind. The election was fair, free, and peaceable.

R. M. Nash testifies that he was present at this poll at the last election. There were no armed men there, no drunken men, no intimidation, no threatening; it was the most quiet election witness ever saw; it was perfectly fair and peaceable. The poll has always gone democratic.

There is no evidence before the committee that furnishes a decent pretext for excluding this poll. Fifty-four votes were cast at this poll, which should be counted. The colored republicans of this ward voted at poll 1, as explained by the testimony of Coulter and Henderson, heretofore referred to. Upon the whole, the committee conclude that all the votes excluded by the returning board in De Soto Parish were illegally and improperly th

VERNON.

This subcommittee left New Orleans before any public information had been received as to any votes having been thrown out or changed in this parish by the returning board. Indeed, the chairman of this committee received from Mr. Anderson, one of the returning board, a statement, which he now retains, in the handwriting of said Anderson, showing, among other things, that no changes whatever had been made by the returning board in the original returns received from this parish of Vernon. It may be added that this statement was made out in the presence of Mr. Wells, president of said board. This parish is remote from public thoroughfares, and most inaccessible of any in the State. A rumor to the effect that certain changes had in fact been made in the returns from this parish by the returning board induced your committee to send for, among others, the clerk of the district court of that parish, the supervisor of registration, as well as the clerk of the supervisor of registration. Of course the committee, being entirely in the dark as to what steps had really been taken by the returning board, had to proceed in a most general way with the investigation here, and especially so as the people of the parish apparently had not the slightest suspicion of any grounds of compilant which might be alleged against them to justify the alteration or rejection of votes at any poll.

parish apparently had not the slightest suspicion of any grounds of complaint which might be alleged against them to justify the alteration or rejection of votes at any poll.

Thomas Franklin, supervisor of registration, a venerable gentleman, testified that he made out compiled statements in duplicate, one of which he furnished the returning board, and the other the clerk of the court, and that he made no protest whatever, and that no protests or remarks, criticisms or objections, were made by the commissioners of the election at the several polls in the parish. He has spent a life-time there, and is well acquainted with the people of the parish, and testified that throughout the registration and the election everything was peaceable, and that no intimidation or bribery was thought of, and that it was impossible to oppress a 'y colored republicans, for the reason that there were none in the parish, that only two republican votes were cast in the parish for the electoral ticket, and that they were deposited at poll 8, while 617 were cast for the democratic electoral ticket. There were about seventy-five or eighty colored voters in the parish who lived on terms of substantial equality with the whites, and had always voted, since their enfranchisement, the democratic ticket. The witness also testified that the consolidated statement produced by the clerk is the duplicate, and an exact one, of the one sent to the returning board, and that he swore to the same before the deputy clerk of the parish.

John Franklin, a clerk to Thomas Franklin, supervisor, had assisted the latter in making up the compiled statement last fall. There were only two republican votes on the electoral ticket in that parish. Was not aware that it had ever occurred before that republican votes had been cast there. The election was entirely peaceable and quiet. That the vote has always been democratic, whites and blacks voting one way.

Isaac O. Winfrey, clerk to the district court of Vernon Parish, produced the returns of the commissioners of clectoral ticket; and that no informalities appeared on the returns of the commissioners of election.

After these witnesses from Vernon Parish had returned to their homes, this committee received through the general committee at New Orleans copies of three affidavits, purporting to have been filed with the returning board some time about the 14th day of November, 1876, signed respectively by Sam Collins, Tom Brown, and Sam Carter, each with his mark, and claiming that an undue influence or intimidation had been practiced toward colored republicans at polls 1, 7, and 10 in this parish.

dation had been practiced toward colored republicans at polls 1, 7, and 10 in this parish.

Each of these affiants disclaimed being a registered voter of the parish. Sam Carter admits to have been a resident of Saint Augustine, in the State of Texas. The other two claim they are residents only of the parish of Vernon, without specifying any particular poll or ward.

Your committee have since the receipt of these affidavits diligently endeavored to obtain information respecting the makers of the same, but without avail, and the suspicion is obtained that they have no actual existence.

The affidavits referred to purport to have been made before D. J. N. A. Jewett, the United States commissioner at New Orleans. They were made apparently three days before the returns from Vernon were received at New Orleans, having been made on the 14th. and the returns received on the 17th.

Commissioner Jewett, upon being examined by the committee at New Orleans, testified that he had no recollection whatever of ever having heard of either of the affiants; and Wells, of the returning board, stated also before said committee that he did not know the affiants, and furthermore did not know who presented the affidavits to the board. It is on such flimsy pretense as this that the returning board absolutely transferred one hundred and seventy-nine votes cast for the democratic candidates over to, and in favor of, the republican candidates, making a difference altogether of three hundred and fifty-eight votes in favor of the republican ticket, to wit:

altogether of three numero and may eight to wit:

Poll 1: 116 democratic transferred to 116 republican.
Poll 10: 37 democratic transferred to 26 republican.
Poll 10: 37 democratic transferred to 37 republican.
Taking altogether the circumstances relating to this parish, the conclusion is irresistible that a fraud which admits of no excuse or palliation whatever was premeditatively perpetrated by the returning board in the change it made.

That such change was not necessary for the purpose of deciding the question of presidential electors is apparent; but we find that certain members of the Legislature, and other local officers, could only be declared elected by the assistance of this change or transposition.

IN CONCLUSION.

This committee respectfully submits the following memorandum of findings, based upon the law of Louisiana:

That wherein technical irregularities occurred (and in no case were irregularities more than technical in their character) they were only respecting declaratory portions of election laws, and not of themselves ground for the extraordinary action of the returning board in rejecting entire polls.

That such action of the returning board, as well as the conduct of supervisors of registration, (when entering protests,) taken in connection with corroboratory circumstances produced before this committee, exhibit such bias and unfairness as to justify the judgment that they, in concert with others of their party association, had entered into a conspiracy to deprive the people of Louisiana of their just rights of representation in the State and nation.

Respectfully submitted.

To the Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, Chairman of the House Special Committee on the Louisiana Election:

To the Hon. William R. Morrison,

Chairman of the House Special Committee on the Louisiana Election:

The subcommittee appointed to investigate the subject-matter of the resolution of the House of Representatives, at New Oreans, respectfully report:

That in the parish of Orleans the statements of commissioners of election at three polls were not embraced in the consolidated statements of supervisors of registration, which are required by law to be returned to the returning board, to wit:

Poll 6, in the second ward, at which 83 votes were cast for the republican presidential electors; and 250 votes for the democratic presidential electors; and Poll 3, in the seventh ward, at which 160 votes were cast for the republican presidential electors; and 413 for the democratic electors, amounting, in the aggregate, to 1,233 votes in the city of New Orleans alone, thrown out by the supervisors in violation of law and upon the most trivial pretexts.

At the first-named poll the commissioners certify that the election was free, fair, and peaceable. In their statement it was uncertain whether De Blano, one of the democratic electors, had received 249 or 247 votes, but by reference to the swear tally list which accompanied the statement it was found to be 249.

This slight uncertainty, resulting from the similarity of structure of the figures 9 and 7, is the principal pretense upon which the supervisor assumed arbitrarily to disfranchise 333 legal voters; and the returning board, although the matter was brought to their attention, failed to include them in their official compilation.

The third poll in the seventh warn was excluded by the supervisor from his consolidated statement on the ground that the commissioners' statements and accompanying papers were not handed in within twenty-four hours after the closing of the polls. Our investigation as to this matter clicited the following facts:

One Moore was supervisor of registration for this ward. He was also a candidate on the republican ticket for the legislature. On the cept the one alleged; and the returning board publicly announced, through its president, that the failure to return within twenty-four hours was not sufficient ground for refusing a poll, yet in their secret compilation this poll was not included.

Poll 2, in the eleventh ward, was also excluded by the supervisor, and not compiled by the returning board. It was known this poll would give a large demo-cratic majority, as in its vicinity many of the leading business men lived, and much of the wealth of the city was found. At the close of the poll all the officers of election made affidavit that the election was fair, peaceful, and orderly, and all signed and swore to the correctness of the taily sheets. They then proceeded to make out the statement of votes, which was fully completed by and in the presence and under the direction of all the commissioners, without complaint or difficulty, except that the republican commissioners, Hearsey and Kempton, from time to time desired to suspend and delay the count, while the democratic commissioners is accounted for by one of the witnesses, Lawrence King, who states that he heard Judge Dibble, assistant at torney, general, and candidate for Congress, instruct the republican commissioners of election, on the night before the election, to detain the voting at white polls and to count the back of town polls (where the colored republicans generally voted) as fast as possible, and that his instructions were fully carried out by Herrsey and Kempton.

After the statement had been fully compiled and agreed upon by the commissioners, they proceeded to the office of the supervisor of registration, one Lewis Backers, with whom the republican commissioners conferred a short time, after which they refused to swear to the statement of votes. The stement was then a reason for not completing the poll that he believed the returns had been tampered with, and he signed them through four and intimidation. Kempton is a fugitive from justice, and is fully contradicted, both by his own signatur kept open for more than from three to five months in the year, and teachers to whom sufficient salaries were paid were allowed to subtlet the schools and employ received. As a consequence, persons utterfy disgualified were generally placed in charge of them. The ischool officers of the parishes, appointed by a contral State board under he outfool frepublican publiclasm, were, in many cases, unscrupations. In this connection, we direct attention to the case of David Young, treasure of the parish of Concordia, who add been indirected for the embergiance of over thirty heading colored people of the parish to assist in his prosecution, and, after full examination of the case, they became satisfied of his guilt. When the case was called the protest of the private counsel, and, when he was asked for an explanation, he produced as his authority a telegram from Governor Kellog directing it. Young was a State senater, and it was believed by any according to the private of the republican party produced some disturbance, and at one poll in the parish of Madison, where the ballot-box was stolen, there was no violence or irregularity sufficient to make a basis for any complaint of commissioners of riots or intimidation. There had been no disturbances before the election to interfere with the registration or revision of registration, and there were no protests filed, except in the cases above mentioned, with the clerks of the district courts. By some means a number of supervisors of registration instead of mailing their returns within twenty-fourhours, as required by law, were induced to retain them in their possession and carry them in person to New Orleans. And after the result of the election was known they there prepared protests, and filed them with the returning board, in relation to outrages which never occurred. These so-called protests were not filed with the clerks of the courts, and were not, therefore, in accordance with law. In one instance, that of East Baton Ronge, the supervisor neglected to enter his remarks, as the law directs, upon his consolidated statement when he swore to it and filed it with the clerk. Upon his arrival in the city he attempted to repair his negligence by interpolating his comments after the jurat, thus giving to them the apparent force of a sworn statement.

The manner in which the testimony to sustain these protests was gotten up is sufficient to discredit them. They were prepared in New Orleans under the supervision and direction of one J. B. Harris, at the request of Packard, the republican candidate for governor.

vision and direction of one J. B. Harris, at the request of Packard, the republican candidate for governor.

O. B. Morgan, a witness before your subcommittee, testified that he was present in the custom-house when affidavits were made, and knew of an instance where answers to cross-interrogatories were struck out by order of Harris, and other answers put in. This was in the case of Mr. Simms, of Livingston Parish. Harris said the answers wouldn't do, and then the interlineations were made; the alterations gave it a different character. That Mr. Simms, in his original affidavit, said nothing in regard to intimidation of negroes, and that White's house was burned for the killing of cattle or beef-stealing; that he was present when Vrisenski made his affidavit; that Mr. Weber, supervisor of West Feliciana, questioned him, and the answers didn't seem to suit Weber, and heard Webersay afterward to let it alone that way and they could fix it afterward; that he heard Kellogg ask Drury, of Assumption, as to the prospects there; Drury told him that the democrats would probably carry it, whereupon Kellogg told him he had better have his affidavits ready, then.

Not only were these affidavits given a false coloring, amounting often to an entire perversion of meaning, but the persons making or pretending to make them were not generally known, and their identity not proven to the officers administering the oath. In the examination of F. A. Woolfey, a United States commissioner, who administered the oath in most of the cases, instances were cited from the Sherman report of affidavits sworn to before him, and he frankly admitted that he did not know the persons who made them, and he frankly admitted that he did not know the persons who made them, and he reakly admitted that he did not know the persons who made them, and he reakly admitted that he

Another subject to which we directed our inquiries was the relative white and black population and registration of the State. An erroneous impression has prevailed in regard to this matter, based upon a State census of 1875, which was proven by evidence and statistical facts to be incorrect. It was further shown that the number of colored voters claimed to have been compiled from official sources was, in fact, unofficial, grossly excessive, and prepared by one D. I. M. A. Jewett, a local partisan, for party purposes. We invite special attention to the evidence of Professor S. E. Chaillé, M. D., and Major E. A. Burke, who have given to this subject a careful investigation, and whose conclusions, in our opinion, will be found to be correct.

MINORITY REPORT.

MINORITY REPORT.

The undersigned, a minority of the committee to inquire into the recent election in Louisiana, beg leave to report the following as the result to which they have come from their examination of the subject committed to them:

The history of Louisiana since reconstruction is that of a struggle on the part of a majority of the lawful voters, acting under all the known forms of law, against secret organizations acting in known violation of law, by force, violence, and intimidation, halting at no enormity of crime, shrinking from no deliberate cruelty, and avowing with sufficient plainness of speech, and by still more significant acts, their determination to suppress the existing majority, and to substitute the rule of violence and force in the place of peaceful submission to the will of that majority.

The original outbreak and development of this criminal conspiracy occurred in 1868, under the malign auspices of an organization known as Knights of the White Camelia. Their history and modes of operation are fully detailed in the report of the committee appointed in 1868 by the Legislature of Louisiana, and also by the report of what is known as the Stevenson committee of the House of Representatives of the United States in 1869.

From both these sources it is apparent that this society had its ritual, constitution, and purposes; that it was secret and oath-bound; that it was limited in its membership to persons sympathizing with its evil purpose; that it was military in organization, demanded implicit and blind obedience from its members, and had branches in nearly all of the parishes in Louisians.

It further appears from the report of the Stephenson committee that this secret political organization fulfilled its purpose by creating a general and wide-spread ierror throughout the State agreed, by resolutions and by club organizations, to proscribe such persons as chose to vote against the democratic ticket by refusing to such persons employment and countenance in business.

It further appears fro or, 1868. In the parish of Saint Landry, commencing on the 28th of September and extend-og over more than three days, in which more than three hundred colored people

In the parish of Bossier, between the 20th and 30th of September, a similar masacre, including among its victims nearly an equal number.

In the parish of Caddo, in the month of October, more than forty colored people rere killed.

were killed.

In the parish of Jefferson, in the same month, an equal number.

In the parish of Saint Bernard, in the same month, more than one hundred persons were killed under circumstances of peculiar atrocity.

In the parish of Orleans, two attacks were made upon republican processions in the public streets, and about sixty persons were killed.

In the parish of Saint Mary's, in the same month, the sheriff and parish judge, both republicans, were assassinated in their own houses by a force of armed men. Other similar demonstrations were made in other parishes, amounting in all to thirty-five, as fully appears by the evidence in the said legislative and congressional reports.

Certainly not less than one thousand persons lost their lives during September, October, and November, 1863, by murders committed for political purposes.

The effect of the work done by this criminal league is best shown by the annexed table.

Thus it is shown as clearly as it is possible for human evidence to show that 47,923 republican votes honestly registered (for all men admit that the registration of 1868 was honest) and which had been solidly and fairly cast for the republican candidate for governor in the spring of 1868, when the election was undisturbed, had by November dwindled down to 5,360.

In nine of the above parishes, with a republican vote in the spring of 1868 of 11,604, only 19 were cast for U. S. Grant for President.

In seven of the above parishes, in which in the spring of 1868 there was a republican vote of 7,233, not one vote was cast for U. S. Grant for President.

When we remember that in 1868 the colored voters were not pretended to be divided, and that General Grant had then, as indeed he has now, the strongest personal hold upon their faith and regard, this extraordinary result establishes beyond the possibility of question the domination of an irresistible fear, and that fear brought about solely by the causes above cited.

Still further to establish this conclusion we submit the following table.

The first column shows the vote of the same twenty-cight parishes in 1870, by which it appears that, notwithstanding the effect of the barbarous crimes of 1868 had not wholly disappeared, yet those parishes which in November, 1868, were only permitted to give 5.360 votes for General Grant, did, in 1870, cast for Graham, republican candidate for auditor, 35,010 votes.

The second column shows that these same parishes in 1872 did in fact cast for Kellogg, republican candidate for governor, 36,666 votes.

The third column shows that these same parishes less three of them, thrown out, or no returns received, in 1874 did cast for Dubuclet, for treasurer, 33,518 votes.

So much for the history of the Knights of the White Camelia and their allies, and the malign and disastrous effect produced by these criminal political organizations in 1868. We pass over the election of 1872, in which the displays of force were casual and sporadic, not general and epidemic.

The next outbreak of violentinterference with the freedom of elections and with authorized government occurred in 1874. Not now under the old name of Knights of the White Camelia, but under the bolder assertion by name and title of the "White League".

authorized government occurred in 1874. Not now under the old name of knights of the White League."

The White League, commanded by Fred. N. Ogden, was and is an association consisting entirely of white men, all democrats, and all united for the express purpose of assert ng the supremacy of the white race in political matters and in the charge of government. They are adroitly organized into clubs, whose open and printed constitution is on its face legitimate. But that constitution when dissected shows what its inner purpose is. Certain officers of a civil character are name, all innocent and harmless, but the constitution also provides for the appointment of "such other officers as the president of the club may think proper." and such officers when appointed are to be obeyed and respected, and each member takes an oath to render full obedience to such officers.

Under this clause each of these clubs has a complete military organization; every able-bodied member is regularly enrolled by companies, battalions, brigades, and divisions; all the parapheronalia of staff departments exist; and the whole force, by a system of private signals known only to the initiated, can be paraded, handled, and thrown into order of battle on short notice.

In the testimony taken by Messrs. FOSTER and PHELER, of the House committee, these facts sufficiently appear. The same report contains the congratulatory order of Ogden, chief of the White League, and his official report of the battle of 14th September, 1874, under his assumed and pretended title of major-general of State militia.

From these orders the constitution of the White League as a military political belock is westfest for the constitution of the White League as a military political belock in westfest for the constitution of the White League as a military political belock in westfest for the constitution of the White League as a military political belock in westfest for the constitution of the White League as a military political colors.

In the testimony taken by Messrs. Foster and PHELES, of the House committee, these facts sufficiently appear. The same report contains the congratulatory order of Ogden, chief of the White League, and his official report of the battle of 14th September, 1874, under his assumed and pretended title of major-general of State militia.

Body is manifest, for he names the White League as a military political militia.

Body is manifest, for he names the White League organization, and returns them thanks for their gallantry and courage.

The pretense set up by Mr. Ogden in his testimony that the organization was intended only to defend the white people of New Orleans from danger from the blacks is shown to be shallow and dishonest from the known fact that of the 190,000 population of the city 150,000 are white and not exceeding 40,000 colored, and we will not insult the high reputation for courage of the white clizens of New Orleans by supposing that they suffer under intimidation, when they have in their favor such overwhelming odds of numbers, and with almost sole possession of proper arms. The White League in September, 1874, extended to nearly all the parishes in the State, and acted secretly and solidly as a branch of the democratic party. Three witnesses from country parishes before our committee acknowledged themselves members, and gave as their reason for joining the League that they were in the State, and acted secretly and solidly as a branch of the democratic party. Three witnesses from country parishes before our committee acknowledged themselves members, and gave as their reason for joining the League that they were the service of the schief, Ogden, appeared in heavy force and fighting order on the streets of New Orleans.

Mr. Ogden gives as their excuse that they paraded to secure the delivery of arms which they had purchased and which were threatened with capture by the police. But in the lightof all the facts the pretense is notoriously untrue. This was made the occasion, but it was not the purpose, of and managers.

It was believed by those who were committed to the idea of white supremacy that the democratic party and its managers would pardon, if not appland, any means taken by them to annul the colored republican majority and to override or control the real choice of the majority, by substituting by fraud or force the will of the the real choice of the majority, by substituting by fraud or force the will of the minority.

But it was necessary to keep up some sort of appearance of fairness, and hence an effort was made by democratic candidates and democratic canvassers to conciliate, to cajole, or to buy up the colored vote. Barbecues were prepared at which they took places, by contractand arrangement, white and black alternately. Colored orators, nearly all worn-out and dishonored hacks, who had failed to win or to keep position in the republican ranks, were hired to try and create public sentiment among the negroes in favor of the democratic ticket. Clubs in the democratic interest were formed and colored men entreated, hired, or compelled to join. But behind all this apparently fair machinery of election lay the reserve of force.

By secret circular issued by the chairman of the democratic state committee it was directed that the democrats should move as far as possible in masses; should exhibit their strength, cohesion, and discipline on all possible occasions, so as to impress the mind of the colored voter with a sense of their power and union.

Organizations by different names sprang up in certain parishes, all armed, all secret, all threatening to the general peace and to individual security.

Rifie clubs, coal-oil clans, regulators, and other such titles were hints not to be denied of possible violence; nor were the peaceable colored republicans long left to guess or hesitate over the hints thus first afforded.

A gloomy and perilous certainty developed itself, cruel persecutions commenced; men were chased like beasts, pounced upon at night at home, beaten like dogs with lashes and stripes, shot to death without provocation, hung at the will of these midnight maranders, burned out of honse and home by these prowling emissaries of political faction—all manner of conceivable wrong, all manner of imaginable cruelty, perpetrated on behalf of a party which claims reform as its motto.

Nothing was changed but the local venue of this organized brutality. The methods were the same as before; the wrong-doers of the same stripe; the transparent excuses the same.

cruelty, perpetrated on behalf of a party which claims reform as its motto.

Nothing was changed but the local venue of this organized brutality. The methods were the same as before; the wrong-doers of the same stripe; the transparent excuses the same.

Whatever just fault may have been found with the republican State government of Louisiana—and the main complaint was that the laws were not executed—surely no man can claim that the way to cure a condition of lawlessness was to organize the breakers of law into a compact conspiracy.

This were indeed to "cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils."

The democracy of Louisiana claim that the education, the brains, and the wealth of the State are distinctly on their side.

If this be so, (and there is some reason for the assertion,) then in a government depending for its execution upon the people themselves, in courts, grand and petty juries, the failure to suppress violence and wrong in any locality is simply their own fault; nor could any of these lawless organizations have stood for one day had the white democracy of the State heartily joined the white republicans and the colored republicans in putting them down.

All the testimony taken by all the committees in Louisiana, both of the House and the Senate, concur that these maranders and night-riders were white men and were democrates.

The sufferers by these wrong-doings were republicans; the aim was to dishearten and dismay the republican vote, so that the machinery for the object sought and the object itself were the invention and the aim of the democratic partisans in that State in the late election.

Relying then, as they had a right to rely, upon the effect already produced by the outrages of 1868, 1872, and 1874 upon the general vote of the State and upon the parishes which had been specially cursed by this flagrant wrong, it appears to have been selected principally in that portion of the State which contains the largest colored vote, and is at the same time conveniently near to parishes con

The * denotes thrown out for violence; the † denotes parish not then organized.

The disparity between the number of votes in years when comparative peace prevailed and when intimidation is alleged is simply enormous, and can be accounted for on no fair principle other than that this extraordinary change was brought about by a reign of terror.

Taking into consideration the further fact, proven by the official census, that the total number of white voters in the State is 84.167 and the total colored 101,102, and that by the concurrent testimony of all the witnesses the colored vote is in mass republican, while the white vote is certainly divided, it is impossible to see on what ground the democracy should venture to chaim Louisiana on a fair and free vote.

Your committee do not desire to leave this historical part of their report without stating that from the time of the Mechanics' Institute massacre in 1966 to the present the course of the democracy in asserting itself in that State has been marked all the way down by the defiance of all laws, human and divine, by steady and unflinching resort to violence, murder, and armed revolution, and that the present pretension of Mr. Nicholls to be governor of Louisiana has, in the presence and under the observation of members of this committee, been lifted into position by the same unlawful organization of the White League companies of the city of New Orleans were called into service by that very name and title, were officered by the same men as in 1874, and paraded for battle as they did then.

More than two thousand men answerea to the summons and fell into line of battle with the promptness and accuracy which only drill and experience in arms can give. They were thoroughly and completely armed; were in possession of two pieces of artillery, well manned and under good officers, and their display of effective force was altogether too strong and their purpose too determined to justify resistance on the part of the ordinary police or any other force at the disposal of the lawful authorities of the State.

Thus they captured police stations, halls of the courts, the State armory, and placed the Legislature in an actual state of siege in the State-house. They ousted the supreme court and other judges and put in the appointees of Nicholls; they established their own police, and created the difficult position of a double government, not on paper only, but asserting its rights by force.

And thus we find to-day in this unhappy State the culmination of all the forcible and violent proceedings since 1855 in the usurpation of Nicholls of the governorship without any warrant of law or any legal declaration of election, and that usurpation completed in possession and supported in fact by irregular, illegal, and revolutionary force.

Intionary force.

The official report of Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan shows that from 1865 to the date of that report not less than three thousand political murders had occurred in Louisiana, and the record since that time swells up the aggregate of crime and in Louisiana, and the record since that time swells up the aggregate of crime and violence to appalling proportions.

This development, sorrowful as it is, is to be referred, like all other displays of continuous evil passions, not to temporary and local causes, but to some deep-seated principle pervading a large portion of society.

In the judgment of your committees the moving cause to all this deplorable cruclety is in the deliberate and settled determination of the white people, acting in the name of democracy, not to permit the exercise of political power by the blacks in proportion to their legal vote and numerical strength.

All classes of society are fully impregnated with this idea. The very best most cautions, and most humane express it freely, and denounce the laws and constitutional amendments which give to this inferior and lately enslaved race dominion and position in office, by force of numbers, over them and their property.

A large number again, even of the educated whites, look upon negro citizenship as a badge of humiliation, and a dishonor inflicted upon them by a conquering people as a punishment for the part they took in the rebellion.

Another large body of whites, uneducated, find free negro labor in constant and damaging competition with their own, and have a personal hatred because of their nearness in social relations to this class and the constant collisions of interest.

So violence is the natural result; it is the short, sharp, and sudden method resorted to to overthrow in fact a system repugnant to their pride, prejudice, and passion.

Another large body of whites, uneducated, find free negro labor in constant and amanging competition with their own, and have a personal harted because of their movies more is the natural result; it is the short, map, and sudden method resorted to to overthrow in fact a system repugnant to their pride, prejudice, and passion.

Couple this with the greed for office, for the fat pickings reputed to be attached to offices in Louisiana, and the anxiety common enough everywhere, but most energed there, to live easily and affacently at the public expense instead of recognitive common enough everywhere, but most energed there, to live easily and affacently at the public expense instead of recognitive common enough everywhere, but most operate all the chastly machinery by which the so-called democracy of that unpupy State destroy the freedom of elections and substitute the reign of arms for the reign of law.

But your committee do not choose to leave this part of the case without showing that the peculiar retaires of the election laws of this State are simply the natural Laws always redict the condition of the society for which they are made, and laws for the prevention and punishment of crime necessarily imply the existence of such crime; and thus the special features of the Louisiana statutes to prevent and punish intimidation and violence at elections are the most conclusive evidence of the existence of the evil sought to be corrected.

Or the existence of the evil sought to be corrected.

Or limity, in communities where general education prevails, the details of elections begin in the lunit of political power—in the township, precinct, or smallest legal subdivison.

Judges or commissioners of elections are appointed in such communities, as a rule, legal stations when made are local and confined to small and limited districts—generally to single voting precincts is required, and thus the general knowledge and general education of all the neighborhood is brought to bear to preserve both the purity of registrations wh

The official authority common to inspectors of election, or judges or commissioners, as they are denominated inother States, prevailed also in Louisiana until 1870. These officers were there known as judges or inspectors of elections, and possessed the power of making returns, which power rested, first, on their official authority to receive votes, and then to count them, under which they necessarily exercised the semi-judicial authority or discretion to accept or reject votes, as they deemed them legal or illegal, under certain restraints or limitations prescribed by law.

Further, their returns of election, or rather their official certificates of the result of the voting, which technically are called their returns, became by law prima facie evidence of election.

In consequence of the violent, cruel, and murderous proceedings in the State in 1868, as heretofore detailed, an entirely new system was inaugurated in 1870.

The material features are these: The commissioners of election presiding over the several polls were deprived of both the function and the duty of making final and official counts of the votes, and thus reduced to a mere elerical function. They were also deprived of the power of making any declaration, certificate of election, or return of election vesting any prima facie rights, and simply confined to a statement of votes received and computed. All judicial or semi-judicial power or discretion in them was abrogated, and they no longer gave any sort of certificate of election to any one, not even to a justice or constable in their own ward. They were simply clerks and computers, with no power of decision.

The second great feature was to reduce the number of returning officers to five for the whole State, and to invest them solely with the functions and duties of returning officers, and to embody in that board the whole returning power of the State which had been taken from the parish and precinct officers.

The whole duty of ascertaining and making the final and official count was exclusively therein.

This law of 1870, act No. 100 of 1870, approved March 16, 1870, although modified by act No. 98 of 1872, has not materially been changed, and is of force now.

The attention of the public has been much drawn of late to this act and to the proceedings held under it. There is nothing in any of the other States entirely analogous to it; and its purpose, mode of operation, and effect have been greatly misconceived.

The Louisiana returning board is not at all like the canvassing boards of the other States.

In all the other States returns of elections deciding who is elected and giving.

The Louisiana returning board is not at all like the canvassing boards of the other States.

In all the other States returns of elections deciding who is elected, and giving certificates of election which are prima facie evidence, all these are done by local officers, exercising something more than clerical and ministerial powers; and the State board of canvassers merely perform the duty of compiling all statements of votes, legal in form, forwarded by the local election tribunals.

In Louisiana the only returns of elections known to the law which confer any prima facie title come from the returning board, and, as has been shown before, the lower election officers perform merely clerical and ministerial functions and act as intermediaries to pass forward to the board all the acts done from the deposit of the vote until the tinal count and determination by the board, as the only returning officers for the State.

But it is alleged that the power to reject polls for intimidation, &c., is contrary to republican institutions, and, as some s.y, unconstitutional. This assertion deserves examination. What is an election? It is the free, uncontrolled choice of the voter. The word itself imports freedom of choice.

The vote is worthless unless deposited by the voter of his own free will and choice.

The vote is worthless unless deposited by the voter of his own free will and choice.

If the act of voting is done under controlling duress of any kind, it is not the act of the voter, but that of the party controlling him.

The history of the struggle for a secret ballot in England and in this country is the history of a truggle on behalf of the weak and dependent to escape by this contrivance the dominion over their wills of the strong and the wealthy.

If so much effort has been used in times past to save the voter by the secrecy of the ballot from the duress of his landlord or employer, shall no effort be made to save him from the terror which brutal violence or fear of death must exercise over his freedom of will and liberty of choice?

When it was notorious that in 1868 whole parishes in Louisiana had been forcibly revolutionized by wholesale and reckless violence, and the elections held therein were mere mockeries, lacking in every essential attribute of an election properly so called, was it not wise to devise some remedy for a state of things that struck directly at the root of free institutions, nullified the will of the majority, and gave the prize of political success to the men of the party who cared least for the holiness of life, and who forced their way to power by the rope, the whip, and the bullet?

The Legislature of Louisiana, knowing all the fearful facts, did devise a remedy, and they did well in so doing.

Their legislation is to be defended, because it is in strict conformity to the theory of free elections and according to the rules of the common law of liberty.

All authorities in England and America agree that violence and force used at an election to affect the result render such election null and void.

Standing on that great principle, the Legislature said, in substance, to the violent men of the State, "If you use force and violence, terror and intimidation, to impair the freedom of an election, you shall not reap the fruits of your wrong-doing, but the whole poll thus tainted wit and free exercise of that power is to break down the very foundation of the Republic.

Now the Legislature might have deposited this high duty of annulling elections impaired by the causes cited in the local election officers. They did not, and they acted wisely, for these officers themselves were too near the scene of these excesses not to be affected by them, and would have been constrained to a large extent by the local intimidation.

Thus local returning officers in polls and parishes would have been overborne and overcome by the very intimidation which they themselves would have been called upon to condemn, and whose results they would be required to defeat.

So the Legislature took the right way, by removing all power of making returns from local officers and vesting the whole in five citizens as the sole returning officers of the State, whose place of meeting was to be at the capital city of the State, removed from these malign influences, free from apprehension, and free to decide fairly and justly in the premises.

And what, after all, do they decide! Not whether votes given at a poll are to be counted or not, but the far higher question whether the votes reported to them as such are votes or not; whether there was such freedom of choice as is necessary to constitute a vote.

They have power to determine whether the election was nullified by acts of violence and intimidation, and if the proof shows that such was the fact, by all law in all free countries that pretended election was a nullity.

This is the purpose, intent, and aim of the laws of 1870 and 1872 establishing the returning board and constituting them the only returning officers of the State under the constitution.

It is, however, said that this power is dangerous. So is all power; in whomsoever vested, there always is and always will be risk of abuse. But the power is infinitely better than the state of things which preceded it in 1868 and which called it into being. Regular power, exercised under law by known officers, subject to punishment for its abuse, is infinitely safer than mob law; than the will of masses of maranding night-riders; than florgings, hangings, brutality, and murder inflieted by secret associations for political purposes, in darkness, in fantastic disguises, bringing all law, human and divine, to the low measure of their infuriated passion, or the still lower one of cool, deliberate calculation of political effect to be produced by repeated crimes.

All good men of all parties at the time conceded the law to be necessary and wise, and afterward, when the democratic party held control of the Legislature, they themselves indorsed it by not attempting its repeal.

The law was a necessity of the situation, and the situation, bad as it was and is, was not brought about by the republicans, but by evil-disposed men working under the name of the democracy and who have brought shame and disgrace number of the term was the state of the law of elections in Louisiana in November 1876.

der the name of the democracy and who have brought shame and disgrace upon the name.

This then was the state of the law of elections in Louisiana, in November, 1876, when the last election was held.

The minority of this committee filed their protest at an early day against any attempt on the part of the House of Representatives, or its committee, to go behind the returns of the returning officers of Louisiana on the presidential election, and they respectfully refer to that protest, and stand by the principles then asserted.

But as the majority of the committee believed themselves empowered so to do, the undersigned propose to give a brief statement of what they found and observed.

It would seem as if the long and black catalogue of crimes committed against human liberty and human life in the ten years from 1866 to 1876 ought to have had effect enough to break down, dispirit, dishearten, and destroy the republican organization in Louisiana: that blood enough of innocent men had been shed to deliver the State over into the hands of the opposition; that the colored population, naturally timid and largely dependent for means of labor and life upon the whites, would have given way to these repeated and unpunished assaults upon their persons and their political rights.

But so deeply ingrained into this people is the sentiment that they owe freedom and civil and political rights to the republican party that all these deadly assaults have to a large extent failed of their purpose. Even the more severe trial of faith in the confessed unworthiness and treachery of some who were once leading republicans has not materially lessened their faith in the party of freedom and human rights.

In the contessed unworthiness and treachery of some who were once leading republicians has not materially lessened their faith in the party of freedom and human rights.

The testimony taken by this committee is full of evidence of this great fact. Some thirty or forty colored men have been sworn as witnesses to prove threats and violence offered by other colored men to them for abandoning the republican organization, and they and all other witnesses agree that the solid mass of the colored voters believe that it is treason to their race to vote the democratic ticket.

One of these new converts to democracy, in pleading with a friend to follow him, asks. "What have the republicans done for you!" To which comes the prompt and natural answer, "Didn't they take the bull-whip off of me!" It is beyond any doubt that neither bribery, nor interest, nor soft words, nor condescension, nor proof of misrule by local officers, nor even violence, can shake the deep-rooted love of the liberated black man for the party whose greatest achievement was universal emancipation and universal citizenship.

They may compel him by terror to vote a democratic ticket; they may compel him for self-interest combined to join a democratic club; they may frighten him from the polls and prevent his voting, but he knows and they know that the instant he is let alone, the moment he load of fear is taken off, the moment he dare stand up in his own right and his own strength, free to think, free to act, and free to choose, that moment he stands ready and willing to vote the republicant ticket.

For the negro, although unlearned, is no fool. His powers of legic may not be sufficiently but his knewner; a good. The institut of self-preservation combines to the politicated but his emoner; a good. The institut of self-preservation combines and the publicant of the former was good. The institute of self-preservation combines and the publicant of the former was good. The property of the former of the former was another of the property in good. The proper know that the instant he is let alone, the moment the load of fear is taken off, the moment he dare stand up in his own right and his own strength, free to thick, free to act, and free to choose, that moment he stands ready and willing to vote the republican ticket.

For the negro, although unlearned, is no fool. His powers of logic may not be cultivated, but his memory is good. The instinct of self-preservation combines with gratitude to hold him steady, and thus the fact comes that in this State of Louisiana, no withstanding the horrors and cruelties of the years past, notwithstanding the organized and systematic violence of the last summer, more than seventy-five thousand voters in large proportion colored men, had strength and opportunity to vote the republican ticket, while at least fifteen thousand more were prevented from so doing by intimidation and terror. And it is an argument in justification of his general capacity for the performance of political duties that the colored man has stood so firmly by the principles of the republican party and adhered so strongly to the republican organization, in the face of so long-combined and so merciless assaults made upon him for daring to exercise his political rights in that direction.

Every one must know that the effects of these several years of persecution and oppression are not and cannot be temporary. They have a cumulative power, which gains in force and intensity by each repetition, and the violences of 1876 recall and are enforced by the memories of similar occurrences in past years.

Hence no fair judgment can be made of the effect upon the popular mind of the events of the late election that does not give full weight to all that has preceded it. The undersigned found the whole atmosphere of Louisiana pervaled by intimidation; they found it active in giving defiant energy to the one party, and a tone of subjection, apology, and want of positive manhood and self-assertion to the other. They found a professed inability on the part of republicans, black a ernor Kellogg when the secret order of these men would not have overthrown his authority in the city and in most of the country parishes unless be were sustained by the power of the United States troops.

All this terrible array was constantly before the eyes of the republicans of Louisiana, and shadowed all of them, white and black, with a vague and fearful apprehension, and thus deadened the courage, cramped the energies, and hindered the successful organization of the republican party.

On their side they had nothing but the guarantees of law with no physical force to sustain it, and the bitter experience of past years had shown them how slight a barrier this was to the grasping greediness or fierce and malignant passion of their adversaries.

and, and shadowed all of them, white and black, with a vague and faceful appearance heasion, and thus deadened the course, cranged the energies, and bindered the successful organization of the republican party.

So austain it, and the litter experience of past years had shown them how eligible to sustain it, and the litter experience of past years had shown them how eligible a larger this was to the grasping greediness or flerce and malignant passion of their adversaries.

Then early in May there was developed for the first time a singular feedency among the white democrats in many parishes toward the formation of ride clubs, and the more singular fact that these, with scarcely an exception, were formed in democratic and the state of the state of the campaign and the state of the state o people seem to consider this horrible state of society, and how this most wretched display of greed and avarice, of crime and lust of power, so slightly affects the conscience of the nation.

One-hundredth, nay, one-thousandth of the horrors inflicted in Louisiana if perpetrated in any Northern State would be overwhelmed with such an avalanche of popular indignation, that no man, however remotely connected with it, could for a moment endure the scorn, contempt, and hatred of an aroused people.

But is the grossness of the crime against law and order, of the outrage upon the fundamental rights of the citizen, any less in Louisiana than in New York or Ohio? Is the poor and uncellucated negro of the South any less entitled to his rights under the Constitution; any less entitled to enjoy the privileges guaranteed by that instrument, than the white citizens, native or adopted, of any portion of the country?

In the poor and uncellucated negro of the South any less entitled to his rights under the Constitution; any less entitled to enjoy the privileges guaranteed by that instrument, than the white citizens, native or adopted, of any portion of the country?

Nay, is it not the fact that the very weakness and defenselessness of the subject of the wrong appeals all the more strongly to the sympathy and the sense of right of thinking people?

Or does the "chivalry" which thus oppresses the weak and tramples on the lowly think that it enhances its claim to respect by the selection of these unresisting people to be their victims?

There is no danger of such wholesale crime being committed where men will resist, and where the conscience of the people around them will justify and sustain such resistance. But in Louisiana and the entire South the colored people do not resist, seem incapable of organization, and unfortunately the conscience of the people among whom they live sustains the gross oppression, though some may profess regret for the extent to which it may be carried.

There are some men in the democratic ranks in Louisiana who did during the campaign oppose these violent outrages, but, as always happens where mobs bear rule, the movement of the mass is governed and controlled by the worst and most dangerous elements in it; and, as yet, of all the men who condemn the course taken, there are none who do not eagerly seize the fruits of the wrongful act.

There can be no doubt whatever from the testimony that in very many of the parishes of the State the mass of voters were very largely controlled by the existing apprehension of evil to come to them, and that such apprehension of was well founded, first, on the memory of late events of violence and bloodshed, and, secondly, on the actual developments of the campaign in threats of danger, in threats of loss of employment, in threats of pecuniary loss, in threats of personal violence for opinion's sake, in actual brutal treatment of men and women, in degrading and unusua

This has been decided in Louisiana before Judge Hawkins on a petition for mandamus filed by Mr. Zacharie, the very able counsel of the democratic commit-tee, and so satisfactory was the decision that no appeal was taken by that gentleman.

But it must not be supposed that the laws of Louisiana do not give prompt and searching remedy for any delinquency on the part of supervisors of election, for it has been correctly decided by Judge Beattie in the La Fourche district court that any person claiming office and averring that the supervisors have improperly withheld evidence in the form of election matter from the returning board shall have the writ of mandamus in its most summary form commanding such delinquent supervisor or commissioner of election to forward at once to the returning board all such papers, to be compiled, determined, and acted upon by said board.

Thus the right of the individual is saved; but if no party interested chooses to take the initiative and compel action by the intermediary election officers, the board can only consider and act upon the papers and statements actually sent forward by such intermediary election officers, and this the undersigned believe to be the law of the case in all the States of this Union in similar cases.

It appears then that there were regularly forwarded to the returning board election statements from all the parishes of the State except Grant Parish, in which the supervisor left the parish before election and the pretended election was held by unauthorized persons.

The total number of votes received by the board appears to have been, for—

This amount is the republican majority in the State of Louisiana by the official and final count and determination of the only returning officers known to the constitution and laws of that State, and such count and certificate is by the law of that State final, so as to give a prima facte title to office, which can only be impeached by a judicial trial in which the interest of parties litigant can be determined; and judicial trial is the only mode known to the law in which the ballots, returns, defects of the polls, defects in election, and other matters going to the absolute verity of the election, can be brought into question and determined.

Until that is done, no tribunal whatever can divest the persons declared elected of the right to office given prima facile by the declaration of the returning beard. The result above mentioned, by which 10,250 democratic and 1,763 republican votes were thrown out, is arrived at, according to the tables furnished by the board, by rejecting sixty-nine polls in twenty-two parishes.

In nearly all of these polls the rejection was based upon the ground of intimidation and violence, and in some few upon clear and palpable wrong-doing by the officers charged with the election.

East Feliciana is an example of the first class; which parish, although notorical and intimidation as to cast on republican paish, was so overridden by violence and intimidation as to cast on republican refine.

Grant Parish is an example of the second class, where no legal or authorized officer took any part in the election.

The evidence on which the board based its action is in the form of affidavits and depositions, and some oral evidence taken by consent.

The undersigned have not seen nor examined all of this evidence, nor has the whole of it at any time been before the committee, but a very large part of it is already in print in the report of Hon. John Sherman and others. (Senate Excentive Document No. 1.)

The general tenor of the evidence before the board is such as was to be expected from the history of Louisiana as heretofore detailed, and corroborates the hippression made upon us by our own experience and observation of the widely diffused influence of fear caused by acts of intimidation.

While there are Isolated instances in which we from our point of view might be observers, based upon slight knowledge of the people and the situation, and the responsible action in judicial form of high olicers selected and sworn to perform one of the most important official duties.

The testimony taken questions in the most objectionable form, and on matters not in any way before the committee.

It is certain that there is nothing so likely to be unfair as a congressional committee raised to investigate a political question, especially when the members put themselves constantly on record as having sunk judicial responsibility and assumed the position of partisan attorneys. It is a bad state of affairs when the attorney and the judge are one and the same.

To a fair mind it would seem that the only inquiry should be, what was the testimony before the board, and whether such testimony warranted such finding as they mony before the board, and whether such testimony warranted such finding as they made.

And yet, after all the labor of the committee, there is no record of the evidence except so far as we find it second hand in the Sherman report.

It is not fair nor just to attempt to set aside the verdict of a jury on the ground that it was contrary to evidence, and then attempt to sustain such motion, not by comments on the evidence actually before the jury, but by offering a mass of matter that never was before them at all.

No court would tolerate such action. And yet this is precisely the thing to which the majority of the committee have devoted their time and labor.

Thousands of pages of so-called evidence, good, bad, and indifferent, legitimate and illegitimate, are piled up to attempt to show that no such state of things existed, and to overbalance the actual testimony on which the board did ground their action. But supposing all this newly discovered, or rather newly inverted, testimony to be true, and to overbalance the testimony in before the board, does any rule of law or equity hold the board responsible for what they never saw nor heard?

The undersigned do not by any means admit that the facts stated before the board and on which they acted have been to any considerable extent disproved, but on the contrary express their firm conviction that so far as the general charge of intimidation is concerned, it is fully supported and strengthened by the examinations made in Louisiana by this committee.

There were very many parishes in the State in which, as it appears from the testimory in the Sherman report, clear and distinct specific charges of cruelty and violence, with names of parties and dates, were directly made.

From the time when this evidence was before the returning board, known and read by the visiting committees, and copies taken by the able democratic local committees, until the close of our investigations in Louisiana, there was ample time to meet and answer these specific charges. There were very few instances in which this was attempted. General evidence was introduced that the election at the polls was free and fair, but very rarely did they venture to meet and deny the specific charges.

was free and fair, but very rarely did they venture to meet and deny the specific charges.

The attempt was made before both the House and Senate committees in the Pinkston case, and the testimony will show with what success.

The whole attempt has been, not to contradict the fact of fear and apprehension, nor even the mass of specific cases of cruelty, but to show that the colored people ought not to have been intimidated, and to prove this by white democrats and some republicans who swore that they themselves were not intimidated.

In some parishes it has been attempted to show by evidence that these violent organizations were conservators of the peace, or vigilance committees to punish crime, but in nearly all the cases the sufferers were colored men and republicans; and it is undeniable that the colored voters generally did believe that such violent acts were political in purpose and intended to frighten them, and so believing they felt the pressure, and either voted under compulsion or were deterred from voting at all.

In closing up this brief review of the mass of material collected by the committee under the name of evidence, it is proper for the undersigned to state that no opportunity or time has been afforded them to give any critical examination to the same, that the evidence is not yet printed, and that the enormous amount of written matter cannot be even looked through, much less weighed and considered.

Certain great principles which should have controlled the action of the committee, according to the views of the undersigned, have been overridden and thrown aside, and are of such great importance and force that they require at least explicit statement, if not full clue idation.

And, first, we affirm that the whole duty and power of the appointment of presidential electors is, by the plain words and necessary intendment of the Constitution, removed from the control or possible interference of any part of the National Government or of the whole united.

Neither the executive nor the legislative branches have any authority, supervision, or control of the mode by which the several States appoint, or of the scrutiny of votes, when popular election is selected as the mode of appointment. In this respect the electors of President and Vice-President are State officers.

The question can only be whether or not they, the electors, are constituted in the manner provided for by the Legislature of the State.

In the particular instance before us of Louisiana, an inspection of the laws of said State shows that by section 1400 of the revised laws of said State it is provided as follows:

"In every year in which an election shall be held for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, such election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, in accordance with an act of Congress of the United States approved January 23, 1845, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform time for holding elections for electors of President and Vice-President in all the States of the Union' and su

This section is part of the election law of 1868, and was incorporated in the revised statutes approved March 14, 1870, and remains to-day unrepealed and in force.

At the time when said section 1410 was originally enacted, commissioners of elections and supervisors of parishes were returning officers, and were not deprived of that power until the passage of act No. 100. of March 16, 1870, amended by the act No. 98, of 1872, by which, as before stated, the duties and powers of returning officers were vested in the five members of the returning board.

By the same revised statutes of 1870, pages 551, 552, the same rules as to elections of presidential electors were repeated verbatim in section 1823.

Sections 2824, 2825, and 2826 provide for the qualifications of electors and the mode of voting, and the last section, 2826, for the mode of canvassing. We quote section 2826 in full:

"SEC. 2826. Immediately after the receipt of a return from each parish, or on the fourth Monday in November, if the returns shall not sooner arrive, the governor, in presence of the secretary of state, the attorney-general, a district judge of the district in which the seat of government may be established, or any two of them, shall examine the returns and ascertain therefrom the persons who have been duly elected electors."—Revised Statutes, page 552.

It will be observed that the election papers forwarded from the parishes are detendined force of that word

It will be further observed that the canvassing board are not described in the law as returning officers, but are simply directed to examine the returns and ascertain the result.

But among the changes made in the acts of 1870 and 1872, it is enacted by section 2 of act of 1872, No. 9s, "that five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum and have power to make the returns of all elections."

"Within ten days after the closing of the election said re

"Within ten days after the closing of the election, said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the commissioners of election and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns shall have been compiled."

"The returns of the elections thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers, until set aside after a contest, according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected." Section 3 of the same law gives the power of refusing to canvass or compile statements of elections and of excluding from their returns, in cases where intimidation, riot, tumults, violence, armed disturbance, or bribery and corrupt influences are proven to the satisfaction of said returning officers.

Thus it will appear conclusively that Louisiana, under the power conferred by the Constitution on the States, has assumed jurisdiction over the mode and manner of electing presidential electors, and has by her Legislature declared:

First. That such electors shall be appointed by election.

Second. That such elections shall be part of the general elections of the State, and held and conducted in the manner and form provided by law for general State elections.

Second. That such elections shall be part of the general elections of the State, and held and conducted in the manner and form provided by law for general State elections.

Third. That the board of returning officers shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, and have power to make returns for all elections.

Fourth. That such returns so made by them and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence until set aside by judgment of a court on a trial of the right of some person by them declared to be elected to office.

And this law has received the construction and the approval of the supreme court of the State.

In the case of Collin vs. Knoblock, Louisiana Annual Reports, page 263, the supreme court, Taliaferro, J., delivering the opinion, say:

"The returns made by a legal State board, and officially promulgated by that board as the general returning officers for the State at large, constitute the basis upon which the governor is authorized to issue commissions. These returns, by the statute of 16 March, 1870, are made prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers until set aside, after a contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected."

Again in the same case the c. art say:

"The act of 1870, No. 100, approved March 16, 1870, is the general law under which the elections held at the general election in November, 1872, were conducted, and which controlled, as to the formalities of revising and compiling the returns from every part of the State, and the making and promulgating the final report."

Again, in the same volume of the reports, in the case of Bonner vs. Lynch, p. 267, the supreme courts say:

"But it is said that the returns are only prima facie proof of the result of an election. That is true. The question, however, as to the election of officers is a political department may have authorized them to exercise jurisdiction. If there were no statute aut the returns of the supervisors of elections, examine the right of voters to vote, and, in short, the courts would become in regard to such cases mere offices for counting, reporting, and compiling election-returns." * " "Having no power to revise the action of the board of returning officers, we have nothing to do with the reasons or grounds upon which they arrived at their conclusions."

In another case in the same volume of reports the court decides that the act of 1872, No. 98, does not destroy the board of returning officers by its repealing clause, but merely modifies the form of appointment.—State ex rel. Attorney-General vs. Wharton, pages 10 and 11.

The highest tribunal known to the constitution of Louisiana, a tribunal whose decisions on State law must be followed by the Supreme Court of the United States, has thus affirmed and sustained the powers and rights of the returning board, has affirmed the right of the Legislature to create it and invest it with its powers, and sustained its action.

The control of the State of Louisiana over the subject under the Constitution is as exclusive as that of New York or any other State, and both the acts of her Legislature and the decisions of her courts are as complete in authority as those of any other State.

The supreme court of the State denies its power to revise the proceedings of the board, or to inquire into the reasons or grounds on which they arrived at their conclusions.

is lature and the decisions of her courts are as complete in authority as those of any other State.

The supreme court of the State denies its power to revise the proceedings of the board, or to inquire into the reasons or grounds on which they arrived at their concurs. The supreme court of the State denies its power to revise the proceedings of the board, or to inquire into the reasons or grounds on which they arrived at their concucted.

When this committee assembled in New Orleans on the 11th day of December, the whole business of determination of presidential electors had for some days been concluded.

Minority report of S. A. Hurlbut, one of the members of the subcommittee of which Hon.

J. S. Blackburn was chairman.

The undersigned begs leave to state that he differs wholly with the apparent decision of the subcommittee by which they assume jurisliction to inquire into the actual state of the polls in the parishes ordered to be examined by them.

Under the law of Louisiana the commissioners of election at the several polls, and the compiling officer, known as supervisors of parishes, have no right or authority to scrutinize or decide upon any question either of form or of substance in regard to elections. Their function is simply clerical and ministerial, and the whole power which they possess is to receive and tabulate the result of elections, and forward all papers and evidences of election which either of them receive to the board of returning officers for the State for scrutiny and final decision.

Under the same laws and the decision of the supreme court, title to office and the right to be commissioned depend solely upon the action of said board, which action must be a condition-precedent to any lawful title to any office in the State.

Such action can only be reviewed, changed, modified, or reversed by a judicial proceeding in coarts properly so called, upon a regular contest in form of law, as prescribed by the statutes of the State, in the case of parish and district officers, or by the action of one of the branches of the general assembly in the case of representatives and senators in the State legislature, or by both houses on a count for governor and lieutenant-governor.

No provision is made by law specifically for any contest for presidential electors, because, in all probability, the case had not been foreseen, and because of the very short and ephemeral tenure of the office.

Thus, in the conception of the undersigued, the action of the cuturing board and of the governor based thereon is absolutely final and conclusive.

Again, the undersigned does not acknowledge, but specially denies, that the subcommittee is or can be in any respect a court, having either jurisdiction of the subcommittee is or can be in any respect a court, having either jurisdiction of the subcommittee is or five to a curious and interested public items of intelligence in the form of the opinions of a certain number of gentlemen, with no legal validity and no known a money.

As, however, the majority of the subcommittee have dignified this matter by a solemn report, and have deliberately attempted to open up the action of Louisiana under her own laws, and attempt to reverse the same, a decent respect for his associates on the subcommittee requires the undersigned briefly to follow their statement.

The pretended evidence is so voluminous and so vague that it cannot be fairly dissected and followed, nor has it in fact been printed so as to be accessible.

We examined, or pretended to examine, the parishes of Iberia, La Fayette, La Fourche, Livingston, Plaquemines, Saint Landry, and Tangipahoa.

I am of opinion that poll No. 4 was properly excluded. All the commissioners were democrats and white men, and failed to comply with an important and mandatory provision of law. They did not write or stamp across the certificates of registry the word "voted," so as to prevent the use of such certificates at other polls in the parish, or even at the same poll.

The returning board took this view of the case, and rejected the poll. If my opinion or that of any outsider is of any value in this matter, which I deny, then I give the weight of such opinion in favor of the action of the board.

There is no other evidence of any sort that has any materiality as to this parish, except the universal fact common to the whole State, that the colored people looked upon any of their number who voted the democratic ticket as a traitor to their race; and if my opinion on this question is to be given, I concur with that general sentiment.

LA FAYETTE.

The returning board struck out poll No. 2 on evidence which will appear on pages 524 to 535 of the Sherman report. It is to be noticed that this evidence before the board was not in any manner contradicted before them, and although a vast mass of hearsay is now put in before our subcommittee, yet no one man has been brought forward to contradict the specific allegations of violence, &c, made in the evidence actually before the board.

LA FOURCHE.

Under my view of the law it was the duty of the supervisor to compile and send forward poll No. 2. From error in judgment, or some other cause, he did not, and it never came before the returning board for adjudication. This fault may be ground for legal proceedings against the supervisor, but not for quarrel with the board. For if anything be certain in the election system of Louisiana, it is that the board have no power to compele a supervisor to send forward any report, or to complete and furnish a partial report withheld by him.

Poll No. 10, under the testimony, never came into the hands of the supervisor, and the evidence is clear that no proper election was held, and that no legal report was made or received by the supervisor.

The residue of the pretended evidence taken in this parish is wholly worthless for judicial inquiry, and the committee were merely made use of as a convenience for the exhibition of private malice.

LIVINGSTON.

LIVINGSTON.

Polls 2, 3, 4, and 8 were excluded by the returning board upon evidence printed in the Sherman report, pages 483 to 510, on ground of intimidation.

This evidence has been very severely attacked. Yet, on a calm consideration of the whole result, many very material facts charged in the evidence before the board are fully sustained.

The killings, burnings, whippings, are distinctly proven.

Firing at night upon Christian people assembled for worship, repeated attacks on houses, threats of ill usage, general knowledge of mysterious bodies of armed men riding by night over the parish, and executing their own wicked will; all these are abundantly proven.

It is further clearly in evidence that the republican voters did, in fact, consider that these wrongs and violences were designed to intimidate them; and it is shown by all the witnesses, especially by Simms and Bailey, that they were uneasy, disturbed, intimidated, and hindered in the expression of their political sentiments. uneasy, disturbed, intimidated, and hindered in the expression of the sentiments.

I cannot detect any informality of any account in the polls rejected.

PLAQUEMINES.

This parish, so far as I can learn, was not protested by the democracy except for local officers, and the unsupported protest appears to have been correctly ruled out by the board. The parish is acknowledged to have been always and to be very heavily republican. There is an increase in registration of voters from 1874 to 1876 of 600. But this is accounted for in the evidence by the large increase of sugar cultivation, and the employment of men from New Orleans and elsewhere as laborers, whose families remained outside of the parish.

Plaquemines has been very notorious in history from the time of the enormous frauds committed by Slidell, in 1844, and the scandalous cauvass between Sypher and Lawrence in 1872.

The registration of 1874, it is conceded, was fair, and the registration of 1876 was merely supplemental to that.

There seems no reason to doubt that the full vote of the parish would give results substantially as declared by the board, and the work of attack on this parish seems one of pure supererogation.

SAINT LANDRY.

Poll No. 9 was excluded by the board. I am not in possession of the evidence upon which this was done, and am wholly unable to say whether it was from legal defects in the statement of commissioners from action or neglect of the supervisor, or from any other cause. In the absence of any evidence, I presume that the action of the board was within the law. No protest was made by the democratic managers, or any one else, to this action, and, so far as I know, no contest before the board.

board.

Much evidence was taken by the subcommittee as to colored voters being penned up at Opelousas; but all the witnesses who know anything swear that these 100 or more colored voters were nearly unanimously republican on the national ticket, and that the scramble for their votes was solely for inferior and local offi-

TANGIPAHOA.

The evidence before the board on intimidation in this parish appears in the Sherman report, pages 551 to 554.

All the testimony before us substantiates the facts alleged in the affidavit of O. M. Kinchen, on page 551 of the Sherman report. He is proven to be a good man, and of good repute, and his positive statement of facts stands uncontradicted, and, in fact, supported by the other evidence.

Simson was fully discredited, and no importance is attached by me to his statements.

Ments.

I have thus followed the line taken by the majority and given my views and opinions, not because the views and opinions of any of us are of any legal import and value, but that both sides might be represented in somewhat fair proportion in contributions to the current chronicles of the times.

S. A. HURLBUT.

The undersigned, a member of the subcommittee charged with the investigation of the election in the various parishes composing the fifth congressional district of Louisiana, not agreeing to the report made to Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, chairman, by Messrs. McMahon and Ross, presents the following as his views:

Upon the vote of the parish of Catahoula no testimony was taken by the subcommittee. Two polls were thrown out. These polls gave 20 votes for the Hayes electors and 97 votes for the Tilden electors. The reasons given for this action by the returning board are that there were no poll-lists, no tally-sheets, or lists of voters, and that the returns were not properly signed. In the absence of any evidence contradicting this statement, the returns were so defective in form and execution that they were properly rejected. There was a failure on the part of the local officers to comply with the proper and necessary formalities of law by which these returns could be legally recognized.

No testimony was taken by the subcommittee in respect to the election in Franklin Parish.

One poll in this parish (No. 2) was thrown out by the returning board. The water to comply with the proper and necessary formalities of law by which these returns could be legally recognized.

No testimony was taken by the subcommittee in respect to the election in Frank-lin Parish.

One poll in this parish (No. 2) was thrown out by the returning board. The vote of this poll was, for the Hayes electors, 25; for the Tilden electors, 74.

The supervisor of registration of this parish, W. H. McVey, on the 24th day of intimidation during the registration which did prevent a fair, free, and full election; and he stated facts within his own knowledge and facts communicated to him by resident voters, showing that there was a condition of terror in some portions of the parish. This sworn statement of the supervisor was supported by the evidence before the returning board of Henry White, Gabriel Hill, and Orange Gardner. Two of these witnesses testify that they were present at the Oakland poll No. 2, and that within their knowledge fifty or sixty colored men cast their votes for the republican ticket, whereas only twenty-eight were counted. Without discussing here any legal questions raised by the majority of the subcommittee, this evidence, uncontroverted, justified the returning board in throwing out the vote of this poll.

In Claiborne Parish one poll, (No. 3.) known as Hayesville, was thrown out by the returning board. The number of votes at this poll was 184, all of which were for the Tilden electors. It is objected by the majority of the committee that the alleged acts of violence and intimidation and corrupt influences were not stated or certified by any commissioner of the election of this polling-place. This is undoubtedly true, but it must also be borne in mind that all of the commissioners at this poll were democrate. It appears in this case that the supervisor arrived in New Orleans on the 34th of November, 1876, and then filed a protest, with the exparts affidavits of six legal voters, who swove that with violent threats of personni attacks, they were deterred from voting, and that with subcommittee were in the parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, and Richland. The number of votes excluded was as follows:

Parishes.	Hayes electors.	Tilden electors.	Difference.
Ouachita		1, 517 985 770	1, 469 630 613
Total difference.			2, 719

These parishes form one of the so-called "bull-dozed" districts of Louisiana. They are contiguous in territory, and similar in population and business pursuits, and all of them have a large preponderance of colored over white voters.

The principal work of your subcommittee was confined to the above-named three parishes. A large number of witnesses were examined at Monroe, the shiretown of Onachita. But this examination was exclusively the testimony offered in behalf of the Tilden electors, was under the auspices and guidance of the local democratic leaders surrounded solely by democratic influences, and in a locality where bitter partisanship had, as was alleged, committed the grossest crimes for the purpose of controlling the ballot-box. At the conclusion of this democratic testimony, the undersigned desired to continue the examination with evidence in behalf of the Hayes electors, and that the same be done at New Orleans, where the witnesses then were, and where the committee expected to return. This request was denied. In order that full justice may be done to all parties, and the circumstances fairly stated, a copy of the record of the subcommittee is here given.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

At the opening of executive session the chairman stated that the examination as to the parishes of Caldwell, Morehouse, Ouachita, Richland, and Concordia had been concluded, and that the committee as to these parishes was ready to hear testimony on behalf of the Hayes and Wheeler electors. Thereupon Hon. William W. Craro gave the following notice:

"Mr Craro gives notice to the subcommittee that he desires to examine witnesses who are now in New Orleans and who are expected to be there the coming week, and that he will make the request for the examination of witnesses after his return to New Orleans; that the proposed examination relates to the election in various parishes which this subcommittee has under consideration."

The Chairman made the inquiry of Mr. Crapo whether any witnesses he desired to call are at the city of Monroe, and whom he desired to examine while sitting here.

here.

In response thereto Mr. Crapo said that he had no witnesses at present in Monroc, the parties he desired to examine being in New Orleans in attendance under subpensa from the Senate committee, where he believed they were likely to be detained for a week.

The Charman responded to Mr. Crapo, and inquired whether he had had subpensa issued for any of these witnesses to appear before the subcommittee of the House.

Mr. Crapo answered that none had been issued that he was aware of.

The CHAIRMAN then asked Mr. CRAPO whether he desired to come back to Monroe at the expiration of one week to take the testimony on behalf of the Hayes and Wheeler electors.

Wheeler electors.

Mr. Crapo stated that he did not personally desire to return to Monroe, and he further believed that the public interest in this examination would be promoted by taking the testimony in New Orleans, and he inquired of the chairman and of Mr. Ross if they desired to return to Monroe at the expiration of the current week to finish taking the testimony.

Mr. Ross responded, "Yes, sir."

The Chairman said that he did not desire to return; that the loss of time of one week would delay the investigation and the publication of the testimony, and also the making of report of the subcommittee to the whole committee, and thereby prevent the whole committee from making its report to the House of Representatives in proper time for the consideration of the matters covered by the resolution under which the examination of such witnesses as may be presented on the Monday following, or, if not ready then, on Tuesday, the examination to proceed from day to day until finished; that the examination of all the witnesses on either side relating to the parishes of Richland, Morehouse, and Ouachita specially should proceed in the immediate neighborhood of those parishes convenient for all testimony for either side, to enable either party to produce readily and specially witnesses to explain or contradict testimony that may be given.

The Chairman further wished to notify Mr. Crapo officially, as he had done previously in private, that the subcommittee, would hold no session in New Orleans, and that the chair was confident that no other subcommittee sitting in New Orleans, and that the chair was confident that no other subcommittee sitting in New Orleans, and that the chair was confident that no other subcommittee sitting in New Orleans, and that the chair was confident that no other subcommittee sitting in New Orleans, and that the chair was confident that no other subcommittee sitting in New Orleans, and that the chair was retrieved to the committee would be ready to proceed with the examination of his witnesse

Mr. Ross concurring therein, the motion to adjourn to New Orleans was lost.
The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McMahon) then renewed the offer to take testimony at Morroe.

Mr. Crapo declined to proceed.

On motion of Mr. Ross, the subcommittee then adjourned to meet in Washington City on the day of the assembling of the whole committee;

The vote standing yea, Ross; nay, Crapo; and there being a tie vote, the chairman voted yea, and the committee adjourned.

C. E. WHITNEY,

C. E. WHITNEY, Secretary Subcommitte

The testimony taken by this subcommittee closed Saturday night, December 30, 1876, and was followed by the executive session, as above stated. My present and right to control the manner and place of taking the testimony. The report of the majority of this subcommittee stessimony. The report of the majority of this subcommittee states that the testimony and Wneeler electors, and to negative any presumption that the case as a researched by the democratic managers of those parishes might not be met with counter testimony. The report of the majority of this subcommittee states that the testimony that no statement in contradiction of this testimony was attainable, or that there was an entire acquiescence in the opinions and deelarations made to the committee by these democratic witnesses, such inference would be erromous. The testimony of violeace, threats, intimidation, and corrupt influences as shown in the evidence before the returning beart, printed in Senate executive document of the election in these parishes, must concede that a condition of affairs existed on calculated to secure "a fair, fron, and peaceable registration and election."

The evidence, even as taken by this subcommittee, disclosse that the democratic of the election in these parishes, must concede that a condition of affairs existed on calculated to secure "a fair, fron, and peaceable registration and election."

To the Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman of the House Special Committee on the Louisiana Election:
The undersigned, one of the subcommittee to investigate the matter of the Louisiana election, under the resolution of the House of Representatives, at New Orleans, not being able to agree to the report of the majority of the subcommittee, begs leave to submit this minority report.
That subcommittee sat in New Orleans for about five weeks and took testimony concerning the conduct of the election in the parish of Orleans, and extended their inquiries also as to the situation of affairs throughout certain disturbed portions of the State.
There was a vast amount of contradictory testimony presented before the subcommittee, and the positive and direct contradiction of witnesses rendered it impossible in many cases to come to an accurate conclusion as to circumstances and possible in many cases to come to an accurate conclusion as to circumstances and events.

Their testimony was evidently very much warped by their political prejudices and personal feelings, making it difficult for the subcommittee to reach the truth. The war of the rebellion had made the white class of Louisian poor by the operations of the armies that overran the State, and by the emancipation of the slaves. The amendments to the Constitution gave to the former slaves equal civil and political rights with their former masters. They folt that the republican party had released them from bondage, and hence, when their political rights were assured, they exerted them in favor of those whom they had esteemed as benefactors.

The white race, on the other hand, felt but little sympathy with those whom they had formerly dealt in as chattels or commanded as serfs, and who were now using the elective franchise against them.

Out of these anta-onisms bitter feelings arose, which culminated in riots, murders, and massacres of colored people by the whites. In the months of September, October, and November, 1868, massacres occurred in the parishes of Saint Landry, Bossier, Caddo, Jefferson, Saint Bernard, and Saint Mary, in which one thousand colored persons are estimated to have been killed. These disturbances produced a general feel ng of intimitation and insecurity among the colored race, and had the effect of preventing great numbers of colored voters from attending the polis and exercising their political rights at the fall elections of that year, and to secure to them the opportanity of a fair and poaceable vote, and to obtain for all classes an honest election, the election law as substantially now existing was enacted.

It is proper to say that it is a law that gives greater and more stringent powers to its officers than can be found in most of the election laws of the other States; but it arose out of an abnormal condition of things that existed nowhere else in the Union.

It is proper to say that it is a law that gives greater anomals as extingual powers to the officers than can be found in most of the election laws of the other States, the officers of an abnormal condition of things that existed nowhere else in the University of the state of the state of the state of the things that existed nowhere else in the University of the state of the state that they greatly outnumber you. Such meetings would convince them of their error."

The young and restless democracy were not slow at taking the hint, and mounted rifle clubs were formed in many parishes, especially in those which had given a large republican vote. It was shown by credible witnesses of high character that in the parishes of East and West Feliciana, Ouachita, and Morehouse there had arisen from these rifle clubs, which assumed to be mere regulators for the protection of property, many disturbances, whippings, hangings, shootings, and murders, which caused great intimidation among the colored voters, and deterred them from going to the poils. The testimony of Attorney General Hunt, of General John R. Brooke, of the United States Army, of Judge George P. Davis, and many others, is to the point and conclusive.

Judge Davis was a republican, and the democrats of his parish, not liking his political tenets, held a public meeting and requested him to resign. He understood this as a threat against his personal security and left the parish, as did G. T. Beauregard, another parish officer, who had a similar request served on him by the same meeting. They deemed their lives in danger if they remained.

The testimony laid before the Senate committee on this point of intimidation is very ample, and discloses a system of violence and terrorism practiced by democrats on colored republicans that shocks humanity.

The returning board, sworn to "carefully and honestly canvass and compile the statements of the votes, and make a true and correct return of the election," gave in evidence before the full committee their reasons for the rejection of the votes of the excluded polls, which will be found in the testimony, and which rejection they claim was strictly according to law. It is true that the statements of some of the supervisors were made in New Orleans, and not in their parishes; but inasmuch as the duty of forwarding the consolidated returns to the returning board within twenty-four hours after the electio lence and disturbance or intimidation as may have taken place, is merely directory, it would not be a valid objection to such a return that it was made after twenty-four hours, and its statement made in New Orleans. The reason given by some of the supervisors for taking their returns to New Orleans, and making their protests or statements of intimidation in their parishes, was that if they had done it there their lives would have been in jeopardy.

It was estimated by some of the witnesses that if the election had been a full, free, and peaceable election, such as the election law contemplates, there would have been a republican majority of from fifteen to twenty thousand, one of them placing it at a still higher figure.

A ceusus of the State was taken in 1875, from which it appeared that there were registered 207,622 voters, of whom 115,262 were colored and 92,354 were whites, making 22,914 majority of colored voters. How this calculation was arrived at will be found in the testimony of D. J. M. A. Jewett, who made it from the census returns.

returns.

To rebut this statement, a democratic statistician and computer, Professor S. E. Chaillé, A. B., A. M., M. D., professor in the medical department University of Louisiana, &c., &c., was called, who made an extended calculation, by which he endeavored to demonstrate that the census, as seen from a democratic stand-point, was exceedingly incorrect, especially as to the numerical excess of the negro population. Yet the census remains, and unless we believe that the census-takers were very reckless or very corrupt, it must still remain as the official statement of that very reckless or very corrupt, it must still remain as the official statement of that excess.

It is claimed that the negro voters have changed extensively from the republican to the democratic side, and to prove that claim witnesses were produced to show that negroes attended democratic meetings and participated in the proceedings. On the other side, however, witnesses testified that they were told by some of that class of negroes that they had been forced to hide in the woods for personal safety, and that they attended such meetings for the sake of peace and quiet, and to avoid being maltreated, and not because they believed in the principles of the democratic party. They were democratic badges, but said privately that their hearts were still republican.

A few in New Orleans were produced, who stated that they had joined the democrats, but the detestation with which such were held was shown in the fact that they were ridiculed and abused by their former friends. They were produced to show that colored democrats were "bull-dozed," but their production only manifested this, that the great mass of the colored people were attached to the republican party and hated those who, in joining the democracy, they say, "had sold their race." The witnesses proved too much.

What few colored recruits were obtained for the democratic party were got by democratic leaders adroitly calling their attention to the fact that, in two or three instances, the treasurer of the school fund had embezzied the money of the school district; that the Freedman's Bank had failed; that taxes were high and times were hard.

It is nuferturetely too true that in two or three school districts the funds were democratic leaders adroitly calling their attention to the fact that, in two or three instances, the treasurer of the school fund had embezzled the money of the school district; that the Freedman's Bank had failed; that taxes were high and times were hard.

It is unfortunately too true that in two or three school districts the funds were not amonged as they should have been, and that the proper school facilities were not afforded.

In Concordia Parish, one David Young had failed to account for all the money intrusted to his hands. An indictment was found against him for embezzlement, But that there were circumstances in his case that made it not so dark as democratic orators painted it is evidenced in this, that the district attorney entered a nolle prosequi in his case, Governor Kellogg having suggested that it might be done if the evidence before the attorney was not such as would warrant a conviction, and if the ends of justice would be promoted thereby.

Considerable prominence was given in the testimony to what was called "the sewing machine circular." The republican party believed that large numbers of persons, especially democrats, were fraudulently registered in New Orleans, and to ascertain the truth thereof they directed a circular concerning sewing machines to those persons whom they suspected of being fraudulently registered. They were sent through the mail, and if the persons to whom they were addressed were not to be found resident at the place of their registration where the circulars were addressed, the circulars were returned to the post-office, and thence to the republican committee, from which they emanated. They were then taken by two persons, as witnesses, to the place where the persons addressed were said to reside; and, if they were not found there, then they were delivered over to the proper officer, who issued his warrant for their arrest. By this means over 11,000 warrants were issued, and 3,362 colored and 7,738 whites were stricken from the registration books were pervented from bein tion of the real and personal property in the State, except in the case of war or invasion.

Laws pledging a certain amount of taxes for the payment of principal and interest have been passed; the creditors of the State have agreed to exchange their old bonds and unbonded claims for new consolidated bonds at sixty cents on the dollar, so that when the progressing consolidation of the debt is completed, the whole debt of the State will not be over $12,000,000, and cannot exceed $15,000,000 before the year 1914.

When Kellogar's administration came into power, the State debt was $24,000,000; but by the funding process, and some payments to a limited extent out of the revenues, it has been reduced to the figures above stated. State taxation was then twenty-one and a half mills on the dollar, with an equal or even greater amount in some parishes for parish purposes. In New Orleans the taxation then for all purposes was fifty-one and a half mills; this year it is twenty-nine and a half mills on the dollar, with an equal or even greater amount in State total expenditures for State purposes from 1809 to 1872, inclusive, were $11,622,005, while the total expenditures during the four years of Kellogg's administration were $7,412,180.

These figures show that Louisiana under republican rule is rapidly advancing to an increased prosperity.

Her soil in most of the parishes is good, her climate propitious, her productions varied and valuable, and all that is wanted to render her extremely wealthy is industry among her people and an orderly observance of law.

There is, however, too great a disposition in the white race to endeavor to obtain a desired end through the intervention of force, rather than by peaceful means. The result is that courts and juries cannot enforce the law where men prefer to obtain a purpose or redress a wrong by their own personal action, rather than by the peaceful process of the law. So strong is the disposition to use the strong arm, whether to obtain a right or redress an injury, that the greater part of the white race of the State goes armed.

A signal instance of this disposition is shown in the fact, that while the committee was holding its sittings in New Orleans, what is called the democratic Nicholls government, that had no certificates of election from the returning efficers, refusing to abide by the decision of the returning board against them, with the armed hand took possession of the courts and onsted the legal occupants of the bench, seized the police stations plundered the State arsenal, and assumed possession of the offices of the government.

So long as questions of right to office are to be decided by the bayoner rather than by the ballot, society will be disturbed and business cannot prosper.

The returning board swore that it would make a true and correct return of the election, and although the evidence has shown some errors and omissions in its action, yet the undersigned believes that, after making the necessary corrections in the compilation, the majority of votes cast for presidential electors was cast for those of the republican party.

The law presupposes that officers sworn to do their duty have done it faithfully and to the best of their ability, and as the election law of Louisiana makes the returning board of that State the compilers and canvassers of its election returns without appeal, it becomes all good citizens to abide by the law, and if the law is defective in its terms or oppressive in its workings, it is within the power and province of the Legislature to repeal it and substitute a better one in its place; but while it remains on the statute-book, the peace, happiness, and pros

Views of the minority of the subcommittee composed of Messrs. New, Bebee, and Joyce to which was referred the investigation of the Louisiana election in the parishes of East and West Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana, in that State.

Mr. Charles H. Joyce, the minority of the subcommittee to which was referred the investigation of the Louisiana election in the parishes of East and West Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana, submits the following report:

The subcommittee of which I was a member has completed its labors, having taken the testimony of about three hundred witnesses in the parishes of East Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana, and some six or seven in the city of New Orleans.

The subcommittee of which I was a member has completed its labors, having taken the testimony of about three hundred witnesses in the parishes of East Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana, and some six or seven in the city of New Orleans.

The object and purpose of the investigation, as I understood it, was to ascertain and report whether the vote, in either or all of those three parishes, had been materially changed at the late election by the intimilating or corrupt indimencing of a control of the subcommittee; and, while I was convinced and perfectly satisfied, from the outset, that the interrogatories put to the witnesses were objectionably leading, each one clearly suggesting the answer, and not in any manner calculated to elicit the truth, yet I refrained from interposing any objections at the time, choosing rather to meet and discuss that question when the whole testimony, interrogatories, and answers, shall be submitted to the House. subcommittee tending to contradict the admixtriation and some other witnesses, which were used before the State returning board at New Orleans, and also tending to impeach the character of said affaints for truth and veracity, touching the matter of intimidation during the registration of voters, and also on the day of election. Most of this class of testimony comes from very bitter democratic partisians and politicians or from defeated and disappointed candidates for office, and can therefore, in my judgment, have very little weight, in the history to the contradicted and shown to have made statements or admissions in some respects inconsistent with the sworn affidavit they after they are contradicted and shown to have made statements or admissions in some respects inconsistent with the sworn affidavit they after they after ward made, how can that affect or in any manner neutralize the great mass of positive evidence coming from witnesses which the majority of the subcomittee put upon the stand, showing that there was violence and intimidation and that the statements in Babe Matthews, a colored girl, about eighteen or nineteen years old, was a sisterin-law of John Gair, and was, at that time, October, 1875, living in the family of one Dr. Saunders, in the said parish of East Feliciana.

On a certain day, this Dr. Saunders pretended that he had been poisoned, and that Babe Matthews had committed the deed.

On this false and malicious statement of Dr. Saunders the poor colored girl was immediately taken into custody by some of the friends of Saunders, and, if rumor is true, and I have no doubt of it myself, submitted to a system of torture which at last compelled her—to save her own life—to sign a confession which the counsel for Saunders had prepared.

This protended confession was to the effect that she had some time before been to Baton Rouge, where John Gair then lived, and while there one John George had given her some poison and told her to poison Dr. Saunders, as he and Gair had fixed it all up. That after she had returned from Baton Rouge to Saunders's house she put the arsenic in the water-dipper and put the dipper in the water-pail, and Saunders swore that he drank out of it and was poisoned.

It will be noticed that no pretense is made, in this pretended confession or anywhere else, that the girl ever stated that Gair had spoken to her about the poison that he and Gair had fixed it up.

Now, upon this statement, forced from that poor, timid, ignorant, colored girl, under the most inhuman and cruel tortures, wishout one scintilla of evidence to connect John Gair with the transaction, Deputy Sheriff Woodward, with a posse of six or seven men, is started for Baton Rouge to arrest Gair and bring him to Cliuton. Woodward and his posse go to Baton Rouge, arrest Gair, a telegram announces the time when they leave with their victim for Clinton, Dr. Saunders gives the word, and in a twinkling from seventy-five to one hundred armed and mounted desperadoes come together and proceed toward Baton Rouge to meet the sheriff and execute the orders of the league.

At a proper time and in a proper place they meet the sheriff and his posse, go through the farce of disarming them, and then take possession of their victum, while the miserable treachery and collusion of the sheriff is disclosed by two of the murderers, who ride up to him saying that they "report to him." They have now in their possession the man who has so bravely borne the standard they hate and marshaled the clans they despise, and with curses and execrations they bind him to a tree, and with hellish glee riddle bim with bullets, while he calls upon Godto have mercy upon his soul and protect his wife and little ones at home.

They have killed Gair, but democracy cannot breathe free until the last vestige of evidence against his murderers is blotted out, and the blood of Babe Matthews cries to day from the ground against Joseph A. Norwood and his bloodtirsty crew.

Now, in order to justify all this crime and wickedness, which they are compelled to admit, and avoid the conclusion that it was done for political purposes, Dr. Saunders cames before the committee and swears he was poisoned, and Dr. Langworthy swears that he subjected some of the water that Mrs. Saunders gave him to a chemical test, and discovered the presence of arsenic.

But on cross-examination it was shown that Dr. Langworthy was totally ignorant of every principle of chemistry under which he pretended to have made the test, and that he did not know where the water came from upon which he had tried his experiments.

worthy swears that he subjected some of the water that Mrs. Saunders gave him.

But on cross examination it was shown that Dr. Langworthy was totally ignorant of every principle of chemistry under which he pretended to have made the test, and that he did not know where the water came from upon which he had tried his experiments, could have informed the committee where the water came from which she gave to Dr. Langworthy, but for some reason unknown to me she was not called as a witness.

In addition to this, the evidence shows that Dr. Saunders uses intoxicating liquors to excess, and has for the past ten or fifteen years, and would be very likely.

I only desire to add that in my opinion the attempt to prove that Saunders was poisoned was a miserable failure, and leaves the impression at thousand times stronger upon the mind than before, that John Gair was foully murdered, not because he was a suspected of advising the poisoning of Dr. Saunders, but because he was a suspected of advising the poisoning of Dr. Saunders, but because he was a republican, and for no other reason.

The effect of it upon their minds was electric and tremendom.

The effect of it upon their minds was electric and tremendom.

The art he handwriting upon the wall comprehented and messood by them as to the dictates of democracy or share his fate.

That act, alone, of democratic violence, designed by one party and understood by the other, as it was, to higher and intimidate the colored people in those three parishes, would have been sufficient of itself, without the scores of others which when the colored people in those three parishes, would have been sufficient of itself, without the scores of others which when the color of the party is the store of the colored people in those three parishes, would have been sufficient of itself, without the scores of others which when the colored people in those three parishes, would have been sufficient to excite the most intense alarm and virtue them all not the democratic close, when the colored peop from the bench, shot the sheriff, compelled the police-jurors to resign, and broke up the courts, giving as a pretended reason that it was because the judge had charged a petit jury in a manner not agreeable to the mob, but really because the judges and officers of the court were all republicans.

The majority of the committee must have been aware, when they arrived in New Orleans from Washington, that most of the witnesses which the republican members of the committee would desire to call were then in exile in that city from their homes in the parishes, and that their testimony could not be obtained unless it was taken there.

It must also have been well known to the majority of the committee that these republicans, both white and colored, who remained at their homes, would not dare to come before the committee in said parishes and testify, for fear of violence and bodily harm from white democrats who would be present and hear them testify; and they must also have known that the colored men who had been forced to join democratic clubs and vote the democratic ticket would not dare to testify in the presence of these men that they had done so through fear or in consequence of any intimidation.

republicans, both white and colored, who remained at their homes, would not dare to come before the committee in said parishes and testify, for fear of violence and bodily harm from white democrats who would be present and hear them testify; and their must also have known that the colored men who had been forced to join and their must also have known that the colored men who had been forced to join and their must also have known that they had done so through fear or in consequence of any intimidation.

Armed and guided by this knowledge and information, and in pursuance, as I have reason to believe, of a preconcerted plan, the first step was to divide the committee of the committee of the particles of the particles of the committee of the particles where the witnesses would be confronted and such and the particles and taken testimony at East Baton Ronge and West Feliciana, and closed the hearings at these points, under the belief, on my part, that I should be allowed to take testimony in relation to these particles in the city of New Orleans, the committee any one of the subcommittees pertaining to the parishes allotted to them respectively for investigation.

This arbitrary and, as I deem it, unjust act was accomplished by the majority of the committee against the earnest protest and votes of the republican members. I must be a subcommittee and the particles are also any one of the subcommittees are also any one of the majority of the subcommittee allowed in that parish, very few of whom appeared before the subcommittee, the others them being in New Orleans.

When the majority of the subcommittee adjourn from that place to New Orleans, the majority of the subcommittee allowed me to take the testimony at Clinton, I then franished, whose testimony I deemed important in this investigation, who resided in said parishes, but were then in New Orleans and did not dare to return to their homes. This motion was voted down by the majority of the subcommittee, but they permitted me to call any witness in New Orleans whon

By Judge NEW:

By Judge New:

Question How long have you been stationed here?—Answer. Since the middle of July, last year, 1876—about the 18th of the month.

Q. State whether you were here continuously from the time you came here until after the election.—A. I was, continuously, with the exception of being absent at Baton Rouge for three days at two different times.

Q. State whether you were about over the parish any during the canvass.—A. I was riding about over the parish a great deal—mostly all over the parish.

Q. State whether the campaign was quiet in the parish or not.—A. I only know of two cases of violence that I thought was on account of politics.

Q. Will you state those !—A. One was the beating of a colored man for attending a republican meeting here.

I don't know his name. I didn't make any note, as I turned him immediately over to the civil authorities, and he made an affidavit before a justice of the peace.

Q. Do you know the names of any parties who were arrested !—A. Skipwith and others, living near Shady Grove. They came in and said to me, five or six, that they had slept in the woods all night; that they were threatened with a whipping because they came and they went ack. A day or two after one of them came back badly beaten over the head. They had been sitting up with a corps—one of the brithers. There was two or three in the affair. They drove them out of the house, and beat one very bad with a pistol. He came in and made a complaint, and I took him before the civil authorities, and he made affidavit and the parties were arrested.

Q. Was there any trial!—A. I don't know.

What there any trial!—A. I don't know.

Q. Was there are trial with a pistol. He came in and had a was about all the defense.

Q. Did you speak to him about it!—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you speak to him about it!—A. No, sir.

Q. You shat no conversation with him on the subject!—A. No, sir, not at all.

Q. What was the other case!—A. It was a colored man by the name of Zeke Glover; think that is his name; he was a badly whipped. Be stated to me that he was whipp

By Mr. JOYCE:

Q. You say you came here last July !—A. On the 18th or 19th of July, I forget which.
Q. Now will you state what you heard in regard to the colored people being intimidated in this parish, with reference to voting !—A. I heard before I came here that the darkies were completely cowed, and that they did not dare to hold any republican meetings, and that they were being forced to join democratic clubs and would be compelled to vote the democratic ticket whether they wished or not. That I heard before I came here.

Q. Where were you stationed before you came here !—A. East Baton Rouge Barracks, Louisiana.

Q. What was the first you heard or learned after you came in regard to the same matter !—A. The first I heard or learned was colored men coming to me and asking what they should do; that they were being forced to join democratic clubs. I asked them if they joined of their own free will, and they said they were forced. I asked how they were forced. They said they were told that if they did not join they would have to quit the country or be whipped. I suppose some twenty or thirty different colored men told me that. I asked them why they didn't make affidavits, and they said they were afraid. I never could get any colored man to make an affidavit except that one who was beat over the head with a pistol. That is the only one that I could ever get to make an affidavit.

Q. You may state whether that continued; whether these colored men continued to come to you with these complaints down to the time of the election.—A. Down to the very day. I staid at the barracks with my company, and there was at least thirty came to me that day. I will say thirty, as near as I can recollect. They came in squads, stating that they were afraid to vote; that they wanted to vote the republican ticket, and that they had been told that if they did they would have to leave the parish. I advised them to go home and not vote at all. They said that they were afraid to do that; they had been told that if they did they would have whether you rode through the parish a good deal.—A. Pretty nearly over the whole.

Q. State whether, when you were out, you took pains to question colored men in regard to the voting.—A. I talked with them a great many times; talked with colored men from nearly all parts of the parish.
Q. What did you learn from them !—A. I learned from all of them that they felt as though they were obliged to vote the democratic ticket for their own safety. That was the general tenor of all their statements.
Q. State whether you have talked to them, and whether any of them have talked to you, since the election,—A. No, sir; there has been but very few that I have seen since the election, except a few who came to me and told me that they were obliged to sign an affidavit certifying that they voted the democratic ticket of their own free will. They said that if they had not signed it they would be turned out; parties rode up to their houses and put the affidavits before them, and they said that they signed it for fear of bodily harm.
Q. When you first came here, when did you first learn there were bodies of armed men riding through the parish intimidating colored people!—A. The only statement made to me about bodies of armed men was the night before the election.
Q. Did you hear anything about an organization called the regulators!—A. I have heard of them before I came here. I think they were disbanded shortly after I came. There was a piece in the paper to that effect; that they considered themselves disbanded, and any acts of violence hereafter should not be laid to the regulators, as they were disbanded. That was some time about the 1st of Angust, I think.
Q. These two cases of personal violence hat you have spoken of, after the investigation that you had made in regard to it, had you any doubt in your mind but what it arose from political motives on the part of the men who injured them?—A. I had very little doubt of it.
Q. From all that you have seen and learned in regard to the colored people of this parish, what do you say

Q. That was before you came !-A. Yes, sir.

JOHN A. REILEY, called by Mr. JOYCE, sworn by the chairman.

By Mr. Joyce:

Question. What is your age ?—Answer I am sixty years of age.

Q. State whether you are a minister of the gospel.—A. I am, sir; a regular minister of the gospel, connected with the Presbyterian Church of the Presbytery of New Jersey. I have been performing voluntary missionary work in this State for the last ten years.

Q. Where do you reside ?—A. I reside ten miles from here.

Q. In this parish ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you come from ?—A. I came from Blairstown, N. J.

Q. You may state, if you please, whether you know of your own knowledge, or whether it has come to you by report from others, any facts in regard to the intimidation of colored people in regard to their voting. State all you know about it.—A. Of my own knowledge directly, I have not been present when any persons have been intimidated. Persons have come to me and have told me that threats had been made to them. Men on my place have come and said that they felt masfe in their houses, and that their houses were entered into by men, and they wanted to move inside my yard for protection.

Q. How many colored men did you usually have on your place ?—A. Men, properly, there were perhaps twenty. About a little rising of twenty men.

Q. Were these the colored men that came to you and made these reports ?—A. Yes, sir.

O. A cainst whom were the complaints made ?—A. Well, unknown parties.

Q. Were these the colored men that came to you and made these reports?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Against whom were the complaints made?—A. Well, unknown parties.
Q. Against whom were the complaints made?—A. Well, unknown parties.
Q. State whether they said what the object of the visits of these men was to their houses?—A. They did not state. This one man that came as a representative character—that is, he spoke for the rest, and I would not accede to his proposition—he said this: "There is hardly a man could sleep on this place at night." He went away. I don't know whether I answered your question.
Q. My question was, what object these men had in visiting the houses of these colored men in the night-time. Did they make any statement to you as to the object!—A. No, sir, no statement was made. It was presumed. When I understood the case, on one particular time, there was a political meeting—a democratio meeting—held a short distance from this man's house; and two of this man's sonsin-law were there. They had been stopping in the neighborhood. They were stopping at this man's house; they were stopping with this man, and there was a raid made on the house, and one of these men was shot, and the other! was told; I know one was shot, because I saw his wound; he was in my yard, and the other, they had a rope around him; he got away.

Q. That was the night of that political meeting?—A. The same night of the meeting.

O. After the meeting !—A. Yes sin, I was that however their land.

Q. That was the night of that political meeting?—A. The same night of the meeting.

Q. After the meeting?—A. Yes, sir. I must state, however, that I don't think those connected directly with the meeting, (that is not my impression,) that they had anything to do with this matter at all, but they came the same night. Perhaps those parties had been at the meeting; but there are two classes of persons that attend such places, men who make speeches; and, so far as I have heard, their speeches have not been of an intimidating character, so far as I have heard, their speeches have not been of an intimidating character, so far as I have heard them; I heard them here, however, only, but I have not heard of any speeches reported of that character. But there are on the outside persons who come after and do this work; at least that was the case that night. I don't know anybody who knew who they were.

Q. When did this happen that you have related, about this man being shot!—A. That was two or three weeks before the election.

Q. During the last canvass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember where the meeting was held?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you may state whether any other complaints were made to you by colored men with regard to being intimidated.—A. One man came to me and told me that he was going to leave the place. I asked him why; and he said, "I think more of my life than I do of my crop. I want you to gather my crop, sell it, and keep an account. I will be back in two or three months." He said that, "My life is threatened." I tried to persuade him that it was not so. He said, "You may think so; but don't you know this man out here was killed, and this man out here was killed? Don't you know how they took me out of my bed and whipped me last winter? No; I am going to leave." He did leave. He remained away two months. He owned his own team, and he made large crops.

Q. When was it that those men you have mentioned came to you and made these complaints? About what time was it?—A. A couple of weeks before the electior Q. You m

Q. Did they volunteer to give those statements to you?—A. One did volunteer to tell me that he was waited upon by two men, and he was told unless he voted the democratic ticket he certaily would be punished, and one of them told him he was captain himself of the bull-dozers, and that he would see to it after the election.

Q. When did he say these men stated that to him?—A. A week or two before the election; a short time before.

Q. Do you think of any other instances?—A. Well, those persons have come to me off the place. There is a negro settlement about three miles below me, and most of them went and settled there from my place; bought lands and teams that they had made on my place, and goods. They settled there. That settlement was very much disturbed. They were working for nobody, but were supposed to be proprietors. They came to me one night very much excited, but that was at a time when I felt there was no cause whatever for it. I told them there was no cause; that "Nobody in the world will disturb you now; you need not think of such a thing; go home and sleep quietly in your beds; the election is over, and there are no persons going to interfere with you." They went home. They had proposed—they asked me if they could not come up on my place. This was after the election. Before the election I know only what they told me. They had not slept in their beds for weeks; even women told me that they had to lay between logs out from their houses. Now, they were frightened; that they could not say as to who was responsible for it; that I don't know.

Q. What did they say they were frightened about? What did they say frightened them !—A. I can only state what I have heard. They were told unless they voted the democratic ticket they would have to leave their homes. They were told so repeatedly.

O. State whether that was a short time before the election —A. No. sir. Not.

encd them [—A. I can only state what I have heard. They were told unless they voted the democratic ticket they would have to leave their homes. They were told so repeatedly.

Q. State whether that was a short time before the election.—A. No, sir. Not long before the election, one of those men living down there, who left on that account, said his life was in danger, and left the country, and was gone fully two months, and his family did not hear from him; he never wrote. They wrote and never received any answer from him. Their letters came usually into my box. I inquired over and over again for the letters, but never saw any. This man left and went into Bolivar County, Mississippi. He came back about two weeks ago. Now, I don't know whether polities had any connection with it. I heard his name in connection with it, because the old gentleman who sold them the land, only two or three days before his death told him, "Isaac, I guess you had better vote the democratic ticket."

Q. This old gentleman told that colored man so !—A. Yes, sir; and then Isaac said, "Need I vote at all!" And Mr. Lee (this old gentleman) said, "No, you need not vote at all." Some one present said, "He shall vote, or leave here."

Q. This man said so to Isaac !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Isaac left !—A. Yes, sir; he was the one who left. He was gone a couple of months. He just returned within the last two or three weeks.

Q. If there are any other instances which have come to your knowledge—people that have been intimidated—you may state.—A. Well, one man told me he had voted the democratic ticket, not because he wanted to, but because he was compelled to.

O. State how was that.—A. Said he. "I and all the other colored people on the

Q. State how was that.—A. Said he, "I and all the other colored people on the place of Mrs. Brown, we always voted the republican ticket. They held meetings, but we did not go to those meetings at all. None of us went to any of the meetings, and the night before the election men came and said, 'You know to morrow is election, and you are expected to be there,' and all of us said that we felt we ought to go, and we would have to go; and, perhaps, we thought if we did not vote we could not stay here, because they had told us so." The men were informed that they had to vote, or they could not live on the place. His language was, "Unless you go and vote the democratic ticket you must leave this place." I am positive now this was the night before the election. They said, "We all went and voted the democratic ticket."

Q. You may state whether you said anything to him in record to what he takes the takes the color.

democratic ticket."

Q. You may state whether you said anything to him in regard to what he told you.—A. I asked him if he knew who these persons were, and he said they were strangers to him. He said, "You are Mr. Reiley; that's the reason I speak to you." I said, "I understand why you tell me the story which you would not tell a democrat; you would not tell a democrat that story, would you?" Well, he stopped a little and he said, "Mr. Hardisty asked me why I voted the democratic ticket. I did not want to tell him as I told you, that is so; I did not want to tell him as I told you, but I told him I voted because the rest did."

Q. Now, sir, you may state when you had this conversation with that colored man.—A. It was this morning.

Q. This very morning!—A. Yes, sir; I asked him his name, and he said, Fizor Reiley.

Q. Now, sir, you may state when you had this conversation with that colored man.—A. It was this morning.
Q. This very morning!—A. Yes, sir; I asked him his name, and he said, Fizor Reiley.
Q. Did he tell you where he lived!—A. Yes, sir; Mrs. Brown's place.
Q. Well, sir, are there any other instances that occur to your mind, Mr. Reiley, of where you have heard complaints from these people!—A. Well, I met a man with an ox-team about three weeks ago; he had formerly lived on my place. I had not seen him for years, and at first I did not know him. I think he lived in the eighth ward. He related to me the old story of being compelled to vote the democratic ticket. That is about all. He spoke about their raids, and he likened it unto a sage-grass field on fire. Perhaps he colored the story a little; I don't know; that is the story he told me.
Q. Any other one that you know of?—A. Simply in regard to the last canvass I suppose you want to obtain testimony?
Q. Yes, sir.—A. There was one man on my place that voted. I never asked him why he voted. I never asked him one question. I saw him afterward and I was told he voted. The rest never told me one word before or after the election. Only one said, "We all knew that if you wanted us to vote you would have told us so. But you did not say anything to us. There has been so much disturbance, so we staid at home." There was not but one of the hands that was at the election at all; that was near the polls. I was commissioner at this place. I saw some negroes, two of them, as I went to dinner to Mansker's, as I was going right across, who stated to me, "Mr. Reiley"—I was recording the names of voters; they told me—"you see we voted the democratic ticket, but we want to tell you weld not want to do it of our own free will."
Q. Were these colored men?—A. Yes, sir; colored men. That is what they told me voluntarily. The first thing they said to me as to their way of voting—indeed it looked like an apology. I, of course, felt no interest in the questions; I voted my-self; the paris republican party.

Q. You may state now, Mr. Reiley, unless you think of some instances where you have had talk with colored people where they have complained to you—I will ask you another question.—A. Well, I don't know of any others occurring at this time.

Q. You may state how it has been in your ward and the wards of this parish generally in the previous elections of 1872 and 1874 in regard to forming republican clubs and holding republican meetings?—A. There were republican clubs in the different wards, but not being a politician myself, and taking no stock in them, I never encourage republican clubs in my place; in fact, discourage it. I did not have any taste in that direction. They had clubs at the upper end of the ward. I may say of the men on my place one voted, but scarcely ever attended political meetings. They had a majority in each ward of the parish in 1872 and 1874. There were republican clubs organized and republican meetings held through this year.

Q. How was it in this last canvass? To you know whether there was a republican club in the whole parish or not?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Do you know of any republican meetings being held; if so, how many?—A.

I never heard but once. One was held when Mr. Packard was here, the only one I have heard of until I heard of one in the court-house here that had been held. I heard of it day before yesterday, but I spoke to a number in regard to them, and they said they never heard of that many at all.

Q. The only one you heard of, in fact, was the one held here when Mr. Packard spoke?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend very many?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the spirit manifested by the outside crowd that day where the speaking was going on?—A. It was not pleasant at all.

Q. Please describe it.—A. Mr. Packard was interrupted with questions. He was asked questions. He begged of them to let him proceed. He treated the matter with a great deal of pleasantry, and stated, "If you do not let me speak I will make a failure; and, my friends, Nicholls would not like it if he was speaking here;" and with such things as that would pass it off. The interruption was repeated by some parties on the outside, with kind of jeers, and such words as "Will you let me ask you a question?" And so on.

Q. State whether any spirit was manifested, in language or otherwise, by any of these outsiders.—A. Well, I could see the parties who were on the stand felt scary, and they were glad to get away. They intenled to go to Jackson that night but the effect of themeeting here put that entirely out of the question—out of their line.

Q. The demonstration was such that they were alarmed for their personal safety?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Reiley, you may state, from what you know, and all you know, all you know or heard about these killings or whippings that took place?—A. I only heard of them. There were whippings; perhaps for different causes. Some were really whipped for stealing; one man—to be sure it is a little over the line in Baton Rouge; I sold him, myself, a lot of fifty acres. I gave him the contract, the article of agreement, to go and occupy it. He got permission from me to occupy the house and to build some additions to it. He took possession of it; w he came to buy that land he stated that he had half a dozen to buy the rest of the tract.

Q. Did you know of any other case? Did you ever hear of any other case of killing or whipping in this parish? I mean within a year or a year and a half past.—Well, within a year and a half, perhaps, yes. There was the killing of John Gair and a colored girl, his sister-in-law. I know nothing of the facts; I happened to be in the road next morning and heard it.

Q. Do you know whether you heard of any whippings?—A. Well, yes, I have heard of several being whipped, but for what causes I have not heard; I don't know. I know at this time, so far as I have heard, in my immediate vicinity I have not heard of any whippings that had any political bearing or consequences. It was threats simply. I did not hear of any whipping; no, I will recall that. On a plantation two miles below, the plantation of my son-in-law, there came a party one night and took one of his men out of bed, whipped him very severely, and told him if he wished to remain to notify certain men on my place, such and such men on that neighbor's place, that unless they all left they would be served in the same manner. They gave them their choice, to leave or be whipped.

Q. What was that for? Was it stated?—A. It was not stated.

Q. He was to notify certain men on your plantation?—A. Yes, sir; and men on different plantations, that they must all clear out or be whipped.

Q. Now, do you know of any theory of your own why there were not republican clubs organized or meetings held in this parish during the last campaign?—A. I have a theory.

Q. Let us hear what it is.—A. My theory is that there was manifested a determination, a desperate determination, on the part of the democratic party to carry this election—to carry it anyhow. That sentiment was prominent from week to week—that the republicans had had their time; that their time was up; now that they were driven out of the parish, that there should be no more of the same kind here again.

Q. In the campaign the same week—that the republicans had had their time; that their time was up; now that they were driven out of the parish, that there should be no more of the same kind here again.

Q. In the campaign the same sentiment was spoken!—A. Yes, sir. I do not believe anybody would have been safe on that account to have canvassed the State against the democrats. I asked a neighbor—a very strong democrat—I asked him if I had been a politician and started out wi'h A. B. C. and D. if we could have got through without sacrifice of life. He said he did not believe we could. I don't think it was possible. On election-day, however, I must say, I never saw so quiet and peaceable an election. I could have voted five hundred republican tickets if the tickets had been here. But there was no hope of carrying on a canvass, as it was believed it was not safe. It was not because the republican party did not want to carry the election, but because they saw no hope under the circumstances of accomplishing anything; the pressure was too great.

Q. So that you think it was not even safe for any man to have gone about canvassing for the republican party in this parish or to organize republican clubs!—A. I am very positive of that in my mind that it could not have been safe.

Q. You may state whether a great many leading republicans have been driven out of this parish since this last canvass.—A. Yes, sir; they were all colored republican office-holders.

Q. Owing to this last canvass?—A. This last canvass only commenced in the middle of last summer. I don't know that they were driven out since then. They had begun in the summer before with the recorder and sheriff and a member of the Legislature, an ex-member of the Legislature not in office; they had all gone, and those left of the republicans in office I think resigned. I would like to be posted in regard to them. I know some of the members of the police juty resigned. Why they resigned I would like somebody to tell me. I know one that did. I saw his resignation published in the Patriot-Democra pleased.

Q. You may state, if you please, in regard to the several republicans voting for democrats at the elections prior to the last.—A. I don't know that I can remember; but there was a gentleman that was voted for for member of the assembly, one for sheriff, and parish judge, who were democrats, were elected in this parish when this parish was largely republican. There has been a great deal said about that.

Q. I wish you would explain, Mr. Reiley, if you please, if I understand the state of the case, what was this attempt which was made, and you say was successful—A. There was, years before, an attempt to make a compromise, to have compromise between the parties, it being stated that the republicans had a majority, yet the democrats, it was felt, were entitled to some representation in the parish, and the proposition was made this last year, the election of 1874, that the republicans should concede to them the parish judge. They said, "Let us have the parish judge."

should concede to them the parish Jacgo.

Q. What was his name, if you recollect?—A. Lyons, and a member of the assembly—Legislature.

Q. What was his name?—A. William H. Pipes; both very excellent men. They were placed on the republican ticket by the previous arrangement made. That is my understanding of the thing. I voted one of those tickets. I was voting for Judge Lyons and my friend Pipes. There was a gentleman nominated for sheriff; I cannot recall his name.

Q. Captain Fuqua, that was elected sheriff. Do you know anything about that ?—
A. He was a democrat; said to be.
Q. Elected sheriff?—A. Yes, sir; I don't know when; my memory don't serve me.
Q. When did you first begin to hear of any secret armed organization in this parish? State if you remember.—A. Well, the first, I think, that I heard of it was in the summer of 1875. I think so.
Q. Did you ever hear anything about what they called them, the White Leagne or the Regulators!—A. I don't know really by what name they went, whether White Leagne or what. I don't know what they called themselves. We generally called them Regulators.
Q. Did you ever hear anything of that organization in connection with political matters, in connection with intimidation of voters, either in a body or in squads?—A. No, sir; I don't think that they were so when they operated at all. I don't think that they were so when they operated at all. I don't think that that were so when they operated at all. I don't think that not midation, so far as it was practiced at all, was done publicly, either by reading or holding political meetings. I don't think that it was done in that way; at least I have no knowledge of it. I think what was done was done at home. Thus, if I had wanted to intimidate, I could easily have intimidated them, my men, to vote. I believe it was done at home generally.
Q. That was the way it was mainly done?—A. I think the.
Q. What is your opinion as to whether these men came here, and as to whether these men who would come here and testify—do you think that they have been intimidated or affected contrary to their will !—A. I think they are to a great extent under intimidation. I have no doubt they are, because they are easily frightened anyway, just as that man I met this morning!—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is it not your opinion that at the present time the colored people of this State, as far as you have any acquaintance, are completely owed and terrorized by white politicians !—A. Well, sir, they are politically.

New Orleans, Janu

NEW ORLEANS, January 11, 1877.

JAMES DE GREY sworn by the chairman.

By Mr. JOYCE:

By Mr. Joyce:

Question. State your age and where you reside.—Answer. My age is thirty-six. I reside in Clinton, East Feliciana, La.

Q. You may state whether you know of your own personal knowledge, or whether you heard by report or information, as to any acts of intimidation or violence against colored people and colored voters in East Feliciana to interfere with their right of suffrage during the last campaign in that parish. Give instances and names as far as you can.—A. To commence back I would have to go back over one year, where an instance occurred that, in my opinion, brought forth intimidation in that parish. There was the case of John Gair, Robert Ray, (member of the Legislature at the time.) T. M. J. Clark, (recorder of the parish) and one or two others; there was Sam Chapman, that had to leave the parish on account of their safety. That occurred in July, 1875. Perhaps it would be better for me to go back a few months further, and state how these things came about. At one time there was a report in a certain neighborhood in the parish that is called Possum Corner of an alleged uprising of the colored people. This uprising, as I know and as I believe, was for the protection of one man who was president of a club.

Q. What club!—A. Of a republican club in that section of the parish, the fourth ward. He became alarmed from reports that he had heard of a threatened whipping that he was to receive—five hundred lashes. His name was Lewis Jones. When this became known among his friends, several of them flocked to him to prevent thus occurrence. The white people in the neighborhood became very much alarmed, and especially women and children, &c., and were very much alarmed; and I have every reason to believe that a great many of the white nem were alarmed. The matter was adjusted and no blood shed. Lewis Jones—at the May term of court of 1876 there was a true bill found by the grand Jury. This occurred in 1875, this uprising. In 1876, at the May term of court, five six, perhaps, would follow them up, and th

By Judge NEW:

What occurred on July 23, 1876?—A. This statement and kind of street broil. The statement by Ray?—A. Yes, sir. Let me see whether it was 1875 or It is 1875; this was in 1875.

By Mr. JOYCE:

By Mr. Joyce:

Q. This matter before the term of court was made in 1875 instead of 1876?—A. Yes, sir. I was in the town of Jackson. I was tax-collector of the parish, and was in town that day assessing the town of Jackson. When I came home that night, after dark, there was a great deal of excitement both among the white people and colored people, and it was told me what was said and what had been done during the day. There was a committee that waited on Ray and asked him if he had made such a statement. Ray denied that he had made such a statement. It was reported by these two men who had said that they had overheard Ray make this statement, that one of the parties said that he would go to Ray's house and bring him out to make a statement on a stand in the court-house. This party went as far as Ray's gate, so I was told, to call Ray out. Ray would not come out of his house. There were several parties, a great many parties on the street—white men—and Ray feared to come out. This was on Saturday night, probably about nine o'clock. Ray was hiding in another house from his own. He had to leave his house. Ho was afraid and I went to him and told him there was no trouble; everything had quieted down, and he could go home with safety. During that evening I saw probably three or four or five parties walking around with guns in town, but didn't pay any particular attention to it. Ray believed that his house was guarded, was surrounded so that he could not get out. This was Saturday night, as I have stated. Sunday morning or Sunday before noon I went down town and went into Ray's house. This matter was discussed in his house, and so on, and everything seemed to be at peace, no trouble or difficulty, no strangers in town or anything of that kind; but about twelve o'clock I saw parties walking around through town with their guns and saw men on horseback leaving town and going out. There was one or two colored men told me to keep off the streets. From one square I saw a colored man, Henry Smith, the sheriff at the time. He motioned to me with his hand to keep back. I didn't know what he meant by it, but I went home. I live on the outskirts of the town. I went home between three and four o'clock in the evening, probably four o'clock in the evening. I was informed that the white people were coming from all directions in the parish to the town.

probably four o'clock in the evening. I was informed that the white people were coming from all directions in the parish to the town.

By Judge New:

Q. This was on Sunday evening!—A. Yes, sir. It was reported that the colored men were marching on the town to burn the town down and to kill, &c. It appears from a statement made by a white man living a mile and a half from the town of Clinton, that he had seen on his place, or near his place, fifteen or sixteen men under arms—colored men. They were lying down or sitting down with their arms there. They were questioned what they were there for and they would not make any statement whatever. This man came to town and reported or caused this alarm. Sunday night, I don't know what time, Gair and Ray and Clark left. The next morning I was told that they had left the town during the night. I came to town early on Monday morning. I say early—eight o'clock—after going to my breakfast, and the streets were thronged. From all directions there were armed men riding on horseback and some on foot, all over town. I stopped where there was a small group. I was not so long there before I heard my name mentioned. My name was mentioned in connection with this uprising, and I knew of this thing, &c. It was not long before I became engaged in this conversation, and I denied this thing. I didn't know of any uprising; had no knowledge of any uprising. I was charged with being seen talking with John Gair, and talking with Henry Smith, the sheriff, and holding private conversations, &c., and that I was have known of this uprising. Colonel D. C. Hardie was the spokesman of this crowd. He told me that they believed, and I took from that that the people believed that I was instrumental in bringing this thing about; that I knew that the colored people were uprising to burn the town of Clinton, and kill, &c.; and that I was charged with knowing these facts, &c.; and that if there was any difficulty between the colored people and white people, that I wand the colored people were uprising to b

Q. What I want you to do is just simply to state whether you know, of your own knowledge, or whether you heard by report, of any cases of intimidation of white people against colored people of that parish in regard to their voting. State it just as brief as you can.—A. I am going to say this: When I came to New Orleans and recommended a certain white man, a prominent leader of that parish—when I returned to the parish I was not in the town of Clinton one hour when a committee waited on me and asked me what I had gone to New Orleans for and for what purpose, and when I had stated my purpose one gentleman told me that I must not have anything to do with that or my life would not be worth anything. That was on a certain day.

pose, and when I had stated my purpose one gentleman told me that I must not have anything to do with that or my life would not be worth anything. That was on a certain day.

Q. Who was the man ?—A. D. C. Hardie. Probably it was the next day. I won't sav positively whether it was the second day or third day afterward. Colonel Hardie and Dr. Hall were a committee that waited on me again and told me most distinctly and positively that I must not have anything to do with politics. I must not make any recommendation, either radical or democratic. I must take no part whatever, or if I did my life would not be worth the snap of his finger. I wish to say this: They represented themselves to me as coming to me as my friends in this matter.

Q. Was there any other attempt to frighten yon?—A. It ran along for a week or two. They said in connection with that, they told me, "You have been making officers and unmaking them for the last ten years, and you must stop it."

Q. Who told you that !—A. D. C. Hardie.

Q. Were there any other threats used toward you?—A. This matter ran along for a week or so, and there was a committee come.

Q. Another committee!—A. One of the gentlemen, Colonel Hardie—he was one of the committee to make—they came to me to make a recommendation for sheriff, and there was three names submitted to me to take my choice out of the three names to recommend for sheriff. I recommended T. L. East, a good man. I telegraphed that night to Governor Kellogg for him to be appointed sheriff. He was not appointed sheriff. The matter ran along a few days. I will say that Captain Joseph A. Norwood was recommended.

Q. What I want you to state is if there have been any threats used against you by anybody except what you have mentioned.—A. I mention that and other threats that I have heard since by other parties.

Q. State them.—A. When I stated there was resolutions read—when the chairman of the meeting read "responsible for all future troubles"—I heard afterward that a gentleman made the remark that the gentleman wh body would have said, him " Q. What do you know about colored men being intimidated in that parish? State the instances that you know...A. I know several men who have been whipped—one man by the name of Charles Wilson who was whipped, and a man by the name of Will Chaney; he was hung nearly dead, and let down again. A man by the name of Monroe Meyers.

Q. What was done to Monroe Meyers?—A. He was whipped. It was so reported that he was whipped; that they took him out and threatened to hang him, &c. Dangerfield Sloan was whipped. A man by the name of Lawson, on Miss Lou Lane's place—her carriage-driver. There were two men whipped on Capt. Joe Norwood's place; I don't know their names. There was some man on Major Mundy's place. There was a man whipped on Mrs. Silliman's place.

Q. Do you think of any other? Were these men colored men?—A. Yes, sir; all of them.

man whipped on Mrs. Silliman's place.

Q. Do you think of any other? Were these men colored men?—A. Yes, sir; all of them.

Q. Have you continued to reside in Clinton since the election?—A. Yes, sir with the exception of the time I have been in New Orleans.

Q. What do you know about any republican tickets being sent into the parish of East Feliciana?—A. I don't know whether there was any sent there or not.

Q. Did you receive any?—A. No, sir; I did not.

By Mr. BEEBE:

- Q. What is your occupation?—A. Well, sir, for the past year I have been deputy terk in the tax-collector's office. I have a small plantation in connection with
- that.
  Q. How many acres is your plantation?—A. Three hundred and forty-five acres.
  Q. How long have you lived in the parish of East Feliciana?—A. I went to that parish in the year of 1886.
  Q. You have resided there since then?—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. What was Jones indicted for ?—A. I cannot tell you what heading he was brought under. I cannot say what it was.
  Q. Who was the man you recommended for sheriff in that parish?—A. T. L.

Q. Who was the man you recommended for sheriff in that parish?—A. T. L. East.
Q. Is he the only democrat you over recommended for sheriff?—A. No, sir; I recommended ademocrat after that—Dr. J. T. Monoham, the present sheriff of that parish, or was up to the time of the election.
Q. Was it in consequence of recommending East and Monoham that Colonel Hardie waited on you?—A. No, sir; it was in consequence of the recommendation of E. H. Lipperman.
Q. Did you recommend Lipperman for sheriff?—A. I did.
Q. When?—A. That was in 1875.
Q. A white man or a black man?—A. A white man.
Q. Where did he live?—A. In the first ward; about six miles from Port Hudsen. He owned a large plantation there.
Q. Were you present at that meeting when those resolutions were passed?—A. No, sir; I was taken out of the crowd and taken away.
Q. You were not present?—A. No, sir.
Q. How many were present at that meeting?—A. I sappose on that day there was three or four hundred men.
Q. You did not hear Stone say what you reported that he said?—A. No, sir; I was told it by outside parties.
Q. Do you know the Rev. Mr. Riley, of that parish?—A. I do.
Q. Did you ever see or hear of any colored men being whipped on his place?—A. Yes, sir; I know of one man being whipped on his place and one shot.

By Mr. BEBEE:

Q. These cases of whipping and lawlessness you state from hearsay !-- A. Yes, from hearsay.

By Judge NEW:

Q. You were back in Feliciana during the canvass ?—A. I was there during the whole time.

whole time.

Q. And up to the time of election ?—A. Yes, sir; and voted at the election.

Q. You were not mistreated any way yourself during the canvass or on the day of election ?—A. No, sir; not on the day of election.

Q. Have you been there since the election ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You met with Colonel Hardie and Stone and other critizens ?—A. Stone and I don't speak. I met Colonel Hardie. He came in the office and transacted business in the office.

Q. You were not molested or mistreated in any way when you went back ?—A. I have only been here eight or nine days. I left the parish to come down here.

Q. I want to know whether you have been back to the parish since the election ?

—A. I didn't leave until seven or eight days ago; I came to New Orleans and went back. I came down here to make a return.

Q. Have you always voted the republican ticket ?—A. Always, sir.

By Mr. JOYCE:

Q. There was no republican club in that parish during this last canvass !—A. No sir; we could not organize a republican club.

Q. Was there more than one republican meeting held there !—A. There was only one republican meeting held there, and that was when Mr. Packard and party were up there. That was in the town of Clinton.

Q. State whether it would have been safe for a man to have gone through that parish organizing republican clubs and holding republican meetings, in your opinion.—A. No, sir; I don't think it would have been safe.

Q. Do you know of any effort having been made to organize a club !—A. In only one inst enc.

Q. Where was that !—A. There was a colored man by the name of Alonzo Brooks. He said that he was going to organize, but for some reason he did not.

Q. Do you know of any other effort being made !—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of Alonzo Brooks having got together any of his republican friends with a view to the organization of a club !—A. There was at one meeting, where Judge Lyons, I think, was, and Mr. McVey. They were on the democratic side, and Alonzo Brooks came up; I think it was in the town of Clinton. He said he would try to organize are publican club, but it never came off.

Q. You don't know that he made an effort to organize it !—A. He told me that he didn't dare to do it.

Q. You say that he told you that he didn't dare to do it !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear that any republican tickets were sent to that parish?—A. No. sir; I wish to say this, that there were certain statements made by Major Wedge in Clinton. It is not my name, but I took it for my name; it was James Grabam, as stated in the dispatch. I think it must have been intended for me. He said that I told him that it was a part of the programme to not have republican tickets. I don't think at any time I ever told Major Wedge any such thing at all.

By Judge NEW:

Q. Did you know before the election there would be no republican tickets in that parish?—A. No, sir; I didn't know. I was down herein NewOrleans three weeks before the election, and I know that Kellogg and Packard urged me to do all I could, and, if nothing more, to carry one box. I told them that there could not be anything done in that parish.

Q. You made no efforts yourself to have republican tickets in your parish !—A. No, sir; I didn't try to do it. I told Major Wedge in one conversation, "I even said we will put you on as parish jndge and give you the State senator." He said that it could not be done; he would not accept the position, and could not run on the republican ticket even if he was put on as parish judge. In the conversation I told him, "You have carried this thing too far, and you won't succeed in it as well as you think; you have carried this bull-dozing arrangement too far."

Q. Did you mean by that to say that the democratic vote of the parish would be thrown out!—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you mean !—A. I meant that they would not give the republicans any chance to put any republican tickets in the field.

Q. Do you know that the democrats of that parish were anxious that there should be republican tickets in the parish !—A. Yes, sir; I think so; Probably three or four days or weeks before the election, when they knew it was impossible.

Q. Do you not believe that if republican tickets had been in that parish they could have been safely voted at Clinton and at other points in the parish on the day of election !—A. I don't believe that could have been done.

Q. You don't believe that it could have been done!—A. They might have voted fifty or one hundred in the parish. The thing was so fixed that they could not have got a republican vote.

Q. If fifty or one hundred could not have voted in the parish, what reason can you give why five hundred could not have voted in the parish !—A. The best reason why; because there was such intimidation carried on in that parish right along for a year before that time.

and have been here for the last month or so, my home, but I am in New Orleans, and have been here for the last month or so.

Q Why are you stopping here in New Orleans 1-A. There was such a reign of terror existing in the parish of East Feliciana on account of politics that, I being a republican, I was afraid that if I had staid there I might have been killed, merchant there, and have kept store there for the last three or four years.

Q. You may state, in the first place, if you know of your own knowledge of any acts of intimidation of any white democratic that parish, either yourself or any other colored man-if you called your own white the democratic that in the parish of the your own knowledge of any acts of intimidation of any white democratic shall be in the young of the colored man in the last of the parish of the your own knowledge of any acts of intimidation of any white democratic shall be in the young of the leading eithers they only the young of the leading eithers they have a surfage-shop in Jackson, and I know of colored man being notified by white men to join the club.

Q. Give the names of persons as far as you can.—A. I remember Thomas Cook, a colored man; he has a carriage-shop in Jackson, and was advised by one of the leading eithers there. Dr. Zond, a white man.

I was a price of friendly advice to councet himself with the democratic club, and came to my atore and tool inc, the eventy and the proposed to grave of Thomas Caney, an intimate friend of mine, and one who has always heretoforeacted with me in politics on the republicant side. He said Mr. Powers and handed him the credentials. He said Mr. Powers and handed him the credentials. He said Mr. Powers and handed him the credentials. was going to do, and I told them that I was not going to have anything to do with politics, and was not going to vote.

Q. Why were not you I—A. I was afraid. I am attempting to convey that idea into your mind now. I was absolutely afraid. I was elected in 1872 to the Legislature in that parish by the republicans; beat the democratic candidate in 1872. In 1874 I was a candidate and was defeated. There was a division in the republican party, and I was defeated.

Q. By whom ?—A. By Ray, a republican. Mr. Pipes ran as a democrat. It was a swap. In my end of the parish my friends would vote for Pipes and Law rather than vote for the other wing of the republican party. The animosity was so great in the other end, where Gair lived, over in Clinton, they would vote—make a swap for Gair for the senate and Pipes for the Legislature. They would make that swap rather than vote for the other wing of the republican party. By that means they divided us, and Pipes was elected to the Legislature.

Q. Would it have been safe for a republican to have gone through that parish holding republican meetings ?—A. I rode over from Clinton with Mr. McCleman, a prominent democrat, in July, 1876, in a buggy, and he said, "that the republican party is dead in this parish," and he said, "I understand that Packard has announced in the paper that he would be here on the 15th of September. My God! if I was in his shoes I would not come to this parish. If he comes here I bet he will never get out."

Q. What was your opinion as to the result of the election of that parish of East Felicians if the colored people had been left free to vote as they pleased?—A. My dear sir, they would have elected the republican ticket by a large majority. There is eight colored men that voted the democratic ticket. We always counted on about eight that we knew would vote the democratic ticket. They were under the influence of democrats in the parish. They were employed by democrats, and they used their influence over them, and took them to the polls. Some would take them in their buggies. Some are old, feeble men, and they took them right on to the polls and voted them, and put them in a buggy and carried them back home; that is, these democrats would. Outside of that there is not a democrat in the parish. That is my honest conviction.

Q. What do you know about any republican votes having been sent to that parmanache or democrates in the parish. They were employed by democrates, and they used their influence over them, and took them to the polis. Some would take them in their buggles. Some are oil, feeble men, and they took them right on to the fine their sources. Some are oil, feeble men, and they took them right on to the fine their buggles. - Q. How many colored votes, in your opinion, did Mr. Pipes get for the Legislature when he was elected !—A. Mr. Pipes got the solid white vote, which is about 800, I think—800 and some odd; I don't knew exactly how many he got.

  Q. How many colored votes do you think that he got!—A. I think he got about 400.
- 400.
  Q. You say that at the Packard meeting at Clinton Mr. Reiley was afraid to preside ?—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. You were not afraid ?—A. Well, I thought I would risk it.
  Q. You did preside ?—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. You were not disturbed while presiding ?—A. I was not disturbed, but the speakers were.

- Q. Were you disturbed on your way home? Was any personal disrespect shown to you?—A. No, sir; I jumped on my horse—
  Q. Answer the question whether any personal disrespect was shown to you.—A. I didn't give anybody an opportunity.
  Q. Was any personal harm done to you?—A. No, sir.
  Q. You say that you would not have been afraid to vote the republican ticket on the day of election?—A. No, sir.
  Q. Do you mean to say that if you had offered to vote in East Feliciana on the day of election that you believe that you would have been injured?—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. How do you account for the fact that two or three republican votes were cast in that parish on the day of election and the persons who voted were not harmed for it?—A. I can account for it this way, that some man picked up a democratic ticket and wrote a republican's name on it and voted.
  Q. That is your opinion?—A. That is my private opinion.
  Q. Do you know such to have been the fact?—A. I don't know such to have been the fact.
- the fact.

  Q. If those who voted the republican ticket and made use of no strategy for the purpose of deceiving others, how do you account for the fact that they were not harmed? If those who voted the republican ticket voted it without any disguise, and without employing any strategy to conceal the fact, how do you account for it that they were not harmed?—A. I account for it in this way: the object of the democrats was to carry the election. If they carry the election, one or two votes against them didn't hurt.

  Q. Why do you believe then you would have been hurt if you had voted?—A. I suppose if I had attempted to vote the republican ticket and the balance of the colored people saw me they would have attempted to vote it, and it would have brought on a fass.

  Q. Suppose there had been no other colored people voted the republican ticket.
- against them didn't burt.

  Q. Why do you believe then you would have been hurt if you had voted!—A. I suppose if I had attempted to vote the republican ticket and the balance of the colored people saw me they would have attempted to vote it, and it would have brought on a fuss.

  It is not a fuss.

  It is not been no other colored people voted the republican ticket at the poll where you voted, do you think you would have been harmed for voting it? Suppose you had gone to the poll in East Feliciana and voted the republican ticket, and there had been no other republican ticket voted at that poll but yours, do you believe that you would have been harmed!—A. Well, I believe this: I believe that the democratic party held me responsible individually for any attempt on my part, to have put a republican ticket in the field, or to have voted the republican ticket and the fact that my voting the republican ticket would develop a preconcerted plan to have more republican tickets.

  Q. Will you be kind enough and polite enough to answer my question? I ask play voted they on believe if you had gone to one of the polls in East Feliciana and to the property of the polls in East Feliciana and ticket!—A. Yes, sir; I do.

  Q. You say that Governor Kellogg was determined that there should be an election held in East Feliciana. That is your statement!—A. That is my conclusion?

  Q. Can you tell how it happened, if he was so determined the vae an election held in East Felicians, that there were not republican tickets in the field in that parish to be voted!—A. Please state your question again.

  Q. Can you tell how it happened, if he was so determined the have an election held in East Felicians, that there were not republican tickets in the field in that parish to be voted!—A. Please state your question again.

  Q. You knew its contents when you signed it !—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. You say, "I have heard of many instances of colored men in said parish having been whipped and shot for attending republican meetings." State the many cases that you have heard of where colored men were shot in that parish for attending republican meetings in the parish.—A. The plural is a mistake.
  Q. Well, meeting.—A. That is correct.

Q. State the many cases where men were shot for attending a meeting?—A. I had reference to that particular case. I did not mean shot, but shot at. I suppose that is a typographical error.

Q. State the many cases you have heard of men being whipped all over the parish. First confine yourself to the many cases where men were shot.—A. I told you that I have reference to that particular case.

Q. You do not then pretend to known of any other instance than that?—A. Not for attending a meeting in 1876.

Q. Now state any case of which you thought or referred to where a colored man was whipped on account of having attended a republican meeting.—A. This man Nelson that I have referred to.

Q. You say that he was whipped on account of having attended the meeting?—A. Yes sir.

Q. How do you know that he was whipped on that account?—A. Because I heard him say so. He said because he attended the meeting he was whipped.

Q. What was his given name?—A. I don't know his given name.

Q. What part of the parish does he reside in?—A. Near Jackson.

Q. Where did he say that he was whipped!—A. About two miles from Jackson.

Q. Why where did he say that he was whipped!—A. About two miles from Jackson.

Q. How long after the meeting?—A. I think it was about three weeks.

Q. Hold you parser hear of any other searce of his believe thinged?

McCuen.

Q. How long after the meeting $\frac{1}{2}$—A. I think it was about three weeks.

Q. Did you never hear of any other cause of his being whipped $\frac{1}{2}$—A. No, sir.

Q. You said a while ago that you could not remember of any other case than the one where they were sitting up with the corpse connected with this meeting $\frac{1}{2}$—A. So far as any effort of shooting was concerned.

Q. Take the year of 1875. Can you state any case in that parish where a colored man was shot on account of having attended a republican meeting; if so, who was it $\frac{1}{2}$—A. What we understand—we understand a man to be a republican when he attends a republican meeting and votes the republican itcket.

Q. State any one in the year 1875, in that parish, who was shot on account of having attended a republican meeting $\frac{1}{2}$—A. I know of the sheriff, Henry Smith; he is a republican and attended republican meetings all the time, and figured conspicuously.

Q. What republican meeting did he attend an account of which he was a did to the parish the part of the parish that parish the parish that the part of the parish that parish that parish the parish that parish a republican an attended republican meetings at the time, and guite conspicuously.

Q. What republican meeting did he attend on account of which he was shot in the year 1875 !—A. There was no republican meeting in 1875.

Q. What republican meeting at any time prior to 1875 was Henry Smith shot for attending !—A. They were shot because they were republicans.

Q. You don't know of his being shot on account of having attended a republican meeting !—A. Well, not outside of his being a republican.

Q. Why did you state in your affidavit that it was on account of having attended republican meetings that republicans were shot !—A. I just told you that that was an error.

an error. Q. This, then, is not true ?—A. That portion is not true. That is an error that an error.

Q. This, then, is not true $\frac{1}{2}$—A. That portion is not true. That is an error that crept in.

Q. How many colored men have you known to have been killed on account of political reasons in the parish of East Feliciana since the 17th day of November, 1875 \cdot\ Name them.—A. I think there has been some. There was several.

Q. Name one since the 17th day of November, 1875, killed in the parish of East Feliciana for political reasons $\frac{1}{2}$—A. I didn't make that in the affidavit.

Q. You just state, if you can, whether you remember one that you are willing to swear to was killed in the parish of East Feliciana since the 17th day of November, 1875, for political reasons—a colored man—A. We understand there that every man—every man who has been killed in that parish since the 25th day of 1875—was killed for political reasons. This murder of a colored man by John Jackson—I cannot think of the colored man's name—was always understood to be done for political reasons.

Q. When was he killed $\frac{1}{2}$—A. Last year.

Q. What time in the year $\frac{1}{2}$ Do you mean 1875 $\frac{1}{2}$—A. No, sir; 1876.

Q. Who killed him $\frac{1}{2}$—A. John Jackson.

Q. Who did he kill $\frac{1}{2}$—A. A man living on John Stone's place. I cannot think of his name.

A. Who did he kill $\frac{1}{2}$—A. A man living on John Stone's place.

Q. Was that in 1876 or 1875?—A. In 1876.

Q. How do you know that that was for political reasons?—A. That is my understanding.
Q. What did you hear that makes you believe he was killed for political reasons?—A. The terrorism as carried on by the democrats as to republicanism.
Q. State some specific fact, or some specific information, relating to that particular killing that came to your ears, on account of which you concluded and now conclude that he was killed for political reasons.—A. I cannot state anything more than the fact of his being a republican.
Q. That is all the reason you can give?—A. Yes, sir. I heard he was a very active politician, and for that reason he incurred the dislike of this man John Jackson.
Q. That is all the information you have upon that subject, on account of which you thought he was killed for political reasons!—A. Yes, sir.
Q. State any other, will you, since the 17th of November, 1875, where a colored man was killed in that parish for political reasons!—A. It was my belief there was another man, but I cannot remember his name.
Q. I would like very much to have his name.—A. I would like to think of his name.
Q. In what part of the parish did he live?—A. In the eastern part of the parish.
Q. By whom was he killed?—A. By a man by the name of Thompson.
Q. What was Thompson's first name!—A. I cannot think of it.
Q. Killed in 1876?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You cannot tell the colored man's name?—A. I cannot think of the colored man's name.
O. What rearticulars did you ever hear about that killing?—A. I power hear laws.

Q. Killed in 1876?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You cannot tell the colored man's name?—A. I cannot think of the colored man's name.
Q. What particulars did you ever hear about that killing?—A. I never heard any particulars, save that he was killed.
Q. You heard one was a democrat and the other a republican?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The man was a colored man and a republican?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the man who killed him was a white man and a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You never have heard the particulars of the killing?—A. No further than that.
Q. You never have learned anything about what was said between the parties or by the parties to each other, or any of the immediate circumstances or surroundings connected with the killing?—A. I understood that the gentleman had a crowd of white men with him, and this colored man was coming from church. This white man met him and shot him, and he said: "The damned radical insulted him, but he would never insult any other white man."
Q. Do you know whether the man who killed the man was named Eugene Thompson?—A. I don't know.
Q. Didn't you hear Eugene Thompson was shot at by the colored man whom he killed very shortly before?—A. No, sir.
Q. You never heard that i—A. No, sir.
Q. You never heard that a shot was fired by the man killed, the shot entering the very sack of meal Thompson was sitting on?—A. No, sir.
Q. These particulars are new to you and unheard-of by you before?—A. Yes, sir, new to me and unheard-of before.
Q. Name another, if you please, killed for political reasons since the 17th day of November, 1875.—A. I gave it as my impression. I know of a colored man who was killed down—that was in the southeast portion of the parish, but I cannot think of the man's name who killed him.

Q. Do you know whether he was white or black ?—A. The man was black; the man that killed him was a white man.
Q. Do you know what that was for ?—A. I cannot say. I can give you my opinion.

Q. Is it your opinion that every time a white man kills a black man, that he kills him because of his politics !—A. No, sir.
Q. Is not this true, that if you in any case should hear of a colored man being killed by a white man, and should not hear some particular reason for it, would you not conclude at once that he was killed for political reasons !—A. No, sir.
Q. You would not !—A. No, sir.
Q. Take the case you were last referring to; what do you know about that case !—A. I know nothing of my own experience.
Q. What information did you get that led you to believe that he was killed for political reasons !—A. I have been informed that he was killed by a white man.
Q. By a white man or white men !—A. By a white man.
Q. For what reason !—A. I had no other reason save the fact that they differed in politics.

Q. For what reason !—A. I had no other reason save the fact that they differed in politics.
Q. Was that given to you as a reason?—A. That is the only reason I ever heard.
Q. By whom was it given to you!—A. It was general report.
Q. None of the circumstances were named!—A. No, sir.
Q. No particulars at all!—A. No, sir. I hear of killing that has been done up there, that there has never been any investigation.
Q. I suppose you have heard in your life of the killing of a man when you did hear of the circumstances connected with it at the same time!—A. Yos, sir.
Q. Is it not true that when you heard of a killing you always heard of the circumstances attending and surrounding the killing!—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Will you name another case!—A. I cannot name another.
Q. You state in your affidavit filed before the returning board that no less than thirty colored people were killed in East Feliciana during the last twelve months for political reasons, and this affidavit is sworn to by you November 17, 1876. Now give us these thirty persons, if you can.—A. I cannot name thirty persons.

Now give us these thirty persons, if you can.—A. I cannot name thirty persons.

Q. Why did you state that not less than thirty persons were killed?—A. My mind is not like that book. I cannot keep every word down. You must give me time to explain. I know of killing that was done in the night-time. I know of crowds of white men. I have seen them meet and go off in the evening and come back in the morning, and when they would come back I would hear of some colored man being killed.

Q. Give us some of these cases?—A. I remember the murder of Isaac Mitchell, Q. Was that in East Feliciana?—A. No, sir; West Feliciana. This crowd went from East Feliciana.

Q. Confine yourself to East Feliciana.—A. I remember—I could not name the man—it got to be such a current thing—almost every day.

Q. Give us some of them.—A. I never paid much attention to it. Somebody would come in and say, "There was a negro killed out here last night." I remember a man that was killed down in the southern portion of the parish of East Feliciana, on the line of the second and third wards.

Q. What was the name, if you can remember?—A. I cannot think of the man's name right now.

Q. Give us the name of the man who killed him, if you remember.—A. I don't know the man who killed him. He was killed by these crowds, as was supposed.

Q. What was T.—A. Fighteen hundred and seventy six.—last year.

Q. What year !—A. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six—last year.
Q. What year !—A. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six—last year.

Q. What year !—A. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six—last year.
Q. What did you learn about the cause of his being killed !—A. I never heard any cause.
Q. You don't remember any reason that was given at the time for their being killed !—A. No, sir; saving the general opinion.
Q. Did you hear any opinion of that kind expressed by any particular person that you can remember !—A. I heard it expressed by everybody; by every colored man.
Q. Did you hear white men express that opinion !—A. None except they were republican white men. I have spoken to colored republicans—I remember having a conversation with Colonel Powers, and he said this: I said, "What are you going to do! This killing is going on in this parish. What are we going to do about getting up a republican ticket?" And he says, "My God, you cannot get up any republican ticket here."
Q. Give me some other case, if you remember.—A. I cannot give you a distinct case. You want me to give you names.
Q. Narrate the case. If you remember the name, state it.—A. You asked me about men being shot for political reasons in East Feliciana. I remember of Marshal Keyer.
Q. What year?—A. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six.
Q. How do you know he was shot for political reasons?—A. That was my understanding; that was the general rumor.
Q. Did you ever hear of any of the special circumstances that surrounded the killing!—A. I did not, except that I understood that the sheoting was done by a man by the name of Pemble.
Q. What tircumstances did you learn about it as to whether they had a quarrel or trouble?—A. I understood there was some difference between them.
Q. Did you ever hear what the difference between them !—A. Yes, sir; I heard there was some difference between them !—A. Yes, sir; i heard there was some difference between them !—A. Yes, sir; is the call the sum of the properties of the white people defied the sheriff.
Q. You did hear there was some difference between them was a political difference.!—A. I he are that the difference to the white people defied the sheriff.

Q. You have stated that you heard that this man who was killed by Pemble—A. He was not killed.
Q. You have stated that you heard that this man who was killed by Pemble—A. He was not killed.
Q. Shot —A. Yes, sir.
Q. You heard that there was a difference between them. State whether you can now state what you heard that difference was.—A. No, sir; I cannot.
Q. Then you don't pretend to say that the difference you heard between them—A. Well, no, sir; I can't say that positively.
Q. Give us another case.—A. I cannot remember any other case.
Q. Have you stated all the cases you now remember?—A. All the cases I can remember at this time.
Q. Why did you fix the number thirty?—A. I gave it as my knowledge. I kept up more closely with them at that time, but I have been in other business since I have been here, and I have not paid much attention to it.
Q. Has not your memory been refreshed by having filed this affidavit and by answering the interrogatories?—A. That has been some time ago.
Q. It was in November. Would not that refresh your memory?—A. Yes, sir; if I should look over the affidavit and apply my mind to it, I should recollect now.

Q. You have stated some five or six cases which occurred in 1875 and 1876 on account of political reasons. Why did you fix the number at thirty !—A. Because I am pretty certain that I am not mistaken.
Q. You believe now that since November 17, 1875, there has been as many as thirty colored persons killed in the parish of East Feliciana for political reasons !—A. Yes, sir; I do.
Q. Who was it that you said attempted to burn your store !—A. I didn't state who it was

Q. Have you ever been informed who did it !-A. Will you expect me to give you a name?

Q. Yes, sir; it is your duty to state what you know.—A. You will expect me; you won't compel me?
Q. It is your duty.—A. I don't wish to jeopardize my life, but should I give the names of parties here and I went back to East Feliciana, I might be killed for it.
Q. Were you ever told who the parties were? Did any person say who burned your store?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. By whom were you told?—A. This was told me in private.
Q. By whom were you told? —A. This was told me in private.
Q. Did he ever tell you that more than one did it?—A. Yes, sir; more than one.
Q. Did he give their names?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Whose names did he give?—A. I refuse to give the names.
Q. You refuse to answer the question!—A. I refuse to give the names of those parties.

Q. You say your store was saturated with coal-oil !—A. Yes, sir. Q. How do you know that fact !—A. I saw and smelt the coal-oil the next morn-

Q. You say your store was saturated with coal-oil !—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How do you know that fact!—A. I saw and smelt the coal-oil the next morning.
Q. Was your store burned down !—A. No, sir.
Q. It was not burned down !—A. No, sir.
Q. To what extent was it burned!—A. All the front door was burned black.
Q. What time in the night did it happen!—A. My clerk told me it was about midnight.
Q. Did he see it!—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did he happen to see it! Where was he staying!—A. The oil was poured on the door and he was inside all the time, and some of it ran inside and it made such a fuss that it waked him up. He slept in the store.
Q. Did you learn that the burning was attempted by white or colored persons!—A. White persons.
Q. Had you any trouble with your family or kindred that caused you at the time to suppose that some of them did it and caused you to so express yourself as to those persons!—A. No, sir. I had some trouble just before that, but I didn't suspicion that it was done by them.
Q. Did you ever express such an opinion afterward!—A. No, sir; I don't remember of ever expressing an opinion of that kind. In fact, I know that I never expressed an opinion of that kind.

Q. Twice the same night ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it the same parties each time?—A. That was the information that I received, sir.
Q. You say you had some difficulty with some members of your family?—A. Before that.
Q. How long before ?—A. It had not been a great while before.
Q. Can you give us an approximate idea of how long before ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, how long before ?—A. Two months or two and a half.
Q. Had you any difficulty with any parties, relatives or others—any altercation, two and a half months before ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who ?—A. I had a fuss with a gentleman there. He was no kin to me.
Q. Who ?—A. I had a fuss with a gentleman there. He was no kin to me.
Q. Who to colored ?—A. A. colored man.
Q. A democrat or a republican ?—A. A democrat, but he was dead.
Q. Who built your store—the building; who constructed it ?—A. One man by the name of Bohelia.
Q. Who owns the building ?—A. I own it.
Q. Did you own it at that time ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it insured ?—A. Not a dollar, sir.
Q. You spoke of a doctor giving you some advice, or giving some advice to a colored man, a friend of yours, to join the democratic club. You didn't hear the doctor give the colored friend that advice, did you ?—A. No, sir; the colored man told me so.
Q. You spoke of a convention called to meet at Point Coupee by Mr. Weber.—A. Yes, sir.

e so, Q. You spoke of a convention called to meet at Point Coupee by Mr. Weber.

Q. You spoke of a convention cannot be all the summer, a while before the election.
Q. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. For the purpose of nominating candidates to be voted for in the parish?—A.

Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the candidates !—A. Mr. Weber was a candidate, and some other gentleman; I don't remember of another candidate being in the field. There were several men spoken of, but I don't believe there was any other name presented before the convention. Captain De Grey was.

Q. De Grey was a candidate !—A. It was said that he was a candidate. His name was presented before the convention. I did not hear of his being a candidate before.

Q. You spoke of what one J. Goten told you that the mayor, Mr. Hazzard, had said. Did you ever speak to the mayor about it !—A. No, sir; I never discussed politics with him.

Q. How many men were engaged in the whipping of Nelson !—A. To my knowledge, there was two; so they informed me.

Q. Who were they !—A. This was in the evening, when the democrats were returning from the Nicholls meeting in Clinton.

Q. Who were the men !—A. He told me that it was John W. Smith and John McCuen.

McCuen.

Q. How many attended the meeting addressed by Packard and others at Clinton?—A. I suppose there was about three hundred colored people and two hundred and fifty white people.

Q. How long had you known Frank Crilly?—A. I have known him ten or fifteen years.

years.

Q. How did he come to tell you who these men were that set your store on fire ?—
A. Well, he told me, to satisfy me, that it was done for political reasons?

Q. Was he a white man and a democrat?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you that the others who did it were white men and democrats?—A. Yes, sir; he told me their names, and I knew they were white men and democrats.

Q. Did he enjoin you to secrecy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On what account?—A. Because if it was known that he told me who it was done by he would be afraid of the men himself.

Q. Your clerk also told you who they were?—A. No, sir; he did not know who they were

Q. Your elera also compute which such they were.
Q. Did not you state that they spoke to him?—A. He spoke to them. He was inside of the store and they were outside.
Q. How many of them were there?—A. He didn't say how many there were; he simply gave me the names of some of the parties.

Q. Who put the fire out !—A. My clerk.
Q. How long was it after the first time that it was the second time fired !—A. Well, he said that they fired it and he put the fire out, and went back and was standing up in the store, and he heard the oil flowing on the front of the house. They had a can and were putting the oil on the front of the house, and he said that he heard it and spoke to them, and they ran off.
Q. They did not set it on fire the second time !—A. No, sir; they didn't put fire to it.

O. They did not set it on fire the second time !—A. No, sir; they didn't put fire to it.

Q. Did anybody else see these men except this man, Frank Crilly?—A. Not to my knowledge. He prevented them from firing the store the second time.

Q. What time of night was it?—A. It was about midnight.

Q. You say that there was a division of the republican party in 1874?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who headed the different parties?—A. I headed one and John Gair the other.

Q. Were you identified with Weber?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which was the regular organization of the republican party, the Weber or the Gair division?—A. The Gair division was the regular organization.

Q. Then you headed the organization which was not the regular organization?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the largest republican majority ever polled in the parish of East Feliciana?—A. I think it is a thousand, or something about a thousand.

Q. Was that on a full vote?—A. Yes, sir; a full vote.

Q. How many white democrats are there in the parish, do you state; about eight hundred?—A. Yes, sir; probably eight hundred.

Q. Now, in the questions which Judge New propounded, you stated about one man, Thompson, having killed a man. Was he a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who told you that Thompson killed him?—A. I was told by several different men I can name.

Q. Any one who saw it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who told you who saw it?—A. A man by the name of John Austin.

Q. Is he a white man or a colored man?—A. A colored man.

Q. What did he tell you?—A. He told me that he shot him, and there was a great crowd not far from him when he shot him; a crowd of white men.

Q. Where was it?—A. It was on the road coming from church.

Q. Did you ever hear of his shooting a colored man?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since the election did you hear of his shooting one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of his shooting any one before the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear of his shooting a cooled man.—A. Yes, sir; I heard it since the election did you hear of his shooting one?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it since the election?—A. Yes, sir, Q. A colored man?—A. No, sir; a white man.
Q. Didn't you hear of his shooting a man in the leg in a drug-store in Jackson?—A. No, sir; I heard of him shooting a man before a drug-store and killing him.
Q. Where did the ball hit him?—A. In the abdomen.
Q. Did you never hear of his shooting a man and hitting him in the leg in Jackson?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was he white or colored?—A. A white man.
Q. Did you ever hear of his shooting any other colored man other than the one you spoke of since the election?—A. No, sir; I don't remember.
The witness then stated as follows:
The man that done the firing and put the oil on the store, Mr. Crilly told me, was a man by the name of Richard Harbor, who lives in the town of Jackson, and James Stratton.
Q. Both white men and both democrats?—A. Yes, sir; they were the two men that they seen at the work.

By Mr. Joyce:

Question. What is your age !—Answer. Twenty-nine.

Q. You may state where you lived there!—A. I live in East Feliciana Parish, four miles north of Clinton.

Q. How long have you lived there!—A. Well, sir, I have lived there all my life. I lived in Texas a year and a half. That has been three years ago. With that exception, I have lived there all my life.

Q. You may state whether you know of your own knowledge, or from information that you have received from others, whether the colored people of that parish have been intimidated by white democrats.—A. Well, sir, it is my opinion that it is so, and I can only give you facts that I have heard.

Q. You may state all you know about it, or what you have heard in regard to that subject, running back, say, for the last year and a half or two years.—A. Well, sir, I could tell you my version of the whole matter. It commenced about two years ago. The Lewis Jones affair was the first that I heard of, and I think that was seized upon by certain men who claimed to be leaders of the democratic party in East Feliciana as a pretext to carry the election this last year just gone. The Lewis Jones affair, as I understood it, came about in this way: There was a man by the name of W. R. Skipwith who had been on an expedition with some parties to Bayou Sara after Weber. On his way back—I think he was a little drunk—and on the road he met up with some negroes, and they asked him, I think, the question, what was the matter; how this thing came up; and he made the remark to them that if such men as Weber and Lewis Jones were taken out and hit five hundred lashes, that would settle it all. That is my understanding of what Skipwith said, a I suppose they added to it a little, and told Lewis Jones that Skipwith said he was going to take him and hit him, and I think he, perhaps, had pickets out on the road and stopped people. He gathered a big crowd around him. The first Leard a man by the name of Pemble and Thomas J. Hunt came to m to sit down. One or two jumped at him; I believe Powers struck him with his saber, and Billy Nash was about to shoot him, and one man had to sit down on him to keep Nash from shooting him. There were witnesses there who went right over to the negro camp and created some sit. After a while they got matters adjusted. Some gentlemen went over into Lewis Jones's camp, and they fixed up matters. After that I never went out, except on one occasion, and that was on the day that John Gair was killed, because I did not feel disposed to get into trouble. I did go to Clinton on the day that John Gair was run away. I rode in to see what was the trouble.

to the negro comp and created some site. After a which they got matters adjusted. Some gentlemen went over into Lewis Jones's camp, and they fixed up matters. After that I never went out, except no more occasion, and they fixed up matters. After that I never went out, except no more occasion, and they fixed up matters. After that I never went out, except no more occasion, and they fixed up matters. After that I never went out, except no more option was in regard to the effect of these kind of gatherings.—A. They exaperated the white people. Judge Dewing, at the next term of court, I think, charged the grand jury, so I termed—I think I read the charge—he charged the grand jury pretty strongly in regard to the entry the next the next term of court, I think, charged the pentil jury a little differently from what he charge—he charged the pentil jury a little differently from what he charged the grand jury, and the pettil jury a sequited him. That excited went to the pettil jury, it is not to the pettil jury, it is not to the pettil jury a sequited him. That excited went is not to the pettil jury and the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited went is not to the pettil jury and the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited went is not to the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited went is not to the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited went is not to the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited the pettil jury as pettil the lim. That excited went is not to the pettil jury as pettil pettil jury. I have a pettil jury as pettil pettil jury as pettil jury as pettil pettil jury as pet

Q. What do you think—is it your opinion that a republican would have been safe during the late campaign to have gone through the parish of East Feliciana organizing republican clubs and holding republican meetings!—A. I have no doubt in the world about it. I think they would be in very great danger. In fact I would not like to have risked it.

Q. Living as long as you have, and knowing as much as you do about the people, you say you would not have risked your life to do any such thing?—A. No, sir; and I am a little uneasy about risking my life to go back there now.

Q. You have always been a democrat?—A. I never voted any other ticket. I voted for Tilden and Nicholls at the last election, and never voted any other ticket. Q. What, in your opinion, would have been the result in that parish if the colored people had been left free to vote as they pleased !—A. I believe they would have voted almost to a man. I think the party was a unit in the last election, but were affected by this maltreatment that they had received. I believe I told a great many people there—at least told neighbors around—that if they left the negroes alone in the last election of this State, if they could wipe out their record, if the democratic party could have wiped out their record for the last two years in Louisiana and other Southern States, that they would have carried the State without any trouble—carry it to a certain degree. They could who made terms or dictated their own terms, I believe, in our parish.

Q. You have no doubt but if these men had been left to vote as they pleased in this parish that the parish would have gone republican?—A. Yes, sir; I believe so without any doubt. I believe they are more of a unit to-day, if they could vote freely and fairly, than they ever were before.

Q. State whether, in your opinion, there are two classes of democrats in this parish; that is, a class of men who are above this class of thing and would not tolerate them, and would not countenance them, and, on the other side, a set of desperate m kind.

Q. Your idea is, in this parish, to say nothing about anywhere else, that the bad element of the democratic party have control instead of the conservative, better element?—A. Yes, sir; I think they have taken control. I don't think they are in a majority. It did not prove so at the primary election. The issue at the primary election was the "bull-dozer" and the "anti-bull-dozer" ticket. That was the issue. That was in the primary election held on the 18th of July. The anti-bull-dozer ficket was carried. It footed up about 145 majority. I think Charlie McVey beat Cross 145. Dr. Perkins beat his opponents. He had two opponents, and he doubled both of them together.

Q. Your idea is that, although the conservative, the better element, of the party is in the majority in the parish, yet that this other element carries it by force !—A. Yes, sir.

Yes, sir.
Q. By a strong hand !—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did the colored men take any part in that primary election !—A. No, str; not even those who voted the democratic ticket all the while. They were not allowed to vote, as I understand it.
Q. Do you know why they didn't vote !—A. I suppose the reason was that if they allowed them to vote they might come in and name a man that they didn't want. That would have been equivalent to allowing them to vote fairly.

By Mr. BEEBE:

By Mr. BEEBE:

Q. You say that they did not even allow those colored men who had always voted the democratic ticket—didn't allow them to vote at the primary election?—A. No, sir; no colored man voted at the primary election.

Q. Were there colored men who had always voted the democratic ticket.—A. Yes, sir; several.

Q. How many?—A. Several. I can get you the names of them easily if you want them. There are several of them.

Q. How many are there in the parish who have always voted the democratic ticket?—A. Probably a dozen.

Q. What is the number of colored votes in the parish?—A. I think eighteen hundred or two thousand; I won't be positive about that.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. I am a farmer, four miles north of Clinton.

Q. What is your present occupation ?—A. I am a farmer, four miles north of Clinton.
Q. Is that the only occupation you have ?—A. That is all I have.
Q. When were you in the parish of East Feliciana last ?—A. I left there Wednesday, and came down on the boat.
Q. You came down, did you, on the boat ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know George J. Reily ?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you come down with us on the boat ?—A. No, sir.
Q. Were you served with a subpena in Feliciana to appear before this committee !—A. I was served with a subpena to appear before the Senate committee -at least the sergeant-at-arms leftit at the house. I rather dodged to keep out of the way, to keep from coming. I was informed, as I had seen the subpena, I was bound to come.
Q. If you had received a subpena to appear before this committee, would you have attended !—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Would you have testified !—A. Yes, sir; I would have testified.
Q. Would you have testified as you have here now !—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Would you have felt that you were in any more danger there in testifying than here !—A. I would.
Q. Will you explain why you are in more danger in testifying there than you would be in testifying to the same facts here!—A. For this reason: I don't know that I will go back yet; I rather think it doubtful. I am going to stay here until I find out how the land lays.
Q. Who are you afraid of ?—A. I don't know that I am afraid of anybody. I am not afraid of any one.
Q. I do not mean to impugn your personal courage; but through whom do you apprehend interference !—A. From a set of men that belong to the democratic party.
Q. Will you name some of them !—A. I would not like to do that, because I don't apprehend interference:—A. Then a consider the party.

Q. Will you name some of them?—A. I would not like to do that, because I don't know. I don't know that I am afraid of any one man.

Q. Have you in your mind the name of any one man from whom you would apprehend personal violence on account of your having testified to your understanding of the truth as it affects that parish?—A. I don't know that I have any one man. I have heard that they cursed and abused me around pretty extensively.

Q. Who has?—A. A man by the name of Lewis More.

Q. Who told you?—A. My brother told me. He was told so by a young man in Clinton.

Clinton.

Q. They didn't hear him say this ?—A. I understood that he cursed me, and they went to him and asked him, and he denied it.

Q. Where does he live ?—A. In Clinton.

Q. How old is he?—A. He is about my age, I guess. He cannot be so old—twenty-six or twenty-seven years old.

Q. Were you in the parish during the period of registration ?—A. I was.

Q. Was the registration conducted free ly and peaceably ?—A. The registration, so far as I know, was conducted peaceably and freely.

Q. Was there any disturbance on election day at any of the polls ?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Was it, so far as you know or have heard, a pea ceable and quiet election ?—A. It was the day of election.

Q. You say there are two classes of people, a conservative class and a class whom you regard as embodying what is known as the intimidating element there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated, also, that the conservative class, so you distinguished them, outnumber the other class?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what proportion do you suppose the two parties exist?—A. I don't know. I told you as near as I could—Mr. McVey's elect a majority over Cross; the line was not strictly drawn, because the conservative class did not want to make the issue, because it might have lost them votes. Mr. McVey got a majority over Cross of about 145.

Q. Speaking from your knowledge of the people—and you have quite an intimate knowledge of the people—from that stand-point of the eight or nine hundred voters, how many of them do you suppose deprecated the action of the other class?—A. I suppose at least one-half, perhaps a little more than one-half—the only way that I can judge of the matter—that was simply an opinion. The only means that I have of judging was in regard to this primary election.

Q. You believe that of the whites of this parish, from your knowledge of those that live in the parish, that one-half or thereabout would resort to acts of lawlessness for the purpose of coereing or intimidating colored voters?—A. That is my opinion, sir. I know of a great many who was opposed to it. Mr. Kernan was opposed to it at the outset, and I expect he is to-day, if the truth was known.

Q. You say that you don't believe that you would have been safe in attempting to organize republican clubs in that parish?—A. I don't think republicans would have been safe.

Q. Have you in your mind any man or men whom you can give the name of who would have intered them?—A. I think that the leaders that had control of the class.

have been safe.

Q. Have you in your mind any man or men whom you can give the name of who would have injured them?—A. I think that the leaders that had control of the democratic organization on the last election would have injured them; in fact, I heard it all over the parish.

Q. Who are the leaders?—A. K. A. Cross, I think, is the head center.

Q. Do you think he would have countenanced any injury of colored men?—A.

Yes, sir. Q. Who else?—A. I den't know but what Dr. Sanders was a leader. He a great bull-dozer; Joe Jones was another great bull-dozer; Captain Joe Norw was another.

was another.

Q. What act of violence did you ever know Cross to commit in that direction?—
A. As I said a little while ago, I don't know of any act of violence.
Q. Do you know of any act of violence ever having been committed by any of these men that you have named?—A. I have heard that they killed John Gair.
Q. Who did you hear killed John Gair? Did you hear that Cross was one of the parties?—A. I heard it asserted and heard it denied. I have heard both ways. I don't know whether he did or not.
Q. Will you be kind enough to name any other act of violence perpetrated by any of these men you have named?—A. As I stated, I don't know of any. I simply heard.

on the content of asserted and heard it denied. I have heard both ways. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Will you be kind enough to name any other act of violence perpetrated by any of these men you have named !-A. A. S I stated, I don't know of any. I simply heard.

Q. Do you know of an attempt having been made to organize republican clubs in that parish during the canvass !-A. I know Alonzo Brooks and his father had a republican meeting a short while before the election, and I know it created quite a six around there.

G. Do you know of an attempt having been made to organize republican clubs in that parish during the canvass !-A. I know Alonzo Brooks and his father had a stix around there.

G. When you say that they commenced two years ago I acted with the demicration of the commenced this system of intimidation, whipping, &c., do you speak from personal knowledge or from rumor !-A. I don't speak from personal knowledge of from rumor !-A. I don't speak from personal knowledge about any of it. I never saw them whip anybody.

Q. Did any democrats of recognized position in the party ever intimate to you, two years ago, that they proposed to resort to this system of whilpping for the purposed to resort to this system of whilpping for the purpose of the property of the ber for what—whether he went to a republican meeting or would not join a democratic club. He said that the man ran off.

Q. Did you ever hear of any colored man being whipped in which either of the Reilys participated?—A. I have heard some men say that George Reily was a bull-dozer himself.

Q. When you say that these men are bull-dozers, do you know it from any knowledge you possess of your own of their participating in it?—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it. I was not a bull-dozer.

Q. You did go out on one or two occasions?—A. I went out when the negroes were plundering the whites; that was the first report that came out. I found that there was no truth in it, and I went back home.

Q. How long were you out?—A. Perhaps five or six hours. It might have been twelve bours. I left home about twelve or one o'clock, and got back home the next evening.

Q. How far was this Camp Jones from Clinton?—A. I think it was, perhaps, ten or twelve miles.

Q. How large a company of whites were there with you?—A. There was three hundred, I reckon.

Q. Who was in command of them?—A. Colonel Powers, I think, was the chief commander. They elected officers, and first elected Mr. Reily.

Q. Who was this judge whom you say charged the grand jury with reference to that matter?—A. Judge Dewing.

Q. What was he politically?—A. I think he is a republican.

Q. White or colored?—A. A white man.

By Mr. Joyce:

Q. Do you know anything about how the vote stood in East Feliciana in 1874!—
A. The republican party was split. Mr. Pipes was a member of the Legislature, elected by the democrate.
Q. Do you remember whether this was the way the vote stood: democratic, 847; republican, 1,688!—A. Yes, sir; it may have been that way; I don't recollect at all

q. Do you remember what the number of registered voters was in 1876; whether it was white men 1,004, colored 2,127, or about that proportion !—A. I think that is about it; I am not certain; I would not testify to the facts of it because I don't know, although I was clerk for a short while on the board of registration, but I could not keep the figures. I don't remember now; that is about it.

Question. You belong to the United States Army !—Ans wer. Yes, sir; the Thirteenth Infantry; second lieutenant.

Q. State your age.—A. Twenty-seven.

Q. State whether you were stationed at any time in the parish of East Feliciana.—A. I was there from about July 18 to November 13, 1876, or about that time.

Q. You may state what you know in regard to the condition of the affairs of that parish during the registration and election, the feeling of the white and black people there, and whether the fact came to your knowledge that there was any intimidation of colored voters by white democrats. State all you know about it. If there were any specific instances brought to your attention state them.—A. All If there were any specific instances brought to your attention state them.—A. All If there were any specific instances brought to your attention state them.—A. All If there were any specific instances brought to you to to as they pleased, and when I would ask them if affairs were quiet in the parish, they would say that they were straid to vote as they pleased, and when I would ask them if affairs were quiet in the parish, they would say that they were not; that they were afraid to vote as they pleased, and when I would ask them if affairs were quiet in the parish, they would say that they were not; that they were straid to vote accept they voted the democratic ticket. No intimidation was brought directly to my notice, but I know of such cases having occurred from what Captain Rogers told me of two cases that were brought before his notice, he being the commanding officer.

Q. You were there under him !—A. Tes, sir; I did; short distances.

Q. State whether you took pains to talk with the colored people.—A. From Baton Rouge I went to Clinton by land; I was ordered to go. Every other plantation that I would come to I would hast and ask if they felt safe and secure; the answer would be that they did not. I was in command of a mounted detachment.

Q. You she whethe publican papers by the postmaster, and he had distributed them among the colored people out in the country; that is the reason that was assigned.

Q. From what you saw and know of the condition of affairs in that parish, would it have been safe for a republican to have gone in there and organized republican clubs, do you think?—A. I would not have done it myself without my uniform.

Q. You think your uniform was all that protected you?—A. Of course I would not have done it either way, because I had nothing to say on either side. I mean if I was a citizen.

Q. How do you think it would have been if a man should have gone there and

Q. How do you think it would have been if a man should have gone there and held republican meetings; do you think he could have done that safely; canvass, as we call it—gone there and made republican speeches !—A. No, sir; I do not think he could, safely, with the same license that would be given the other side, because I think that would be called incendiarism—stirring up the negroes, or something of that kind.

By Mr. Beebe:

Q What State did you enter the Army from !—A. I am a graduate of the Military Academy.

Q. From what State were you appointed !—A. California.

Q. Were you a resident of California at that time !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made an affidavit before the returning board, did you not !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you familiar now from memory with the substance of this affidavit !—A. No, sir; I have not seen it since you made it !—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Captain Rogers investigate the case of the negro who was whipped and about whom he told you!—A. Yes, sir; I think he did.

Q. Did he tell you that the negro was whipped because he had read some republican papers before he investigated it or afterward !—A. He simply told me that the negro was whipped on that account.

Q. When did he tell you that !—A. After he had seen the man.

Q. Was that the negro's statement, or was it the result of the investigation !—A. That I don't know. He just mentioned it to me at the time. It was something that I had nothing to do with.

Q. Did you mingle among the white people in that parish !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear them complain about pifering and depredations of their stock, crops, and so forth !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it your opinion that there was such depredations committed !—A. I think there have been, in some cases; yes, sir. I don't think it justified the extreme measures that were taken.

Q. Did you have any difficulty with any colored men yourself, in the parish, personally !—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any angry talk with any colored person !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did that occur !—A. It occurred at a saloon in Jackson.

Q. Whil' you state who?—A. I forget his first name; I think his name was Robinson.
Q. Where did that occur?—A. It occurred at a saloon in Jackson.
Q. Was his name Aaron Robinson?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know what he was politically?—A. I think he was a democrat.
Q. Did you threaten to shoot him at any time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In order to be fair to you, make any statement in reference to the matter you wish.—A. We all happened to be in the saloon together. I had come down to find Captain Rogers. While standing in there some altercation arose between this Aaron Robinson and parties in the saloon. This Aaron Robinson drew a revolver. I didn't see him do it, but he drew a revolver and fired at Captain De Gray, and hit him in the head—in the scalp. At the time that the shot was fired, Captain De Gray and Aaron Robinson had gone into another room. I heard the shot and jumped into the other room, and saw Captain De Gray covered with blood. In the excitement of the moment I drew a revolver and said that I would kill the man, but put up my pistol and went home with Captain Rogers. There was nothing political in it at all.
Q. Was that the only occasion in which you had any altercation with Robinson?—A. Yes, sir; I didn't know him iy sight. I would not know him now.
Q. Did you know anything about what brought on the difficulty between Robinson and De Gray?—A. No. sir; I did not. The difficulty was first with Colonel Powers and Aaron Robinson.
Q. In your presence?—A. Something that I didn't see.
Q. You don't know how the altercation came about?—A. I don't know how it started. I don't know, because my back was turned to the parties. The first that I saw of the thing was when I was standing off a little distance, and this man Robinson was standing by the counter. Then they went in the other room, and the shots were fired.
Q. Did he go in the other room before De Gray did ?—A. That I don't know.
Q. Did he go in the other room before De Gray did ?—A. That I don't know.

the shots were fired.

Q. Did he go in the other room before De Gray did ?—A. That I don't know.

Q. Did he go in the other room before ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you arrest Robinson ?—A. No, sir; I had no right to arrest any one.

Q. Were not you in the parish for the purpose of preventing disturbances ?—A.

Yes, sir; the command was.

Q. But you felt that you had no right to act except upon an order ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on duty at the time ?—A. No, sir; I was in citizen's dress—just come in from a ride.

By Mr. JOYCE:

Question. You may state your age and residence.—Answer I am thirty years old.

Question. You may state your age and residence.—Answer I am thirty years old.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I am residing now, at present, in New Orleans.

Q. Where did you formerly reside?—A. In the parish of East Feliciana on the 28th, if I am not mistaken, as near as I can recollect, of 1875, but I have been back in the parish several times since.

Q. Why did you leave there, if you please?—A. I have lived in the parish all my life, with the exception of from that time, and about three years and six months I was in the United States Army; then I returned home, and I have lived there up to this time.

Q. Why did you leave there, if you had any reason?—A. As I consider, I had very good reasons to leave. I was in fear of my life, and protection to myself.

Q. And came to New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir; came to New Orleans.

Q. State whether your life had been threatened.—A. I had been threatened in a good many instances, which made me believe it was not safe for me to be there.

Q. You may state what office you held in that parish at that time.—A. I have been deputy sheriff there from 1872 to 1874, deputy sheriff two years. I was elected as constable of the fifth ward, and then elected deputy sheriff two part in politics as a republican.—A. I was considered one of the leaders. I was the last secretary of the fifth ward, and and and active part in behalf of the republican party.

Q. State whether you undertook to organize a republican club; if so, what was the fifth-ward club, and always have taken an active part in denal; of the republican party.

Q. State whether you undertook to organize a republican club; if so, what was said or done to you about it ?—A. I was told frankly out—

Q. State in the first place whether you attempted to organize a club?—A. No, sir; I did not in the second ward. That has been here lately, just before the election.

Q. Go on in your own way, then.—A. The commence of this trouble—there was a great deal of excitement through the country. I suppose you have been going over the Lewis Jones affair a good deal. I will commence there.

Q. State whether you have been back up there since that time to do anything; if so, what, and what did you learn?—A. I left the parish for this cause, that my brother-in-law. John Gair, had been murdered a short time before I left, and my sister-in-law, called Babe Matthews, was hung also. I was told by parties there that myself nor no other republican leader in that parish would be allowed to organize a republican club in that parish; that the white folks had made up their minds to carry that parish by all hazards. I was told in that connection by several parties that they intended to run every republican leader out of that parish.

Q. Who were these men? Give their names —A. I can give names of several that I have heard make these remarks. I heard from John Brown; B. M. G. Brown is his name. He is an old man; the old man and his son. I heard Lewis Moore state so on two different occasions. He was not talking to me then, but he made it in the post-office. He was talking to other parties, and said that they intended to run every damned radical leader out of the parish, or kill the last man here. I heard Captain Joseph A. Norwood say that they intended to carry it. I could not stay there, and let the parish go on that way, without taking some part in trying to show the people the way to vote, and doing what I could on behalf of the republican party, and I left the parish.

Q. You may state whether you were threatened, yourself?—A. Yes, sir; I was visited and threatened twice. One time when I was threatened there was a party came to my house disguised and questioned me a good many questions. Just after the row started in the parish, some way or other, it seemed as if they were trying to find out what I knew about it. If I did know, I would not have told them; but I knew nothing about it, and told them so. They told me that I had better look out for myself.

Q. Did you know them?—A. I recognized them before I left.

I knew nothing about it, and told them so. They told me that I had better look out for myself.

Q. Did you know them?—A. I recognized them before I left.
Q. Give their names.—A. David I. Norwood and John Heath, I think, were the two men. They came to my house disguised in Federal uniform, playing themselves off as Federal officers. Then, at another time, about a month after—Q. Who is this David I. Norwood? Is he the son of Joseph A. Norwood?—A. Yes, sir. Then, at another time, there was a crowd came up there. I don't know who these were. They were disguised, and I could not recognize them. They were armed with revolvers and shot-guns.
Q. Do you know whether they were white men?—A. Yes, sir; they were white men; the language was that of white men. I knew there was no colored men in the parish who could use language like they did because I am personally acquainted in that parish, know very nearly every one. They told me just like this: that if they heard of me organizing or attempting to have anything to do with the republicans of that parish, that it would not be worth—nobody would know what would become of me—they would not know what would become of me. I was led to believe at different times that I could not stay there. I came to town and visited town. I was abused on the road and several other places by Bob Pemble and Alick Skipwith.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. I had always been a peaceable kind of a man, and excepted.

at different times that I could not stay there. I came to town and visited town. I was abused on the road and several other places by Bob Pemble and Alick Skipwith.

Q. What did they say to you?—A. I had always been a peaceable kind of a man, and everybody gives me that name. I was in Horton's, and they were in there. They raised some diagurbance, and some of them allowed that they were going to give me a hell of a whipping, and every one who had anything to do with the republican party, and then gave me notice to prepare myself. I left town, and I have never seen them since.

Q. Did you see Allen Myers after he was whipped !—A. Yes, sir; he had to leave the parish and went back.

Q. Do you know who whipped him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Dvou know who whipped some time after that. I saw them in July, I believe.

Q. What did they tell you about what they were whipped for?—A. Anstin told me that he was whipped because—some time just before I left the parish.—I hardly know how to come at that—he was whipped because he had made a speech at a republican meeting. At that time they were attempting to raise a company to defend themselves.

Q. Did they say that these men told them so?—A. Yes, sir; six or eight men whipped them; they told me that.

Q. You may state whether you went to the parish last October, and what your object was in going.—A. I went in October some time. I don't recollect the day, but the latter part of October some time. I went there at the solicitation of Mr. Kellogg and others. I went there and staid in the parish a week secretly, from one place to another, among the prominent men in that party, and I found it was a matter of impossibility to organize any lub in that parish; and knowing the danger in which I stood—at that time the register had been run off; it was said that he was shot at. I don't know whether it was true or not, but that is the impression among the colored people generally, that he was shot at, and they advised me to go away from the parish; that they could not organize without t

I heard that.

Q. State whether H. B. Vaughn said anything to you. If so, what?—A. Yes, sir; I went to several plantations, and they told me that they could not hold any talk with me; that they were even afraid to be seen talking to any man that had influence in the parish. In the first ward the head men were Bob McClennan and John W. Smith, and they were looked to be leaders in that section of the country. These men, all they had to do was to send their parties out and the thing would be done.

John W. Smith, and they were looked to be leaders in that section of the country. These men, all they had to do was to send their parties out and the thing would be done.

Q. Were Smith and McClennan democrats !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. White men !—A. Yes, sir. I had a great deal of conversation, and found that it was not safe to come back. I came back with the intention of going right back. I met Mr. H. B. Vaughn; he has always been a good man to me, and always when I catch him I talk to him and get what I can out of him, because what he says I generally believe it more or less. He told me, "You had better stay away from that parish. What do you want there anyhow? You have got your business arranged in other people's hands. We have got no use for you fellows up there until after the election, and then you may come back. We have got no use for you damned fellows up here. We are going to carry that parish by a thousand majority. The negroes are afraid, and we are going to keep them so." I took him at his word, because I always trusted him.

Q. State whether you were visited at your house.—A. Yes, sir; twice. I testified about that. Some time before that they came—before the registrar was run off; when I got there I found him driven off. I thought there might be something in it. I always made it a point to talk to this man. I had a conversation, I think, on the Governor Allen, talking over a good many things, and he advised me to go away from there.

Q. Do you remember whether anybody said to you that they had nothing against you personally?—A. Yes, sir; I have been told that personally—only my radical opinion—that is all they have got against any colored man, that I know of. In our section of the country the excuse that they gave is this cotton-stealing. There is nothing about that. I don't believe there is a case on record where a man has been brought up for stealing cotton, but there has been several killed and lynched.

Q. What did they say to you about colored men and white republicans holding office in that parish?—A. They didn't talk much to me, only that they were determined the negroes should not hold office. They said they wanted to put men identified with the country, and who is an bonest man and a gentleman. I always liked the gentleman principle, and tried to follow it.

Q. Have you ever seen, yourself, any colored men who have been shot or whipped?—A. I have seen two shot.

Q. Give their names.—A. I recollect one of their names. I recollect both if I can bring them to memory. One was a boy about nineteen years old.

Q. Do you know who it was that shot the boy?—A. He was shot on the Liberty road, inside the corporation line John Jackson, I think it was said—I didn't see him—and Peter Green. Another man on the road out east from Clinton, by the name of Jerry Norman. He was shot by a man named Thompson.

Q. You may state whether any of the colored people of that parish ever made any complaint to you that they were intimidated or interfered with by the democrats.—A. A great many times.

Q. Can you give the names i—A. While I was up here I had a great many visit me.

Q. Can you give the names?—A. While I was up here I had a great many visit me.

Q. Can you give the names of any of those colored men who entered these complaints? What I want is to have you to give me the names of these colored men who have made complaints to you.—A. Primus Gilmore, he told me that he would never have voted the democratic ticket if he had his own choice; A aron Robinson, John Harmon, Andrew Perkins, Jim Williams, Mage Flemming, Isaac Selby, Daniel Berryhill, Alonzo George—it is so many I don't recollect.

Q. They all complained to you!—A. Yes, sir; while I was up there.

Q. That they were intimidated!—A. Yes, sir; they didn't know what intimidation; they said that they were afraid of their lives. They didn't know what intimidation was particularly, but if they voted the republican ticket they were afraid they could not live there. If they had had any protection, they would have done it.

Q. Do you know the fact that many colored republicans were polliged to leave the parish and come to New Orleans, and have never gone back!—A. Yes, sir; as I was going to state, I have been back there since, but I was not able to stay there. There is Mr. Smith, T. M. J. Clark, Willis Worsham, ——Sloan. Mr. Law—I think he was afraid to stay there and vote himself; John Gair. There is so many of them. There is over a hundred or more down here; I see them every day or two: Anthony Jackson, Alonzo Brooks, and others. They would not stay there to vote. They told me that they had to vote the democratic ticket or else they could not vote at all, and they proposed not to vote the democratic ticket, and they came off.

Q. Will you tell me what is your opinion as to whether a man cou'd have gone through that parish safely organizing republican clubs and holding republican meetings!—A. I speak emphatically not.

Q. I mean during the last canvass.—A. That is what I am speaking of—1876. No, sir; they could not.

Q. What do you think the result of the election would have been in that parish of East Feliciana if the colored pe

By Mr. BEEBE:

Q. How many colored men voted the democratic ticket there?—A. There is about six or eight there. I think the change of a President would have changed one or two of those votes.

Q. When were you back in the parish of East Feliciana the last time?—A. I think the latter part of August some time.

Q. You have not been there since the election at all?—A. No, sir; I have seen a great many persons since the election, though.

Q. When you went back the last time, was that the time you went to organize the republican party!—A. Yes, sir; I went there for that express purpose.

Q. Where did you go from?—A. From here.

Q. How did you go from?—A. On the steamer Pargoud.

Q. Where did you land?—A. Port Hudson.

Q. Did you stay long at Port Hudson!—A. Not over an hour and a half in the town.

Q. Did you stay long at Port Hudson!—A. Not over an hour and a half in the town.

Q. What time of day was it when you landed!—A. I think between seven and eight o'clock in the morning.

Q. What place did you visit after leaving Port Hudson!—A. After I left Port Hudson I went to Barry's. I staid with the colored people there, and talked with a good many of them, and then I went on.

Q. Where did you go from there!—A. I went from there to Ed. Somes's plantation.

Q. How far from Port Hudson?—A. In the way I went, I think about two miles. I walked there.
Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid on that place an hour or two, or two

Q. How long did you stay there?

On Talking to the colored people?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Talking to the colored people?—A. To the Leperman plantation. I staid there until after two o'clock.

Q. Then from there where did you go to?—A. To Henry Lee's, on the Leperman plantation—way up through. It is a large plantation.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. I went over to McNeally's plantation. It was night—about dark. night—about dark.

Where did you go after dark!—A. I went to George's house and to my own

  Q. What time of day did you get to Clinton?—A. Saturday evening about dark.
  Q. How long did you stay in Clinton?—A. I staid there, on the edge of town, a day and a half.
  Q. Where did you go from Clinton?—A. Out through the eastern portion of the narish.
- parish.

  Q. How did you travel through the parish?—A. I traveled at nights.
  Q. Both night and day?—A. Yes, sir; I went through the fields in the day-time.
  Q. Did you see any white people?—A. On Saturday night I met a gang of white men armed with guns of some kind; I didn't see what kind. I was going up the road, and I met them right on the road, and I stopped and they passed by.
  Q. Did they say anything to you?—A. They didn't see me.
  Q. Was it after dark?—A. Yes, sir.
  Q. Who were they?—A. I could not recognize them.
  Q. Is that what you meant by saying that they went through secretly?—A. I went secretly to most of the white people.
  Q. You saw no white people except those that you saw that night?—A. I saw some, but they cidn't speak to me, or I to them.

- Q. Where did you see Aaron Robinson?—A. At the house, there in Clinton. Q. Was it then that he told you about his voting the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, Q. Who else was present when he told you !—A. Yes, sir; several persons; four or tive.

Q. Name them.—A. John Harmon, Primus Gilmore, Aleck Poole, Andrew Perkins, Aaron Taylor.

Q. Any white person present !—A. No sir; several women.

Q. Was this statement made by Aaron in a loud tone, so that they could all hear !—A. I was said to myself, Andrew Perkins, John Harmon, and Dock Layer.

Q. Is he a physician, or is that simply his name !—A. I didn't say doctor; I said Dock.

Q. Is he a physician !—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think colored people would be afraid to come before this committee at Clinton and state that they were intimidated !—A. I think so; a great many.

Q. Do you think they would all be afraid !—A. No, sir; I think some men has got courage to do it.

Q. Do you think there would be any danger from their doing so !—A. I think there would.

Q. You think Aaron Robinson is not very courageous !—A. Aaron ! You don't there would.

Q You think Aaron Robinson is not very courageous?—A. Aaron? You don't know him; he works every kind of way; he always keeps on the side that he thinks is going to carry him through safe. When the republican party seems likely to get along all right, he is with that party, and when the democratic party seems the most likely, he is with that party, and when the democratic party seems the most likely, he is with that party.

Q. You think that he is disposed to go with the party that is going to win?—A. I would not trust him, anyway, not in that respect.

Q You trusted him when he told you that he was afraid?—A. I mean in this way: if he sees that he is going to be in danger in some way—if the democrats threaten him, and he sees that the people are in danger, and that he can do them some good, he will do it; but if the republican party gets in power he is with the republicans again, where he belongs. That is what I mean about it. I know he is not in good faith with the democrats.

Q. You think that he would have courage enough to say if he wanted to vote?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you and he pretty good friends?—A. Very good.

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you and he pretty good friends ?—A. Very good.
Q. Do you believe that he would deny under oath if he told you anything of this kind ?—A. No, sir; I do not.
Q. Do you believe if under oath he would either decline to answer or state that he did tell you so ?—A. Yes, sir; if he did not, I would be there and tell him that he did.

Q. You would believe what he said about it under oath !—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hold any office in that parish !—A. I have.

Q. What office!—A. I was elected constable of the fifth ward, and then I was appointed deputy sheriff under Ray during the time that he was sheriff, and then on the police-jury.

Q. Are those all the offices that you held!—A. I have been inspector of weights and measures different times.

Q. How much of the time during the last three years have you held office!—A. This was in 1872 that I was inspector of weights and measures; in the last two years I have not held any. My time expired in 1874.

Q. Have you held any office in connection with the public schools?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been a teacher!—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have public schools generally through the parish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much of the time!—A. I think from four to five months during the year.

year.

Q. Every year!—A. Every year.
Q. You have heard no complaint among the colored people!—A. Yes, sir; I will tell you why, if you give me time.
Q. What complaints did they make!—A. The complaints were made because they could not get a school on every plantation in the different wards.
Q. Did they expect a school on every plantation!—A. Yes, sir; they seemed to expect so, by being told so by the white people.
Q. Has there been a difference in the republican party, as among themselves, politically!—A. Only at one time.
Q. When you went up to the parish of East Feliciana, did any one pay you any money to pay your expenses!—A. I borrowed some money to go up on.
Q. Whom did you borrow some money from!—A. Mr. Nash.
Q. Of anybody else!—A. No, sir; I borrowed $6 to pay my way up there. That is all I got.

Q. Whom did you borrow some money.

Q. Whom did you borrow some money.

Q. Of anybody else?—A. No, sir; I borrowed $6 to pay my way applied is all I got.

Q. What is your present occupation?—A. Well, I am doing first one thing and then another. I have been running a farm. I have not been doing anything much, a superply.

then another. I have been running a narm. I have not been using anything much, particularly.

Q. Have you received any money, or any pay, from the republican party or any member of it #-A. They always look out for their friends, generally.

Question. You may give your age and residence.—Answer. As near as I can give it, I am about going on fifty-two, ever since six weeks before Christmas.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I live up there opposite Clinton.

Q. You live in East Feliciana Parish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been in New Orleans?—A. I have been here ever since Tuesday evening.

Q. Last Tuesday evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived there in that parish?—A. I reckon I have lived there near about thirty years or forty.

Q. What ticket have you voted?—A. I have voted the republican ticket ever since, until this last election.

Q. You may state whether you have been interfered with by anybody in regard to your voting.—A. I was taken out from my house one night on account of it. They told me that I was a radical president of the republican party—of a club—and I told them I was; and they told me, had it broke up. I told them I wouldn't have anything more to do with it if they didn't do anything to me. They questioned me.

anything more to do with it if they didn't do anything to me. They questioned me.

Q. They told you you had got to quit it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. It was last winter; I think it was in the winter.

Q. What time was it?—A. Last winter, I think it was—last spring or wister; well, it was somewhere along in the winter, I cannot tell exactly when.

Q. When they told you that you must quit it what did you tell them?—A. I told them that I would.

Q. Was that the reason why they didn't do anything to you?—A. Yes, sir. I had some white friends in the bunch—my young masters, they used to be. They caught up with them, and said that I was ignorant, and didn't know nothing, and I was pushed into it, and they would not wish for them to hurt me, and to allow me another chance, and probably that I would come out and leave them.

Q. How many mea was there that came to your house?—A. I don't know, but I can tell you as near as I can. There was near about thirty or forty.

Q. Were they on horseback?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they white men?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know any of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me inquire if anybody else disturbed you or said anything to you in regard to your voting except these men that you have stated !—A. No. sir; no more than they said—the time that they had the meeting and they had my name signed. I didn't want my name signed, because I didn't know anything about it; I didn't know what I was going into.

Q. What meeting was that !—A. A democratic meeting. They had my name down as president of my club. I told them that I did not wish my name to be down there, because I did not know what I was doing. They said they had put it down, and says they, "You must let it stand there." I never said anything more then, but went home. I understood that they said that I had to join them anyhow. I didn't hear any of them say so. I will tell you the fact. There was a colored lady that lived close by, and she visited a white lady, and she told the colored lady to tell me to either join them or leave the country. I didn't think I had done anything to leave the country for, so I went and joined them.

Q. Why did you join the club and vote the democratic ticket?—A. I thought it would be best for me to do it; I wanted to live comfortably and happy, and I wanted to lay down in peace and get up in peace. I had a family, and I wanted I maintain them.

Q. State whether you were afraid if you did not join their club and vote their ticket that they would harm you in any way.—A. Yes, sir; that is what I feared. I did not want to be harmed any more, and went and voted the ticket on that account, for I had rather do that than always be in trouble; so I went and assisted them.

O. Do you know of other colored men that were interfered with!—A. I cannot

- account, for I had rather do that than always be in trouble; so I went and assisted them.

  Q. Do you know of other colored men that were interfered with!—A. I cannot tell you that I know of any that were interfered with, but I heard that they were interfered with. I never seen it. I could tell you that I heard of the interfering.

  Q. Give us their names, and state what you heard and who they are.—A. I heard that Thomas Flaker—that is not in my neighborhood; that is over on the river a piece—I heard that they whipped him, but I cannot tell what about. He lived in Saint Helena Parish. I heard that he had went and stole a harrow, and that was what they whipped him about. I tell you what I heard.

  Q. Do you know him?—A. Yes, sir; I knew him.

  Q. Do you know what his politics were?—A. Yes, sir.

  Q. What was he?—A. He was a radical, or a republican.

  Q. Do you know who whipped him!—A. No, sir; I do not. It was on the other side of the river, and I don't know.

  Q. Who was the other man that you heard about, if he was a man that lived in your parish? If he was not, I don't care about inquiring about it.—A. There was no other man in my parish whipped.

Q. Where did you vote at the last election?—A. I voted at Clear Creek, at the school-house.
Q. Do you know what ward it was in?—A. The eighth ward.
Q. You have always voted the republican ticket?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you ever vote for any democrats at all before this last time?—A. Ye, sir.
Q. You were president of a republican club up until last election?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When did the people come to your house?—A. They came there—as near as I can tell you, it has been so long—I think it was last winter or spring. It was after Christmas or before; I don't know which.
Q. You mean a year ago?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did they talk to you about anything else but politics?—A. Yes, sir; they talked—they told me about cotton.
Q. What was it?—A. They asked, did I know who bought cotton from Mr. Kent. I told them that I did not. They asked if I bought any, and I told them no, that I did not. They asked, "Did a man by the name of Thompson buy any?" I told them, "No, sir; he did not." He said, "Don't you know of anybodyelse?" I knew of one man, Lewis Cavelier. He said he didn't buy it from Mr. Kent; he bought it from Si Holmes. He got through picking cotton, and he told them boys to go to the field and scrape cotton, and get what they could. I suppose they went and got it. bought it from Si Holmes. He got through picking cotton, and he told them boys to go to the field and scrape cotton, and get what they could. I suppose they went and got it.

Q. Did they talk to you about this for the purpose of finding out who had stolen cotton?—A. Yes, sir; they said that was what they were hunting.

Q. Did they accuse you, or charge you, with having taken any at all?—A. No, sir; they just asked me did I.

Q. They asked you did you take any?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these men whom you named a little time ago your old master's people—Doty?—A. Yes, sir; William and Alcek Doty were all that were with them. Massa Henry would have been there, but he was sick.

Q. There were no colored people with them?—A. No, sir; there was no colored men with them but me. I was with them.

Q. Did you ever tell any of the colored people that you didn't want to vote the democratic ticket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did you tell?—A. That I could hardly tell.

Q. You told a good many?—A. I told all around me, and everywhere, that I didn't want to vote the democratic ticket, because I never had voted it, but rather than be disturbed I would vote it.

Q. Have they talked to you any time since that time that they came to your house!—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was this club meeting held that you were speaking of?—A. I declare I cannot tell you what time.

Q. Who was it that put your name down as president of the democratic club?—A. Mr. John Robbins, I think, was the one that put my name down.

Q. Did John Robbins tell you that he would put your name down, and you must let it stand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they say that they would do anything to you if you did not?—A. They gaid, "It is down there, and you must let it stay there." I told them that I didn't care about it being there.

Q. Did you go there and serve as president of the club?—A. I went there twice—the time they put my name down, and then once since.

Q. Have you heard of any other colored people who put their names down because they were afraid?—A. Yes, sir, Charlie Johnson, h

Q. Who did you think would have hurt you ?-A. I don't know; the bunch might

Q. How did you come to be down here at New Orleans?—A. They sent for me. Q. Who did?—A. I don't know, sir; the marshal came to me—he sent a sheriff out to me.

Q. Did you know that you were subpeaned up in Clinton by this committee when we were up there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you going back when you get through?—A. Yes, sir; I am going to try. Q. Do you think they will hurt you because you have told what you think is the truth?—A. Yes, sir, they might; but I will go and try.

Q. Do you know Aaron Robinson!—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he make democratic speeches?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he make democratic speeches?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ever talk with you about voting the democratic ticket?—A. No, sir. I never heard him speak, but my boys said that they heard his canvass. I never heard him speak at all; in fact, I was never to none of their speeches. I never heard none of the black people speak. I went to a democratic speaking.

Q. You were subpœnaed by the marshal to go before the Senate committee. Have you been before that committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has any one talked to you about what you have testified to?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who?—A. I don't know him—the republican man in the other house; I don't know what his name was.

Q. Was he a member of that committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he a member of that committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have any others?—A. No, sir; no soul has spoke to me about what I was to testify or nothing.

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Law since you came down here?—A. No, sir; not much. I have not talked as much with him as with the other boy, Rigsby.

Q. Did you talk with Rigsby about testifying here?—A. Yes, sir; I was there while he was talking.

Q. Did you talk was while he was talking.

Question. How old are you!—Answer. Something like thirty-eight or thirty-nine years old.

Q. Where do you reside!—A. Up on Beaver Creek, fifteen miles the other side of Clinton.

Q. What parish!—A. East Feliciana.
Q. How long have you lived there!—A. I was birthed there.
Q. Born and bred up there?—A. Yes, sir; come all the way along up there.
Q. What ticket did you vote!—A. The last time I voted the democratic ticket, but all the time up to the present I have voted the radical ticket.
Q. You have voted the radical ticket up to the last election!—A. Yes, sir,
Q. You may state if anything happened to you just before the election; this last election.—A. Yes, sir; there was a great deal happened to me.
Q. Go and state.—A. Tuesday night, one week before the election, they had a speech up there.
Q. Who had this speech?—A. Asron Robinson and John Skipwith, I believe.
Q. Democratic?—A. Yes, sir. They asked if I was going down, and I told them I didn't know; at least I concluded I would go down and listen at them. I went down and listened at them, and some of them got talking. I didn't pay much attention to the speech any way. Some boys keep bothering me there, and I says, "I cannot hear the speaking if it is a mile off, or four mile." He made me mad. I thought then that they were throwing out some words to make me mad. They came that night to my house and called me.
Q. Who came!—A. I don't know; some unknown party—some party which gave it to me pretty well when they caught me. They came and called me out. As I opened the door they said—one grabbed me by one hand and one by the other, and they carried me out. Well, I walked on a piece with them, and said I, "What has I done that you want to abuse me?" "Never mind, God damn you; I will show you how to talk." "What have I done? Do you want to whip me about politics?" I saked. "Do you want to whip me about politics?" I saked. "Do you want to whip me about politics?" I saked. "Do you want to whip me about politics?" I saked. "Do you want to whip me about politics?" I saked.

in that way until they just worried me out. As I wheeled and run by one I wheeled right over a log, and they just covered me, and they gave me a good beating.

Q. What did they whip you with!—A. Sticks and switches. One part was switches, and after the switch wore out it was a stick. They whipped me and carried me'to a yellow-jacket's nest and laid me down on it, and they let them sting me too a pleuty.

Q. How many men were there!—A. There was four came to my house and then there was four or five came to the woods.

Q. They took you into the woods!—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they white men!—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know any of them!—A. No, sir; they were parties I didn't know; if they had been any around our settlement they would not have done it.

Q. What did they tell you as to why they were whipping you!—A. They would not give me any reason. I asked them for what they were whipping me, and they said, "My big toe;" that was all the satisfaction that they would give me.

Q. They would not tell you what they whipped you for!—A. No, sir; I had the opinion when I asked the question if they were not whipping me about politics; that was my opinion; I asked the question to find out if it was, and they said, "No, God damn you; you should not vote if you wanted to vote."

Q. What did they say about voting the democratic ticket!—A. They said one thing to me; they said to me, "You expect to vote on the day of election?" I didn't know whether I did or not; that is all they said to me

Q. When did they say that—when did that take place!—A. That was three months before election.

Q. Was that the same night that they whipped you?—A. No, sir; they abused me mightily, and I went to Mr. East the next morning, and be done up my wounds, I laid down on the bed and he called for things to put on me.

A. Did they ask you to join the democratic club or say anything about it?—A. No, sir; they came to me that night and asked if I was going to hear the speaking; I said I didn't know, "I may go and I may not." They came I might join co not, just as I pleased; they said everybody to their notion; it was a terrible thing to me.

Q. Did you say that you had not much to do with politics!—A. I told them, I says, "I have never had much to do with politics and never had much interest myself about it;" which I didn't. They said to me that night, "God damn you, don't you report this in Clinton to-morrow morning." I told them "No, sir; I was not going to."

Q. What did Mr. East say to you about it, if they suspected that you had circulated the story in town!—A. He said that it was wrong, and that if he had known it they should not have done it, but that he had no idea that it should have been done, or he would have sent out and had it stopped. He didn't like that any man should do any such thing.

Q. What did he say, if anything, about his keeping these fellows from coming back to you, by saying you capht not to tell who whipped you! What did he say about that any time to you?—A. He asked me, "If anybody whips you, you have a right to tell who whips you if you know who done it. You have no right to tell alie about it; because you are here, a laborer for me, and now they stop my labor going on, and if you know who it was you can tell."

Q. Did he tell you that these fellows had head at that you had told!—A. No, sir; he didn't tell me that, if my memory telis me right.

Q. How badly did they whip you!—A. They cut me some four, five, or six hundred lashes.

Q. Lay you up?—A. Yes, sir; three weeks or more.

Q. Did you hear of other colored men being whipped!—A. Yes, sir. There was

Q. Lay you up!—A. Yes, sir; three weeks or more.
Q. Did you hear of other colored men being whipped!—A. Yes, sir. There was Zeek Glover; he was whipped there; he was the one that reported me.
Q. He came to town and reported that you had been whipped?—A. Yes, sir; they whipped him three or four days before.
Q. Did you hear of any other colored man who had been whipped?—A. Yes, sir; I heard of some that had been whipped, but I didn't know who it was or where. I didn't like to talk that that I didn't know.
Q. Did any colored man tell you that he was afraid to vote the democratic ticket?—A. They said so; that they wanted to vote, and they didn't know hardly what to do about voting.
Q. Wanted to vote what?—A. They wanted to vote the republican ticket. They said that they wanted to vote, but they didn't know hardly what to do.
Q. Did they tell you why?—A. No, sir; I didn't ask them, because I was afraid to sak them; I was afraid to ask any questions at all.
Q. What do you suppose that these men whipped you for?—A. I think, in my view, that they whipped me about politics, and I asked them two or three times, and they said, "No; you should not vote if you wanted to." I said, "If you want to vote I will vote. I will do anything that will keep you from whipping me." They said, "No; you should not vote if you wanted to." I said, "If you want to vote you sha'n't vote." I said, "If you want to whe you sha'n't vote." I said, "If you want all along. I didn't know what they were going to do with me.
Q. How far did they take you away from the house?—A. About three or four hundred yards.
Q. Were you a man of family?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it in the night time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were laid up about three weeks!—A. Yes, sir; about three weeks.
Q. Didn't yen go out of the house during that time?—A. I could hobble about a little, and then for a month I was not able to do any werk.
Q. How soon did you get out of the house after they whipped you?—A. I got up the next morning and came up to the house,
Q. Up to Mr. East!—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How far was that from where you live?—A. One hundred and fifty yards.
Q. Has anybody told any stories about your taking any cotton, or stock, or anything of that kind?—A. No, sir; every body knows blamed well that I don't steal.
Q. Nobody reported that you did?—A. No, sir.
Q. Mr. East didn't know anything about this?—A. No, sir.
Q. You say they were not men in the neighborhood?—A. No, sir; if it had been they would not have whipped me.
Q. Do you know who they were?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you know whom any of them were?—A. No, sir; I never joined a club at all.
I only voted on the day of election, and went on back home.
Q. Didn't you belong to any club at all?—A. No, sir; I didn't join it.
Q. Was there anything said that night by any of these men accusing you of taking anything?—A. No, sir.
Q. They didn't accuse you of taking any cotton or hogs from anybody?—A. I will tell you; that is what I have come to. Well, it has struck my remembrance what they said when they turned off—that I would not pick cotton. I said if I dd pick cotton, I says, one of them is right here picking every day. He knows if I did pick cotton. They said, 'You won't pick cotton.' I said, 'Yes, I do.''
Q. Who was it that spoke to you three or four months before the election about voting?—A. Mr. Doty was going along, and he says, "Ben.'' I says, "Sir.'' "Are you going to vote, but I would vote some way or other. It don't make any difference which way you vote, but I would vote some way or other. Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. East about your reporting this whipping?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. East tell you that it had been reported in Clinton that you had been whipped—that you had been up there telling about being whipped?—A. Yes, sir; he went to town and came back, and was telling his wife. He said somebody had gone to town and reported a lie about Aaron McKenzie coming up to the house and I putting some staff on his hands.

Q. When was that?—A. After I was whipped—about two weeks after I was whipped, or three. He was telling his wife about it.

Q. Did you hear him?—A. Yes, sir; he was telling it, and I was up in the house. Q. These men didn't say anything about polities—they didn't want you to vote?—A. Yes, sir; they said I should not vote if I wanted to.

Q. Do you recelled thow matters went when they were registering voters there?—A. Yes, sir; I remember the time when they first came to register—they had gone through it before I knew it.

Q. Didn't you get registered?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you vote?—A. I voted straight along so.

Q. Without being registered?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not registered?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not registered?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you yote in the ball-dozer's box or the regular box?—A. Yes, sir; I reckon so. It must have been in that box. I reckon. In fact, I didn't take any notice in what box I voted, because I went down and put my ticket in, and went back home. It was cold, and I could not stand the weather. The wind blew against my face right smart all the time and ch'tied me.

Q. You came down to the election in New Orleans!—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom else have you worked for?—A. I don't recollect the gentleman's name.
Q. I mean since you came down here.—A. I have not worked for anybody.
Q. You have not been paid anything by any republican for work?—A. No, sir.
Q. You have not received any compensation from any republican for labor?—A.
No, sir; I have been on no list or nothing.
Q. Where you worked has been for others?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I meant.

Q. Where you worked has been for others —A. Yes, sir; that is what I meant, This testimony establishes beyond all question the fact of intimidation in all three of these parishes, and virtually settles all the questions involved in this investigation as to them.

In addition to this positive evidence of intimidation from witnesses which I was permitted to call, we have the admissions of a large number of witnesses, from each of the three parishes, called by the majority of the subcommittee, drawn out on cross-examination, which fully corroborate all the facts sworn to.

Not having the testimony before me I am compelled in this case, also, to rely upon minutes which I took during the examination, and my memory, for the statements of these witnesses.

Judge Hirghes testifies that colored men have been intimidated to some extent. Thomas T. More says that regulating may have run into political matters.

Nelson Ball says he saw 100 mounted and armed men in one of said parishes in October, 1876.

Nelson Ball says he saw 100 mounted and armed men in one of said particles. Jobn Haley swears that he heard that bodies of armed men passed through the parish the Sunday night before the election.

Littleton Jones heard of the presence of regulators in the parish; that they had attacked Senator Weber, and tried to kill him while crossing the river.

Major Wedge says that he knows that armed white men rode through the sixth ward of his parish.

Alex. Pool testifies that colored men told him they should vote the democratic ticket, but they would not if it was not for certain men whom they feared.

Wm. King says he knew Willis Wisham; that in July, 1876, four or five men came to his cabin and inquired for him; that they were armed with pistols, and ho was frightened. These men said Willis had been talking about the Gair and Matthews matter, and told King to tell him when he came back that he had better get out of there.

came to his cabin and inquired for him; that they were armed with pistols, and he was frightened. These men said Willis had been talking about the Gair and Mathews matter, and told King to tell him when he came back that he had better get out of there.

Wm. Hansberry swears that one Maxwell, a white democrat, told him that he could not vote the democratic ticket and live there; that he would be cleaned out. He says he was afraid and went and joined the democratic club and voted the democratic ticket, as he was ordered to do.

Henry Matthews says he heard that bodies of armed white men were riding through the parish during the canvass.

John Sensley says that he heard that it was said at a democratic meeting the night before the election that the colored men must vote one way or the other or they could not live in that country.

He says he believes that many of the colored men did not vote as they wished to; that many of them would have voted the republican ticket if they had been allowed to.

Josiah Johnson testifies that he voted the democratic ticket against his will; that Anthony Wilson, a white democrat, told him the night belove the election that if he did not get out and vote the next day the head and fout boards of his coffin would be nailed the next night. "I had intended to vote the republican ticket before that."

He also says that squads of armed men rode about the parish; that they stopped at his house and told him he must come out to the democratic meeting; this was in the night-time, after he had gone to bed.

He says that he thought if he did not go to election and vote the democratic ticket he would certainly be harmed.

Solomon Jefferson swears that he heard a speaker at a democratic meeting s y that unless the colored men voted the democratic ticket they would have to suffer the consequences; that if colored men did not vote with the white democrats they would find out that there had never been any bull-dozing such as there would be after the election.

W. A. Cane says that he did take the nam after the election.

W. A. Cane says that he did take the names of the colored men who voted the republican ticket on election day.

Austin Williams says that he was told that if he did not vote the democratic ticket he could not live in the parish.

J. P. Monahan admits that he told Henry Smith, when he came back to Clinton, that his life would not be safe if he staid there.

Isaac Butler says that he heard that the bull-dozers were riding around the parish whipping and beating colored men.

Dan Wisham testifies that he had always voted the republican ticket, and should have done so at the last election, only that he did not want to be bothered. Anthony Wilson swears that he did not vote the democratic ticket of his owa free will. He says that white democrats came to his house in the night-time, after he and his family bad gone to bed, and threatened him because he had been organizing republican clubs. They told him they were bull-dozers, and that he must join their club and vote the democratic ticket. They also visited other colored men the same night, whom they threatened in the same way. I told a white democrat about it, and he said the white people were determined to change the government, and were going to make the colored people help them.

Nathan Morgan testifies that one white democratic told him that if he did not vote the democratic ticket or the white people would hurt me.

Bruce Pipes says that more or less of the colored men voted the democratic ticket because they were frightened; he understood that if they did not vote that ticket because they were frightened; he understood that if they did not vote that ticket they would be killed or hurt. He also says that he did not vote that ticket or will.

J. W. Mann testifies that he did not get up a republican club because republi-

J. W. Mann testifies that he did not get up a republican club because republicanism was not popular in that ward.

Henry Brookhart swears that regulators were around down to last summer; heard that colored republicans were killed. Knew Watson; his store was burned and he shot at. Julius Green, an active republican, was shot at on his way home from church.

Alex. Robbins admits that he rode around with fifteen or twenty other armed men in night-time down to September, 1876; that they took colored men out of their beds; that they practiced this all through the summer and fall of 1876.

Leon Jastrumski says, "I heard of bodies of armed men, called regulators, who traveled through the country last fall and in the early part of the winter."

J. W. Dupree swears that he heard of an organization of men who were in the habit of going about the parish committing acts of violence upon colored people.

V. M. Lange testifies that he has heard of colored men being killed in that parish on account of their politics.

L. C. Morris says he has heard of bodies of armed men riding through the parish in the night, and that the colored people were intimidated thereby; that these men had shot Myers and his son, and committed other acts of violence.

E. D. Wood says he has heard within the past year that bodies of armed white me were riding through the parish in the night-time, committing depredations upon colored men.

men were riding through the parish in the night-time, committing depredations upon colored men.

A. H. Levy says he has heard the reports of violence upon colored people by white democrats for some time past. The colored people all have the impression that there is intimidation, and that it is carried on by white democrats. He says he saw a man only a week before who told him that he was forcibly taken from his house, and a rope put around his neck, and whipped, and told to leave the parish, and that he left. He further states that this man is a republican, as all the colored people naturally are when left free, and that he was roped because he was a republican. The effect of these acts of violence has been to hinder a fair expression of their opinion at the ballot-box. He says he knows, from report and otherwise, that many colored men were compelled to vote the democratic clubs to save their property and lives. The colored men had all been sufficiently cowed and intimidated before the day of election.

Jackson Hamilton says he heard of acts of violence to colored men because they were republicans.

and join democratic clubs to save their property and lives. The colored men had all been sufficiently cowed and intimidated before the day of election.

Jackson Hamilton says he heard of acts of violence to colored men because they were republicans.

Mortimer Price swears that it is his opinion that many of the colored men voted the democratic ticket because they were frightened to it.

These colored men are weak-uinded and timid. They had families, and did not know but what they would be hung, and so they thought if they joined the democratic party they would get along.

Charles J. Verbois says he had heard of the bull-dozers, and that they were riding around the parish a few months before the election.

Gustave Le Blanc swears that there was considerable bull-dozing done in the parish; that the general complaint among the colored people was that they were afraid of them. The colored people are republicans when left to their own judgment, but a good many were airaid to vote as they wished.

Some of the colored men were scared by these bull-dozing stories. They are timid. The stories had an effect upon their minds.

The state of the public mind among the white democracy in those three parishes upon political matters, and the safety with which republicans could have advocated their principles and exercised the elective franchise, is well illustrated by the answer given by a white democratic witness, called by the majority of the subcommittee, to a question put by the chairman, in which he said that it would be safe enough for a republican to come there to live "if he behaved himself;" and when inquired of what he meant by that, he replied that a republican would be safe to come there to live "if he behaved himself;" and when inquired of what he meant by that, he replied that a republican in order to say that the desperate and reckless manner in which they testified I have never seen equaled, and I only put it in the mildest form when I say that no man who is not blinded by prejudice, or willfully obstinate throu evidence of James Law, which shows that why there were none was occase heman could be found in that parish bold and reckless enough to receive and distribute them.

In closing this branch of my report I desire to state that I have attended closely and earnestly to the work we have had in hand, and have endeavored, to the utmost of my power, to divest my mind of all partisan or political bias, and, as far as possible, considerately and candidly weigh the evidence, as it now occurs to me, which has been allowed to be taken under the rule established by the committee, and to arrive at the truth; and, after a careful investigation and mature reflection upon the whole case, I am forced to the conviction, and do therefore report, that as far as relates to the said three parishes of East Baton Ronge and East and West Feliciana, the following facts will be found, from the testimony, proved beyond question or reasonable doubt:

1. The organization and existence in said parishes, as early as the spring or sumer of 1875, of bodies of armed and mounted white men, called the White League, or Regulators, with complete regimental and company organizations.

2. That these bodies of men were in the habit of riding through said parishes in the night-time, whipping, shooting, hanging, and driving off colored republicans.

3. That the colored people, being naturally timid and easily frightened, were intimidated by these acts of violence from voting the republican ticket, and forced to join democratic clubs and vote the democratic ticket.

4. That in the last political canvass the democratic party was desperate, and was determined to carry the election at all hazards, as will be seen by confidential circulars issued from headquarters; to accomplish which a certaix element in the party did not hesitate to resort to any measures to secure the colored vote, without which they knew they could not succeed, as the colored men in Louisiana, when left free, are almost unanimously republican.

5. That the alleged original and ostensible object and purpose of the White League, or Regulators, was to break up thieving and the destruction of property; but the testimony shows that when they were fully organized they were manipulated by the leaders, changed into democratic clubs, pledged to vote the democratic telekt, kept in working order and on duty down to the very time of the election, and made to do the work they were originally designed to, and that was, by terror and acts of violence, to control the colored vote.

6. That these bodies of armed men were seen at different points in said parishes during the spring and summer of 1876, in squads of from five to one hundred, all mounted, and armed with rifles, shot-guns, and pistols.

7. That the white democrats shot John Gair, Gilbert Carter, Isaac Mitchel, and scores of other prominent republicans, for political reasons, and whipped and drove away most of those they did not shoot or hang.

8. That a large portion of the white people in said parishes have no proper appreciation of the value of human life, and believe that the only way to manage the colored voter is with a bludgeon in one hand and a pistol in the other.

9. That at one poll, at least, in one of said parishes, on the day of election, every colored man who voted the democratic ticket was furnished with a passport or safe-conduct which showed that they had voted the democratic ticket, and that they were to be protected against the White League, the Regulators, or any other body of armed white democrates.

10. That in every political campaign, until the last, republican clubs had been organized said kept up in every ward in said parishes, but during the last canvasi not a republican. Club was organized in either parish, and only one republican meeting was held in each parish, and these were attended with great peril both to the speakers and the republicans who were cause of the homicide was a personal difficulty, it has failed, but has generally disclosed the fact that the murderer was a white democrat, and the victim a colored republican.

14. That from July 24, 1875, to December 24, 1876, twenty-four murders were committed in the parish of West Feliciana, twenty of the victims being colored, while in the parishes of East Baton Rouge, where Morgan, the coroner, was notified not to hold any more inquests, and East Feliciana, there were nearly an equal number during the same time, many of which could be traced directly to political causes, and that being the most reasonable apology for most of them.

15. That on one occasion a large body of these democratic White Leaguers or Regulators entered the office of Judge Dula, parish judge in West Feliciana, and, with violent language and threats of personal injury, demanded his resignation, on some false pretense, but really because he was a republican.

16. That the same, or another body of armed men of like character, entered the court-house in Saint Francisville, in the same parish, when the court was in ession, and in a threatening and violent manner broke up and dispersed the court, and then compelled the immediate resignation of all the republican members of the police jury.

Every man engaged in these lawless outrages upon law and order was a white democrat, and each man they drove out of office was a republican, and yet these men say it had no political significance.

17. That men supposed to belong to the same marauding party made an attack upon Senator Weber and attempted to shoot him in his own house; and not succeeding in this, afterward waylaid him and attempted to kill him while crossing the river on his way to his home at Saint Francisville.

18. That a large body of armed white democratas, supposed to be a portion of the same organization, under the lead of Joseph A. Norwood, lieutenaut-colonel of the White League in the parish of East Feliciana and chairman of the democration, while the court was in session, drov

Dewing does not dare to go back there to attempt to exercise the functions of his office.

19. That on the 11th of July, 1876, a body of armed men took Gilbert Carter, a bright, respectable colored man, and an active and earnest republican, out of his bed and house in the night-time, and when he attempted to escape from their tortures, they shot him to death at his own door, in the presence of his wife and children, who upon their knees, in an agony of grief, implored them to spare his life.

20. That they also killed Issac Mitchel and Ephraim Armstrong, two other colored republicans, in the same way, and attempted to murder Julius Green, another active colored republican, while on his way home from church with his wife, on a Sabbath afternoon. That on the night of the 27th of May, 1876, the white democrats attempted to assassinate W. G. Lane, a prominent republican and candidate for the legislature, at the Harney House, in the city of Baton Rouge, because he was a republican and had been the prime mover and principal actor in a republican convention which had been held there on that day.

21. That they tied John Gair, one of the most intelligent and bravest of the colored leaders in the State of Louisiana, to a tree, and shot him to death, and hung his sister-in-law, Babe Mathews, to a tree in the court-house yard at Clinton.

22. That, in addition to these cold-blooded murders, they have, during the past two years, whipped and beaten scores of colored republicans, for which no pessible reason can be assigned except that they were republicans, and that they refused to join the democratic clubs or vote that ticket.

23. That nearly every leading republican how white and colored, residing in said three parishes, has been driven away from his home by the threats and acts of white democrats, and are now exiles in New Orleans and other places, and dare not return for fear of being killed.

24. That no republican in either of said parishes has dared to come before this subcommittee, for fear of losing his life or hi do so.

25. That it is very apparent, from the testimony as taken, that the majority of the subcommittee have been generally very careful, in this investigation, not to put upon the stand those who have been personally engaged in these acts of violence and murder, as shown by the testimony which was used before the State returning board at New Orleans.

26. That during our whole investigation there has seemed to be a studied effort on the part of the majority of the subcommittee, as will be seen on reference to the testimony, to so frame every question as to clearly and plainly suggest to each witness the answer to be given, the effect of which has been, as I think, unintentional, of course, on the part of the majority of the subcommittee, to cover up and justify all these acts of murder and violence, and thus to bolster up and strengthen the democratic theory, instead of getting at the real truth and inwardness of the conduct of the white democracy during the late campaign in Louisiana.

27. That nearly every negro put upon the stand, except some few who had always voted the democratic ticket, has plainly shown by his manner that he was testifying under compulsion, and that he does not go back upon those in whose presence he was testifying, or refuse to testify to what he had been told.

They all told the same story, in very nearly the same language, which indicates very clearly the perfect system to which this intimidation has been reduced, and the complete and utter subjection of the colored people in said parishes.

28. That a great many of the colored men who have testified before us have been forced to admit that they joined democratic clubs and voted that ticket against their will, and because they were given to understand, in various ways, that unless they did so they would be murdered, whipped, or driven from the parish.

that unless they did so they would be murdered, whipped, or driven from the parish.

29. The testimony, I think, also shows most conclusively that, although it was given out in 1875, when the White League or Regulators were organized in these parishes, that they were to break up thieving and lawlessness, yet it was then intended and designed that they should be used in the then approaching political campaign, and that during the fall and winter of 1875, and the spring and summer of 1876, they were used for that purpose, in consequence of which the colored people were so perfectly frightened and cowed by the murders and acts of violence committed by these armed democratic bands, that when the canvass commenced they had only to say to the colored men that they had better join the democratic clubs and vote that ticket, and they knew at once that such an admonition meant compliance or death.

The republican vote in these three parishes in previous years is worthy of consideration as bearing upon the matter under investigation.

The republican vote, as appears by the official register, was in 1868:

The foregoing figures prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that every democratic vote in those parishes should have been excluded from the count. Witnesses may be mistaken or falsify, but the legitimate inference to be drawn from these figures is veritable and conclusive.

I also append to this report copies of the protests made by the supervisors of registration in those three parishes, showing that the law has therein been complied with.

These several protests were backed up and supported before the return of the several protests.

These several protests were backed up and supported before the returning board by a vast number of affidavits which may be referred to.

Protest of F. A. Clover, supervisor of registration for the parish of East Baton Rouge.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Orleans:

Protest of F. A. Clover, supervisor of registration for the parish of East Baton Rouge.

State of Louisiana, Parish of Orleans:

F. A. Clover, being duly sworn, states that he was appointed supervisor of registration in and for the parish of East Baton Rouge, in the State of Louisiana, during the time of registration and revision of registration held last preceding and preparatory to the last election, held the 7th day of November, 1876; that as such supervisor of registration, he conducted said registration and revision of registration from the 28th day of Angust to the 28th day of October, 1876, inclusive; that during the said time of registration and revision of registration there were riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and bribery, and corrupt influences at and near the several places of registration and revision of registration in said parish, which said riot and tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, disturbance, and corrupt influences did tend to prevent, and did prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish; that the facts relating thereto are as follows: During said period of registration it came to my knowledge in my official capacity that a large number of the qualified electors of said parish (colored men) were forced to join democratic clubs and told if they did not vote the democratic ticket they would be "bull-dozed," or "regulated," by which words I understood to be meant armed bands of men visiting said voters, and by whipplegs, shootings, or other violence, putting them in fear of their lives and forcing them to fies their homes.

That some time near or during registration, a colored man named William Y. Payne, a qualified elector of said parish, was visited at his house in the night by an armed band of white men, who took him from under his bed, put a rope or a mule, and dragged him to death.

That a short time before or during said period of registration, a colored man named Isidore Herron, a qualified elector of said parish, a justi

During said period of registration, it came to my knowledge, in my official capacity, that bands of white men patrolled the roads of said parish almost nightly on horseback; this for the purpose of striking terror into the minds of the colored people, thereby preventing them from voting the republican ticket.

At a short time before or during registration it came to my knowledge, in my official capacity, that in several instances armed bands of white men had visited the houses of colored republicans and voters, and taking them from their houses and whipped them; this for the purpose of striking terror into the minds of the colored people, and causing them to be in fear of their lives and persons should they vote the republican ticket.

That a short time before or during said period of registration there came to my knowledge, in my official capacity, several instances of white men having shot at and wounded colored republicans; this for the purpose of striking terror into their minds, and preventing them from freely and peaceably exercising their right to vote.

and wounded colored republicans; this for the purpose of striking terror into their minds, and preventing them from freely and peaceably exercising their right to vote.

That during said period it has come to my knowledge, in my official capacity, that republican meetings were interfered with and disturbed by arned bands of white men, with threats of violence, abuse, oaths, cursing, and by following the republican speakers and threatening them in a violent manner; that by such disturbance and violence the peace of the republican meetings was disturbed, republicans were prevented from attending, and were driven away from said meetings. That during said registration large numbers of colored voters were induced by fraud and false representations to deposit their registration papers for safe-keeping with white democrats, and did so deposit them; that this was done for the purpose of depriving said colored voters of their votes, and also for the purpose of causing said papers to be illegally used and fraudulently voted upon by parties other than the rightful voters.

That during said registration the colored republican voters of one of the largest sections of said parish, to wit, that at and about the town of Port Hudson, where it has been customary to have a voting-poll, at which about 500 voters have usually voted, and a republican majority of about 500, or more, requested me not to establish a voting poll at said town, and gave as their reason therefor that they would not be allowed to vote the republican ticket at that poll, but would be forced by threats and violence to vote the democratic ticket.

That during the whole period of registration and revision of registration there existed in said parish a continued state of fear, dread, intimidation, and terrorism; that this terrorism was caused by the facts above recited and other similar ones, of which proof can be given; that there was a general feeling of insecurity among republicans in their lives and property; that republicans dared not, as everal times durin

Supervisor of Registration for the Parish of East Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana. Sworn to and subscribed before me, at New Orleans, La., this 18th day of Novem-

Protest of James E. Anderson, supervisor of registration for the parish of East Feliciana.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of East Feliciana*

James E. Anderson, superviror of registration for the parish of East Feliciana, under oath declares and states that he was a supervisor of registration in and for the said parish of East Feliciana during the registration or revision of registration held preceding the general election which was held on the 7th day of November, 1876, and that he was present in said parish during the time of said registration or revision of registration, and of the said election, with the exception of a period of about ninet een days, in the months of October and November, during which last-named period he was unable to remain in said parish and to exercise his functions as supervisor therein by reason of the insecurity of his life.

That prior to such absence he had been assaulted within said parish, and an attempt was made to destroy his life; that said assault and attempt to take his life were made in the night-time, by parties to him unknown; that he has every reason to believe that said attempt and assault was made for the purpose of intimidating and preventing him from the free and proper discharge of his official duties as said supervisor; that he finally returned to said parish on the 1st day of November, 1876, under the assurance given in New Orleans to himself and to the governor of the State that his life and personal safety should be protected from further danger; that during the time of registration or revision of registration aforesaid there were in said parish riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, and corrupt influences at places within said parish, at or near the places of registration or revision of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance and corrupt influences and corrupt influences did tend to prevent and did prevent a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish; that by reason of said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance and corrupt influences the election held in said parish on the death.

That bodies of armed men were reported to me as having often ridden about the country during the said period of registration, and having harassed, intimic ated, maltreated, whipped, and sometimes shot such voters; that qualified voters colored persons, known to be republicans, were in frequent cases during said period of registration harassed and maltreated by gangs of masked men, and by them whipped, on account of their refusal to promise to vote the democratic ticket in said election; that in the month of October, a short time prior to said election, an attempt was made to assassinate him, the said supervisor.

That on Sanday night preceding the election Lieut. W. S. Davis of the Thirteenth United States Infantry was fired upon by some parties in ambush in said parish; that the above-recited acts had the effect to intimidate and put in fear of bodily harm and of death the republican voters of said parish.

That, in consequence thereof, a belief became general among such voters that to vote for any but the democratic candidates would put in jeopardy their personal safety and their lives, and that of their families, or drive them to the necessity of flight from the parish; that this conspiracy and concerted system of intimidation was so effectual, that although, in a fair and free election, there would have been, as he is informed and believes, a large majority for the republican candidates, there was not a single voter in said parish who was not so intimidated that he did not dare to vote for a republican candidate, except one vote cast for the republican candidate for lleutenant-governor and two votes for Hayes and Wheeler, although not for the republican electoral ticket.

That the number of qualified electors of said parish who were deterred by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, and corrupt influences from voting as aforesaid were about eighteen hundred in number.

That the number of qualified electors who were deterred by such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, and corrupt influences, from voting for the republican candidates, and who were coerced thereby to vote for the democratic candidates were, as nearly as can be estimated, about four hundred.

And affiant further states that he did not affix the foregoing statement of riot, intimidation, &c., to his returns of the election at the time of mailing them, because he would have been in danger of his life to have done so at that time.

Protest of D. A. Weber, supervisor of registration for the parish of West Feliciana.

Personally came and appeared before me, the undersigned authority, D. A. Weber, who, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he resided in the parish of West Feliciana and State of Louisiana; that he is supervisor of election for said parish; that from the 15th day of August, A. D. 1876, to the 7th day of November of the same year, and during the time of registration and revision of registration, parties armed with the most improved repeating fire-arms passed to and fro throughout the said parish of West Feliciana, sometimes inviting colored men and to enforce their compliance with such invitation or demands, sometimes committing acts of violence, intimidation, and disturbance, all of which said acts did prevent and tend to prevent a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish and deter the electors of said parish, to the number of eight hundred, from voting at the said election on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, in accordance and wishes of said electors.

D A. WEBER, Supervisor of Registration.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of November, 1876.

JNO. P. SOUTHWORTH,

Commissioner United States Circuit Court, District of Louisiana.

The conclusion, therefore, to which I am irresistibly led, after a long and laborious investigation, and a careful consideration of the whole case is, that at the commencement of the campaign the democrats determined to carry the State. That for this purpose they selected the parishes which had given the largest republican majorities in 1874, where they would have the most to gain and the less to lose in case they were thrown out by the State returning board; that in those parishes they carried on a system of violence and terrorism that paralyzed every republican and gave them the complete control of the colored vote, so that those who could not be forced to vote the democratic ticket were kept away from the polls, and I therefore find that, had the colored people in those three parishes been left free to vote as they pleased, the republican majority would have reached at least fifteen hundred or two thousand upon the most liberal count for the democratic ticket.

All which is respectfully submitted.

SATURDAY, February 10, 1877-10 a.m.

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF FLORIDA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the president of the commission, which will be

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1877.

Washington, D. C., February 9, 1877.

Sm: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and herewith by direction of said commission I transmit to you the said decision in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,

President of the Commission.

Hon, THOMAS W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are so few Senators in attendance that I ask a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.
The Secretary called the roll, and after some little delay, twentyseven Senators having answered to their names,
Mr. BOUTWELL. As the subject presented to the Senate is of a good deal of importance and as there may not be a quorum here even at twelve o'clock, I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to notify absent Senators and request their attendance.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint as the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, the Senator from Minuesota, Mr. WINDOM, the Senator from Illinois, Mr. LOGAN, and the Senator

Mr. WINDOM, the Senator from Illinois, Mr. Logan, and the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis. While I do not object to the appointment of the committee by the Chair, I submit to the Chair whether there was not a distinct understanding on all sides that no business whatever, not even a call of the Senate, should take place between the hours of ten and twelve o'clock until further notice was given in regular session.

Mr. ALLISON. Until the report of the commission came in.

Mr. Davis. There was no such reservation, according to my recollection. I submit, however, without any further question that I

Mr. DAVIS. There was no such reservation, according to my recollection. I submit, however, without any further question that I thought that was the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that was the unanimous understanding pending the action of the commission generally, though not specifically. The Senator is correct in his statement that it was the understanding that there was nothing to be done between ten and twelve pending the sitting of the commission. Inasmuch as notice had been received, it was thought the Senate should be full; and for that reason the Chair entertained the motion to request the attendance of absent Senators, and the Chair asked unanimous consent of the Senate to appoint a conference committee that mous consent of the Senate to appoint a conference committee that the business of the Senate might move on.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Chair will not understand that I attribute

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Chair will not understand that I attribute to bad faith anything whatever that has been done this morning. I merely wanted to submit to the Chair the general fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. Does the Senator object to the appointment of the committee of conference? Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; certainly not. I purposely avoided making an objection to it; I think it is altogether in place; but my object in rising was rather to apologize for Senators, if there was any apology necessary, for not being here. When the Senator from Massachusetts moved to request the attendance of absent Senators I did not object to it although I thought it was not carrying out in perfect faith our to it, although I thought it was not carrying out in perfect faith our understanding

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the committee will stand as appointed.

After a further delay, and Mr. Kernan having appeared in the Chamber, making twenty-eight Senators present,

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask whether the Sergeant-at-Arms has not already gone out to execute the order of the Senate?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That will make no difference. The notice to Senators will go on, undoubtedly, in the mean time.

Mr. DAVIS. What am I to understand has been the action of the House ?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House has taken a recess until five minutes to twelve; and the Senator from Massachusetts moves that further proceedings under the call of the Senate be sus-

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that proceedings under the call be suspended.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the Senate having been informed that the Commission to decide the contested electoral votes for President and Vice-President have arrived at a decision upon the case of Florida, I move that the Secretary be directed to notify the House that the Senate is now ready to meet with that body for the purpose of proceeding in the canvass of the presidential vote.

The motion was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, if it is not out of time, I desire to present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Massachusetts—Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business is in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and prior years, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4629) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, A. D. 1868.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House of Representatives will be prepared to meet the Senate in the Hall of the House at one o'clock p. m. this day to proceed with the further count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate take a recess until five minutes to one o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot take a recess, in my opinion, under the law, until the two Houses meet. The statute says that after the report of the commission the two Houses shall again immediately meet; and I submit that nothing can be done, not even a recess taken, until that meeting is accomplished.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I always give way to the Senator from Vermont

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair decided before that no legislative business is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at twelve o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) The House of Representatives has given notice to the Senate that it is ready to receive it at one o'clock to continue the counting of the electoral vote. It is now three minutes to one. If it be the pleasure of the Senate it will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at one o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m., when the President pro tempore resumed the chair and called the Senate to order.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF FLORIDA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President of the Senate having submitted to the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress the decision of the electoral commission and the same having been read, a member of the House of Representatives from New York submitted in writing objection thereto upon which the Houses separated. The President of the Senate now lays before the Senate the original objection thus submitted, which will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

An objection is interposed by the undersigned Senators and Representatives to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of Florida, upon the following provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of Florida, upon the following grounds:

First. For that the decision determines that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in and for or on behalf of the State of Florida, is the true and lawful electoral vote of said State, when, in truth and in fact, the vote cast by Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock is the true and lawful vote of said State.

Second. For that said commission refused to receive competent and material evidence tending to prove that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not appointed electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, but were designated as electors by the returning board of said State corruptly and fraudulently, in disregard of law and with the intent to defeat the will of the people expressed in the choice of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, who were legally and regularly appointed electors by the State of Florida, in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Third. For that the decision aforesaid was founded upon the resolution and order of said commission previously made, as follows:

"Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two Houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors."

Fifth. For that said decision excludes all the evidence taken by the two Houses of Congress and by the committed by the persons whose certificates are taken as proof of the due appointment of electors.

Fifth. For that phreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long as electors for President and Vice-President would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question again: Will the Senate sustain the objection?

it seems to me the proper form would be to put the question in this way: Shall the decision of the commission stand, notwithstanding the objections made thereto? or something of that kind. I submit that is the proper form: Shall the decision of the commission stand, notwithstanding the objection made thereto?

Mr. STEVENSON. I should prefer that this paper should be printed and that the Senate should take a recess until Monday. ["No!" No!"] Gentlemen may say "no." They can vote as they please, but I must express my opinion as to the propriety of the case. This is a very important subject. Other Senators may have had an insight into this judgment; I have not. I have just heard it read, and I am unwilling, at least without an order of the Senate, to take the vote now until it has been printed and considered.

I gather from the report of the commission that all the evidence taken by both Houses of Congress has been excluded; whether rightfully excluded I am not now prepared to say, because I have not listened to all this argument and I have not had time to examine it. I am quite sure that we shall lose nothing by this motion. I think it a very proper one. I think it in accordance with the usage of the Senate. It can lead to no unnecessary delay; and my experience since I have been in this Chamber has been that no important paper has ever been brought to the consideration of the Senate without being first printed and considered; and surely, sir, no more important paper than that has ever come within the confines of this Chamber, none more important in its results—not individually; I put that on the table as compared with the more important questions which are broached in the report and upon which I intend to say nothing until I have considered it fully and examined it. I do not make the motion for delay; but to afford time for consideration I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning. but to afford time for consideration I move that the Senate take but to afford time for consideration I move that the Schate take a recess until Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Schator from Kentucky moves that the Schate take a recess until Monday at ten o'clock.

Mr. STEVENSON. And that the papers be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain the modification of the motion. If the Schator from Kentucky confines the motion to a recess, the Chair will put it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I stated when I rose that the object was to have the documents printed. That was what I stated. The very ob-have the documents printed. That was what I stated. The very object of the motion was that these papers might be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON. If it is in order, I should like to have the section of the statute bearing on this motion read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the parts referred to.

The Secretary read sections 4 and 5 of the act of January 29, 1877.

SEC. 4. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

debate.

Sec. 5. That at such joint meeting of the two Houses, seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; the Senators in the body of the Hall upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall upon the right of the the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the Houses of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House act beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon. And while any question is being considered by said commission, either House may proceed with its legislative or other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has moved a recess until Monday at ten o'clock.

Mr. STEVENSON. As the Chair misunderstood me, I will withdraw the motion for a recess and move that this paper be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the objection which has been read be printed.

Mr. KERNAN. And also the decision of the commission I trust will be printed. We have only heard that read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the motion to be to print both papers, if the Senator from Kentucky accepts the modification.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. McMILLAN. Will the effect of that motion be to prevent the action of the Senate at once upon the question before it?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would require a separate motion. The motion is that the decision and the objection be printed.

The motion is that the decision and the objection be printed.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. I imagine that there is no objection to the printing.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Certainly there is no objection to the printing unless it interferes with our action. It seems to me if we agree to print it, we must wait until it is printed, and then we shall be here over Sunday. I think the better way is to just vote down the motion to print.

shall be here over Sunday. I think the better way is to just vote down the motion to print.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that this will be printed sooner in the Record than it can possibly be printed in any other way; and we shall have a copy of the document by having it printed in the Record, as a matter of course, in the ordinary way. I have no objection to adopting the order to print; but as a matter of course we shall not see it in print in document form for several days. We know that the Printing Office is suspended, but the Record goes on. It will be printed in the Record quicker than in any other way.

In any other way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that nothing is being printed at the Printing Office except the RECORD, on account of the condition of the appropriation. The Chair will put the question on the motion.

Mr. LOGAN. This will go into the RECORD, I suppose, it having been read.

been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go into the Record.

Mr. LOGAN. Therefore, we shall have it printed sooner in that way than by an order to print.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not desire any delay; I only want to see, as I said, this report printed. As it will appear in the Record in the morning, I move now that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question on the printing has not been decided.

Mr. STEVENSON. I withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore.. The Senator from Kentucky moves a recess until Monday at ten o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I inquire what the effect would be of taking a recess? Will the two hours which have been allotted under the law for debate have expired at the time, so that no debate can then take

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will not have run.
Mr. LOGAN and Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have the debate now.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There would be two hours' debate

Mr. MERRIMON. The decision of the commission has not been read in the Senate, and I submit that it ought to be read in the Senate, so that it shall go along, in its proper place, with these exceptions.

Mr. SARGENT. It will be printed in the RECORD of the House

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The decision, the Chair will inform the Senate, is being copied for the use of the House.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not care to have it read here, but let it appear in the record of the Senate proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion, and it will so appear. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate take a recess until ten chales a Merchen.

o'clock on Monday.

Mr. McDONALD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christianey, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelingthuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalis, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—44.

ABSENT—Messrs. Dennis, Dorsey, Gordon, Jones of Nevada, and Thurman—5.

So the motion was not agreed to. Mr. WHYTE. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the Senate do not concur in the decision made by the commission created under the act approved January 29, 1877, but that the votes cast by Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, James Ernest Yonge, and Robert B. Hilton, as electors for the State of Florida, are the true and lawful votes of that State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and should be counted as the electoral votes of the State of Florida.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to strike out the word "not" before the word "concur" in the resolution of the Senator from Maryland, and to strike out the names of the electors there named and insert the names of the electors decided by the commission to be the lawful electors of the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine proposes a modification, which the Secretary will report, and then it will be read as proposed. The Chair will state in the mean while that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has submitted a resolution which will have priority.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not at all tenacious about the form. I think the resolution now submitted is entirely too full. I ask that the paper the resolution now submitted is entirely too full. I ask that the paper which I sent to the desk be read.

Mr. BLAINE. It ought to be an affirmative resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Maryland to offer his resolution as an amendment to that submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WHYTE. I was not aware that there was a resolution pend-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission should, in the judgment of the enate, stand in full force, notwithstanding the objections thereto.

Mr. SARGENT. "Notwithstanding the objections made thereto,"

I suggest to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. The resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio being affirmative it would necessarily take precedence, would it not,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that it has priority in point of time.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the suggestion of the Senator from New York I will modify the language so as to make the resolution conform to the parliamentary practice of the two Houses:

That the decision of the commission stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio modifies his resolutions.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he use the language of the law:

That the counting of the votes shall proceed in conformity with that decision.

The language of the law is that "the counting of the votes shall proceed in conformity therewith" unless both Houses overrule it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I am using the parliamentary language adopted, not only in this country but in England, by which the Sentence of the country but in England by the country but in will say that the decision of the commission is approved and stands as the judgment of the Senate, notwithstanding the objections thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission should, in the judgment of the Senate, stand in full force, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

Senate, stand in full force, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

Mr. SHERMAN. No. Send it to me and I will modify it.

Mr. WRIGHT. While the Senator from Ohio is preparing his resolution I have a resolution drawn that I will submit for reservation. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. WRIGHT. As the writing is such that others perhaps cannot read it, I will read it myself if I can get the attention of the Senate. The resolution which I submit is as follows:

That the objections made and stated to the decision of the electoral commission in determining which was the true and lawful vote of the State of Florida be, and the same are, each and every of them, overruled; and that said electoral vote of said State known and designated in the report of said commission as certificate No. 1, and each of said votes, should be counted as the true and lawful vote said State, anything in said objections to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the decision of said electoral commission be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and adopted.

Mr. WHYTE. The law itself ratifies the decision of the tribunal to whom we have submitted these questions and that decision stands to whom we have submitted these questions and that decision stands under the very law itself, unless by an order we overrule it. Therefore I offered an order overruling that decision and declaring that Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, James Ernest Yonge, and Robert B. Hilton were the true electors. There is no necessity whatever for any order confirming the decision of the commission. It stands, unless it is reversed. By the very language of the law itself it shall remain as the decision of the two Houses, unless "the two Houses whell appropriate conversion" ordering otherwise."

shall separately concur in ordering otherwise."

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution as I now present it is in the language of parliamentary law:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral votes of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio modifies his resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposition of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WHYTE. I offer mine as a substitute for that of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Striking out all after the word "resolved?"

Mr. WHYTE. Striking out all that, and substituting the word "ordered" for "resolved."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amend-

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate do not concur in the decision made by the commission created under the act approved January 29, 1877; but that the votes cast by Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, James Ernest Yonge, and Robert B. votes of the State of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to ask the Chair to state to the Senate again the question which was proposed by the Chair before these propositions were presented. I recollect that the Chair stated to the Senate the question upon his own motion before any propositions were submitted, and I should like to hear what that was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated the question to be, Shall the objection submitted be sustained by the Senate?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think that is the proper question to be submitted to the Senate. Inasmuch as the decision of the commission stands unless it is overruled by the concurrent action of the two Houses, I think that the manner in which the question was first put to the Senate by the President of the Senate is the true manner of presenting the question to the Senate.

presenting the question to the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I think so most decidedly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think that instead of entertaining these propositions we should allow the President of the Senate to put the question as he originally proposed it, because the decision stands unless tion as he originally proposed it, because the decision stands unless it is reversed.

Mr. PADDOCK. And all other propositions are superfluous.

Mr. CONKLING. How did the Chair propose it?

Mr. BOUTWELL. "Will the Senate sustain the objection?"

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to submit that these numerous propositions to settle the character of the order that ought to be entered here and the various proposed amendments to them show that we ought to have time for reflection and to prepare a proper order to be entered.

entered.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a mere matter of form.

Mr. MERRIMON. Still we do not agree about it. There is great diversity on both sides of the Chamber on that very subject. Then there is another thing. Under the statute each Senator has a right to express his approval of or dissent from the judgment of the commission; and it is apparent that there is little opportunity to express such approval or dissent without some time in which to prepare to do so. If we are going on and are not to have this opportunity, I do not believe we shall facilitate business one moment by it. I desire to have the decision of the commission read, so that we may at least have the decision of the commission read, so that we may at least know what they decided.

Mr. SARGENT. I inquire for information if the two hours are now running and have not been for some twenty minutes. If Senators desire to debate the merits of this matter, I submit that the time ought not to be wasted in this way.

Mr. MERRIMON. I submit that the two hours are not running, because the question on which we are to vote is not yet presented.

Mr. SARGENT. The main question must be taken within two hours.

Mr. MERRIMON. I submit as a point of order that the question on which the Senate is to vote is not settled, and the two hours do on which the Senate is to vote is not settled, and the two hours do not begin to run until it is settled and submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now submit the several propositions as to the form in which the question is to be taken is put to the Senate. As the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded to the form submitted by the Chair, the Secretary will report it and then the proposition of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] and the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte,] as proposed to be modified by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hamlin] and then by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Whyte,] the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hamlin] and then by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Wright.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to submit my own as an original proposition. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then that will be the third in order. The Secretary will report the proposition submitted by the Chair.

The SECRETARY. "Shall the objection submitted to the decision of the commission be sustained by the Senate?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] proposes to amend this by striking it all out and inserting what will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate do not concur in the decision made by the commission created by the act approved January 29, 1877, but that the votes cast by Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, James Ernest Yonge, and Robert B. Hilton, as electors for the State of Florida, are the true and lawful votes of that State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and should be counted as the electoral votes of the State of Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine submits—Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw any motion to modify, but my proposition can be read as a resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of the State of Florida should be counted for Rutherford B. Hayes for President and William A. Wheeler for Vice-President, as determined by the electoral commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] submitted a proposition; which will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the objections made and stated to the decision of the electoral commission in determining which was the true and lawful vote of the State of Florida, be, and the same are, each and every of them, overruled, and that said electoral vote of said State known and designuted in the report of said Commission as "certificate No. 1," and each of said votes, should be counted as the true and lawful vote of said State, anything in said objections to the contrary notwithstanding, and that the decision of said electoral commission be, and the same is hereby, confirmed and adorted.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to contribute my mite toward arriving at a correct manner of disposing of this question. I will read what I would propose:

Resolved. That it is the sense of the Senate that the objections filed in the joint convention of the two Houses touching the electoral vote of Florida be, and the same are, overruled, and that the decision of the commission as declared in the presence of the two Houses be, and the same is hereby, confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall the Chair submit the propositions? In their order of time?

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the proposition the Chair first stated reported again.

The Secretary read as follows:

Shall the objections submitted to the decision of the commission be sustained by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote be taken on this proposition?

Mr. WHYTE. Do not the rules of order prevail at this time?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being different propositions and statements, the Chair asked whether they should be taken in order of time. If the Senator objects, certainly the Chair will withorder of time. If the Senator objects, certainly the Chair will withdraw his suggestion.

Mr. WHYTE. Ido object. I want to have a vote taken on my proposition, as it is entitled to precedence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will withdraw the proposition made by the Chair, and submit the proposition made by the Senator from Ohio as being a proposition by a Senator in his seat.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask for the reading of the decision of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asked for the reading of the decision of the commission, and there being no objection the Secretary will read it.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,
Washington, D. O., February 9, A. D. 1877.

To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two Houses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877:

The electoral commission mention 1.

1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877:

The electoral commission mentioned in the said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and the objections thereto, submitted to it under the said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act and has decided and does hereby decide that the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, named in the certificate of M. L. Stearns, governor of the said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked "number one" by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely:

Four (4) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Four (4) votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

dent.

The commission also has decided and hereby decides and reports that the four persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by said State of persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by said State of Florida.

The ground of this decision, stated briefly as required by said act, is as follows: That it is not competent, under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunds the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Florida on, and according to, the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature or of the executive of Florida subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose.

As to the objection made to the eligibility of Mr. Humphreys, the commission is of opinion that, without reference to the question of the effect of the vote of an ineligible elector, the evidence does not show that he held the office of shipping commissioner on the day when the electors were appointed.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide and report that, as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated, neither of the papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of said State of Florida numbered two (2) and three (3) by the commission, and herewith returned, are the certificates or the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States and that they ought not be counted as such.

Done at Washington the day and year first above written.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] moves an amendment to strike out all of this resolution, including the word "resolved," and insert what will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate do not concur in the decision made by the commission created by the act approved January 29, 1877, but that the votes cast by Wilkinson Call, Robert Bullock, James Ernest Yonge, and Robert B. Hilton, as electors of the State of Florida, are the true and lawful votes of that State for President and Vice-President of the United States, and should be counted as the electoral votes of the State of Florida.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) My friend the Sentor from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who has with myself considered this matter in the commission, and with whom I do not agree, is absent from the Senate on account of sickness; and under the circumstances, knowing that he would vote in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Maryland, as I should vote against it, I withhold

Mr. DAVIS, (when Mr. Thurman's name was called.) The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] as has been stated by the Senator from Vermont, is confined to his room by sickness.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 45; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Sherman.]

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer as a substitute for all the propositions submitted the order put by the President, and which ought to be the first order made. That I consider to be the best and most precise statement of the case that can be made. It is—Ordered, That the objections submitted to the decision of the commission be not sustained by the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. If that is offered as a substitute for all these propositions, I suppose we vote on that after we vote on the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska offer it as a substitute for all, or as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio? of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PADDOCK. As an amendment.
Mr. HAMLIN. He offered it as a substitute. I will, then, move to amend the resolution now pending by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting the proposition which I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska offering a substitute, the Senator from Maine moves to amend the text ing a substitute, the Senator from Maine moves to amend the text of the original resolution.

Mr. WHYTE. Is it necessary to do more now than order a message to be sent to notify the House that we are ready to proceed with the count? A refusal by the Senate to order otherwise has left the decision of the commission stand as the judgment of both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That vote was on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland to a proposition which the Senate has not yet voted on. The question now is on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, the Senate having rejected the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. To that a substitute is proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, pending which the Senator from Maine offers an amendment to the text.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say just a word to the Senate in relation

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say just a word to the Senate in relation to the amendment which I have offered. I understand the language of the statute to be that if we take no action here, the decision of the to the amendment which I have offered. I understand the language | Resolved, That the vote of the State of Florida should be counted for Rutherford of the statute to be that if we take no action here, the decision of the B. Hayes for President and William A. Wheeler for Vice-President, as determined commission will stand; but you will note in the phraseology of the by the electoral commission.

resolution which I have adopted, that we affirm directly the decision made by the commission. The proposition now before the Senate is one which merely negatives the objections that were offered in joint one which merely negatives the objections that were offered in joint meeting. That would negatively affirm the decision of the commission. But it is more in accordance with my feeling and my judgment to vote directly an affirmation of that decision, and that carries also with it a negative of the objections raised in the meeting of the two Houses. I feel as one Senator that I am willing to indorse it affirmatively, and I think we ought to do so. It goes to the country with great strength if we can give a universal support, an affirmative support to the decision at which the commission has arrived, rather than merely negative the objections in the House and give only a negative merely negative the objections in the House and give only a nega-tive support to this opinion of the commission. For that reason I have offered the amendment in that way. I think there is something in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask to have the proposition of the Senator from Maine read again. I certainly do not want to waste time about the form of words, but as I understand his proposition and mine they are the same. If my friend thinks his the better form, I am perfectly willing to accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition of the Senator from Maine will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the vote of the State of Florida should be counted for Rutherford B. Hayes for President and William A. Wheeler for Vice-President, as determined by the electoral commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would suit me very well. I rather think the other is the parliamentary phrase of language; but if my friend thinks his language better, I will vote for it with pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; let us vote this in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY called for the yeas and nays, and they were or-

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert:

That the vote of the State of Florida should be counted for Rutherford B. Hayes for President and William A. Wheeler for Vice-President, as determined by the electoral commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the original for which that is offered. The Secretary read Mr. Sherman's resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission on the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would suggest to my friend from Maine, and I think that perhaps would make it acceptable—I do not know but that it is to the Senator from Ohio now—that he add to his proposed amendment the words: "Anything in the objections urged thereto, to the contrary notwithstanding." That is affirmative and negative both.

Mr. HAMLIN. We do negative the objections by passing this affirmative vote. That is clear.

Mr. SARGENT. The form in which this matter is proposed by the Senator from Ohio is plain and simple. Everybody understands it. There is not the slightest buncombe in it. It is merely in compliance with the parliamentary rule. I trust it will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 43, nays 25; as follows:

25; as follows:
YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Claytor., Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalis, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—43.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bruce, Dennis, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Sargent, and Thurman—7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio as amended, to which the Senator from Nebraska offered a substitute.

Mr. PADDOCK. I withdraw my proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after "that" and inserting:

The objection to the report of the electoral commission under the act approved January 29, 1877, be overruled and that the decision of the commission be concurred in.

Jannary 29, 1877, be overruled and that the decision of the commission be concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is still some little question of phraseology about this matter. There is a common desire to come at the same result, and I ask the Senator from Maine if he will not omit from the resolution the personal references there and adopt the phraseology that I now submit. It is a mere matter of taste, not of substance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will first read the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HAMLIN. Pardon me for a word before that. There were several propositions read; some of them did not affirm the action of the electoral commission. I wanted to do it; and when I offered the resolution which I did, it was clearly and distinctly within my mind that the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio did not do it. In looking at the language, however, I find that it does precisely what I wished to do; and it adds also a negative to the objections raised in the two Houses when they were in convention or when they were assembled together; and, therefore, it would have been entirely acceptable to me. I offered my proposition under a misapprehension. The Senator's resolution is precisely in effect what mine is. Mine, it is true, states the names of the individuals, which perhaps is not in as good taste as the language offered by the Senator from Ohio. I therefore hope on the whole that the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio will be adopted. It meets my approval.

Mr. SARGENT. Then move a reconsideration.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to reconsider the vote adopting my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to reconsider the vote adopting my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to reconsider the vote adopting his amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment may be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. The question was on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, pending which the Senator from Minnesota has submitted an amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. He will withdraw that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will be read.

Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this

Mr. WHYTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 44, nays 24; as follows:

and being taken, resulted—yeas 44, nays 24; as follows:

ABSENT—Messrs. Dennis, Edmunds, Gordon, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, and Thurman—7.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the House of Representatives be notified that the Senate has come to a determination of the matter submitted and is ready to meet with the House in joint convention.

The motion was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. Is any business in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask consent to make an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have read a statement in the Star of last evening purporting to contain the points of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in preparation by myself in relation to the Oregon electoral vote. As that statement made at this time would have a tendency to place me in rather a false position, I desire to say that the duty of the preparation of that report was assigned to myself by the subcommittee. The report is almost completed so far as I am concerned individually, but it has never been submitted as yet to the subcommittee, much less to the general Committee on Privileges and Elections. As a matter of course it would be entirely improper that I should make any statement to anybody as to the points of the report, and I have not done so. I may have stated, unquestionably I have, at various times, my individual opinion upon the points involved in that controversy; but I have never intimated to any reporter of the press or any other person, as I now remember, anything contained in the report, so far as it has been prepared.

I make this statement in justice to myself and in justice to the committee. The report is about ready to be submitted to the subcommittee, after which it will be submitted to the general committee, and, if agreed to, it will then be given to the press.

RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at two o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) The Chair is advised that the House of Representatives has taken a recess until Monday at ten o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose that on Monday at ten o'clock our meeting will be with the expectation that we shall proceed at once with a full Senate, and with that understanding I shall move that the Senate take a recess until that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business can be transacted.

Mr. SHERMAN. There has been an understanding that there shall be nothing done each day between ten and twelve. That understanding I do not wish applied to our action on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There cannot be any legislative

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There cannot be any legislative business transacted.

Mr. SHERMAN. But we ought to be prepared at ten o'clock to proceed with the business of the count.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Ohio. I understand the recess of the House has been taken without debate upon the matter before the House. The House has two hours to debate it. As we can do no legislative business under the rule, is it worth while to come here at ten o'clock and wait inevitably for two hours doing pothing?

rule, is it worth while to come here at ten o'clock and wait inevitably for two hours doing nothing?

Mr. INGALLS. Is it certain that the House will debate two hours? Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better be here at any rate.

Mr. CONKLING. No, it is not certain that the House will debate two hours; but it is quite certain the House will vote, and we know as a fact that it takes about forty minutes to call the roll of yeas and nays in the House. I repeat that inasmuch as we can do no business here under the common understanding, I question whether it is worth while to hasten here at ten o'clock in order that inevitably we may sit and do nothing, sitting in idleness for an hour or two.

Mr. SHERMAN. The understanding that we were to do no business between ten and twelve related to a condition of things that is not likely to occur on Monday. It seems to me we had better come here at ten o'clock, and at least be prepared to transact any business and have a quorum of the Senate here for that purpose. Therefore I feel it my duty to give notice that our understanding by common consent shall not apply to Monday, but that we shall be here at ten o'clock to proceed with the count.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the proposition of the Senator from Ohio?

ator from Ohio?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the proposition of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall, so far as one person can, dissent from the common understanding about not doing anything between ten and twelve o'clock; and I give notice, so far as I am concerned, that I will not consider myself bound by that agreement on Monday next., Under the circumstances I think we had better have a quorum here, at least to receive any messages from the House, if any are sent.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Chair whether under the ruling of the Chair, on Monday morning, before the House has disposed of the objections to the count of the votes of Florida, legislative business will be in order in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will understand that I do not propose to get a quorum here for legislative business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would supplement what the Senator from Ohio said by adding that we can have no knowledge that the House will take five minutes in determining the question, and I think that we ought to be here promptly at ten o'clock, so as to be prepared to advise them that we are ready to proceed with the count.

Mr. CONKLING. We have advised them already.

Mr. WRIGHT. At least we should be here prepared to enter on the work.

the work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa that the House has been duly informed of the fact that the Senate has determined upon the objections to the vote of Florida.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand so; but on Monday morning it may be that the House will be quite prepared to proceed at once with the count, and we can then advise them that we shall be prepared to meet them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock Monday forenoon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until ten o'clock a. m., Monday, February 12.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 1, 1877.

[CALENDAR DAY, February 10.]

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled, and was called to order by the Speaker at ten o'clock a.m., (Saturday, February 10.), Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House take a recess until five minutes before twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and one minute a. m.) the House took a recess until cleven o'clock and fiftyfive minutes a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at eleven o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sympson, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House to print the annual report of Professor Hayden of the geological and geographical surveys of the Territories for 1875 and 1876.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title.

A bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. Windom, Mr. Logan,

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. HOPKINS. On yesterday a message was received from the President transmitting the catalogues and report of the board on behalf of the Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876. By inadvertence that message with the accompanying report was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has no possible connection with buildings and grounds, and I therefore ask consent that the reference be changed to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. STEVENSON submitted a report from the committee of conference; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood cemetery, having met, after a full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In line 15 strike out the word "two" and insert "three;" in line 15 strike out the word "two".

In line 26 of said amendments, after the word "held," insert the words "in the city of Washington;" in line 28, after the word "trustees," strike out all the words down to and including the word "meeting," in line 31, and insert the words "elected by the lot-proprietors; "in line 40, after the word "elected," insert the words "on the first Monday in June of every year;" in line 57 strike out the words "of Glenwood Cemetery," and in line 59, after the word "mean," insert the words "and shall signify." And the Senate agree to the same.

A. E. STEVENSON,

Me agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,
F. M. COCKRELL, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the reort was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRAYER.

The SPEAKER, (at twelve o'clock, m.) The Chair asks consent that the Chaplain may now offer prayer.

There being no objection, prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION-VOTE OF FLORIDA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires for the information of the House to lay before it a communication, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the electoral commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and has transmitted said decision to the President of the Senate, to be read at the meeting of the two Houses according to said act.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,

President of the Commission.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYLER. I move that the Clerk of the House be directed to inform the Senate that the House will be prepared at one o'clock this day to receive them in joint session for the purpose of proceding further in reference to counting the electoral vote.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that the gentleman modify his motion so as to provide for notifying the Senate that the House is now ready to receive them; because I am informed that the Senate is now in session and ready to come over at any time; so that by providing for a joint meeting at once we may save time.

Mr. SAYLER. I prefer the resolution as I have offered it. There are some matters pending which require attention. Besides that a number of members are not now here. I think one o'clock is a better

Mr. HALE. Then I will submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain a motion to amend.

Mr. HALE. I offer as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio the following:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House of Representatives is now in session and ready to meet the Senate in the Hall for further proceedings under the provisions of the act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. SAYLER. I call the previous question on my motion and the amendment thereto.

amendment thereto.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will not the gentleman yield to me one minute before he calls the previous question?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order?

Mr. SAYLER. I think there is no necessity for discussion. I insist on the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. I feel impelled to do it. I submit that under the law we are constructively at all times ready to receive the Senate for this business; and if we now establish a precedent of fixing a time we might under that precedent. establish a precedent of fixing a time, we might under that precedent undertake to fix a time entirely beyond the convenience of the other parties who, under the law, participate in this business; and thus we may directly violate the act under which we are proceeding. I think may directly violate the act under which we are proceeding. I think my friend from Ohio must see that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order? Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir. I would like to have the Chair rule whether, if we have the right to delay the meeting until one o'clock, we would not have as much right to delay it for ten hours.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair before making his decision allow me to quote the language of the act? After providing for the decision of the commission, of which the House through the Speaker has been notified, the act, in line 89, page 6 of our print, proceeds: "where-upon the two Houses shall again meet," evidently implying that it is to be done immediately upon receiving notification of the decision. I say that in support of the point of order made by my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would amount practically to a repeal of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would amount practically to a repeal of that act by putting this off to one o'clock, and I suppose my friend from Ohio does not mean that.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio would on consideration accept the amendment which I have made. We cannot gain anything by extending the time for the fragment of an hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa that if we repeal this act in this instance then we repealed it the other day when a similar motion was made. But the Chair thinks there is nothing in the act which would not allow a recess for a reasonable time during the session to-day.

Mr. HALE. There is no necessity we should take a recess. We are ready to meet in joint session at this time; why, then, postpone it until one o'clock?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The scope of the act is that the joint meeting shall take place as soon as notification arrives that the commission have reached a decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to follow the exact words

Mr. SAYLER. There is no danger in fixing the hour for joint meeting at one o'clock, and besides it will accommodate a number of gen-

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.
The question recurred on Mr. Hale's amendment.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 120.
Mr. HALE. I will not at the present time call the yeas and nays, but give notice on any subsequent attempt at delay I will do so.
The SPEAKER. That is not the privilege of the gentleman.
Mr. SPRINGER. We accept service of notice without any further formality. The question next recurred on Mr. SAYLER's motion; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAYLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE LATE ADMIRAL CHARLES WILKES.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time.

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit Admiral Charles Wilkes, now on the retired list of the Navy, with the sum of $350, being the amount paid by Paymaster Hosford to Paymaster Tolfree on account of mess-bill, and which was repaid to Paymaster Hosford, but not taken up in his account.

Mr. WARD. I move to amend the bill by inserting, before the word "Admiral," the words "the late," and striking out the words "now on the retired list of the Navy." These amendments are rendered necessary by the recent death of Admiral Wilkes.

The amendments were agreed to.
The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was

Mr. WARD moved to amend the title by inserting the words "the late" before the word "Admiral;" so it will read: "For the relief of the late Admiral Charles Wilkes."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTORS OF THE RAM ALBEMARLE.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4370) for the relief of the captors of the ram Albemarle; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not to be brought back on a motion to re-

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

INTERNAL-REVENUE OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4630) to amend the laws relating to internal-revenue officers and agents; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. Not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that he had been directed to inform the House of Representa tives that the president of the electoral commission had notified the Senate that the commission had arrived at a decision of the questions submitted to them in relation to the electoral votes of Florida, and that the Senate was now ready to meet the House for the purpose of laying before the two Houses the report of the said decision.

WILLIAM T. MALSTER.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4631) for the relief of William T. Malster, of Baltimore, Maryland; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill now put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think that bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is necessary for its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The report is in order from the Committee of Ways and Means for committal, but not for immediate action.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The bill was recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CYRUS WILSON.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4632) granting a pension to Cyrus Wilson, late a private of Company L, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MIRIAM V. KINNEY.

Mr. FORT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4633) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kinney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SEELYE. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 4257) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875, and ask that it be now put upon its passage.

Mr. FORT. I desire to reserve points of order on the bill.
The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Objection was made.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman who makes objection will waive it for a single moment until I give a word of explanation I think he will not insist on his objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SEELYE. This is legislation which it is quite indispensable to make, and against which I think there will be no objection from any quarter. The bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs after very careful consideration. The Allegany reservation, occupying a strip of land of about forty miles long by a mile and a half in breadth—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that objection cuts off debate.

Mr. SEELYE. I understood the objection to be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. SEELYE. I understood the objection to be withdrawn.
The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.
Mr. SEELYE. Did not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] withdraw the objection?
Mr. HOLMAN. I did not make the objection; I rose for another purpose. The objection I should have made, if I had made one, would have been to the application of the $15,000 appropriated in the last session of Congress. I must object to that feature of the bill; but I have no objection to the survey being made.
Mr. SEELYE. That appropriation was made two years ago. There is no objection, then, I understand, to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to that feature of the bill.
Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman can offer an amendment upon that point if he chooses.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

On motion of Mr. O'BRIEN, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; not to be brought back on a motion to recon-

AMASA J. FINCH.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1152) granting a pension to Amasa J. Finch was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4634) to amend the statutes relative to the transportation of imported merchandise; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move that the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table; and that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and self for a committee of conference.

ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIO HONDO CLAIMS.

Mr. LEVY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4625) to confirm certain Rio Hondo claims to Pedro and Vital Flores; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM MAJORS.

Mr. WALLING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4636) granting a pension to William Majors, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ARCTIC EXPLORATIONS.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask unanimous consent to present a memorial from the Cincinnati Society of Natural History, in favor of authorizing a new arctic exploration, and as it is brief I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and printed in the RECORD. No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senators and Members of the Forty-fourth Congress:

The Cincinnati Society of Natural History respectfully represents to the honorable Senators and Members of the Forty-fourth Congress the importance of further and more successful arctic exploration. In all the various branches of science are found important problems which can be definitely settled in the polar regions only. The geography of that region is undecided. Hydrography and meteorology, two branches of science in which the United States are already pre-eminent, and a more complete and thorough knowledge of which is imperatively demanded by the ever-enlarging interests of science and of commerce, can nowhere be definitely settled but in the arctic zone. The laws of gravity are still uncertain and can be decided in the vicinity of the north pole only. Mineralogy, geology, and all the branches of natural history still largely depend upon a thorough exploration of the polar regions.

of natural history still largely depend upon gions.

This society, therefore, in the interest of science and for the honor of our country, respectfully recommends favorable legislation on the subject of polar exploration, and convinced that colonization is the most practicable way of conducting an expedition of this nature, recommend the passage of the bill to authorize and equip an expedition to the arctic seas, now in the hands of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The above memorial was unanimously adopted at a full meeting of the Cincinnati Society of Natural History, held Tuesday evening, February 6, 1877.

J. F. JUDGE, Recording Secretary.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, February 7, 1877.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Mr. WARREN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4637) to aid in the establishment of cheap telegraphic communication between America and Europe, and to secure to the Government free transmission of its messages for twenty years; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. M. H. SARGENT.

Mr. WARREN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4638) for the relief of Mrs. M. H. Sargent, of Cambridge, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT COURT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. CROUNSE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time the bill (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska.

I will say that there is no objection to this bill from any quarter. No objection was made, and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the fall term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska shall hereafter be held on the second Monday in November in each year, instead of the "Wednesday after the second Tuesday in October" as now provided by law.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was assed; and also moved that the motion to recnosider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4523) for the relief of James Whitehead, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House insist on its non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate to the Military Academy appropriation bill for the ensuing fiscal year, and that the request of the Senate for a conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to reconsider the vote last taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER. I now move that the bill with the amendments of the Senate be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

SIOUX INDIANS.

I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's Mr. BOONE. table, for consideration at this time, the bill (S. No. 1185) to ratify an agreement with certain bands of Sioux Indians, and also with a number of the Arapahoes and Cheyenne Indians, with a view of putting the bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to a day being set apart for the consideration of this bill, but I think that time should be allowed to enable the members of the House to examine its provisions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to its present consid-

Mr. MILLS. I do; but I am willing that a day shall be set for its consideration.

Mr. BOONE. I will then ask that it be made the special order for Monday at one o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to that at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order.

Mr. BOONE. Cannot it be done by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be made the special order after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of, and let the case be heard then.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to any special order being made.

Mr. BOONE. I ask consent that this bill may be printed for the use of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN A. DARLING.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs Senate bill No. 1202, for the relief of John A. Darling.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to

C. G. FREUDENBURG.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs

Senate bill No. 189, placing the name of C. G. Freudenburg upon the retired list, United States Army.

There was no objection; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

DANIEL MIDDOUGH.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4639) granting a pension to Daniel Middough; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TIMOTHY BAKER.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 305 a bill (H. R. No. 4640) for the relief of Timothy Baker, of Saint John's, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY L. JAMES.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4641) for the relief of Henry L. James, of Williamsburgh, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

E. B. HEAD.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 862 a bill (H. R. No. 4642) for the relief of E. B. Head, postmaster at Harrodsburgh, Kentucky; which was read a a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. WISDOM.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 441) to compensate John H. Wisdom for carrying the United States mails; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SIMON M. PRESTON.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1159) for the relief of Simon M. Preston, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of Mississippi.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That is the right of the gentleman.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be private.

HEARTT, WAITE & DODGE.

Mr. BRADLEY also, from the same committee, reported back adadversely the bill (H. R. No. 908) for the relief of Heartt, Waite & Dodge, of Chicago, Illinois; which was laid upon the table, and the accom-panying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES M. BRIGGS.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4643) permitting the executor of Charles M. Briggs to sue in the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.
Mr. PAGE. I move that the House now take a recess until one o'clock p. m., in order that the officers of the House may have an opportunity to arrange seats for Senators in the joint meeting of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and fifty-six minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until one o'clock p. m.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The recess having expired, the Speaker called the House to order at one o'clock p. m., when the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by its President pro tempore and its Secretary, the members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

In accordance with the law seats had been provided as follows:

In accordance with the law seats had been provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; for the Senators, in the body of the Hall upon the right of the Presiding Officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as Presiding Officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

ing Officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The two Houses, having separated pending the submission to the commission of objections to the certificates from the State of Florida, have re-assembled to hear and to coincide or otherwise with the decision of that tribunal, which, by a majority of the commission, in writing and signed by the members agreeing therein, will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each House.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

**Rectangle of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two Houses of Congress under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877.

The electoral commission mentioned in the said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and the objections thereto submitted to it under the said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act and has decided and does hereby decide that the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, named in the certificate of M. L. Stearns, governor of the said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked "number one" by said Commission, and herewith returned, are the votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Four (4) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of New York, for Vice-President.

The commission also has decided and herely and reports that the tour.

The commission also has decided, and hereby decides and reports that the four persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by said State of Florida.

The commission also has decided, and hereby decides and reports that the four persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by said State of Florida.

The ground of this decision, stated briefly as required by said act, is as follows:
That it is not competent, under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Florida on, and according to, the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature or of the executive of Florida subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose.

As to the objection made to the eligibility of Mr. Humphreys, the commission is of opinion that, without reference to the question of the effect of the vote of an ineligible elector, the evidence does not show that he held the office of shipping commissioner on the day when the electors were appointed.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide and report that, as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated, neither of the papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of said State of Florida numbered two (2) and three (3) by the commission, and herewith returned, are the certificates or the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States and that they ought not be counted as such.

Done at Washington the day and year first above written.

SAMUEL F. MILLER, W. STRONG, FERED'K T. FRELINGHUYSEN, JAMES A. GARFIELD, GEORGE F. HOAR, Commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there objections to this decision? Mr. FIELD. I submit an objection to the decision and report just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The member from New York [Mr. FIELD] submits an objection to the decision; which will be read by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. Adams, Clerk of the House, read as follows:

An objection is interposed by the undersigned Senators and Representatives to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of Florida, upon the following

A. D. 1877," as to the true and invarious that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, First. For that the decision determines that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in and for or on behalf of the State of Florida, is the true and lawful electoral vote of said State, when, in truth and in fact, the vote cast by Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock is the true and lawful vote of said State.

Second. For that said commission refused to receive competent and material evidence tending to prove that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not appointed electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, but were designated as electors by the returning board of said State corruptly and fraudulently, in disregard of law and with the intent to defeat the will of the people expressed in the choice of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, who were legally and regularly appointed electors by the State of Florida, in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Third. For that the decision aforesaid was founded upon the resolution and order of said commission previously made, as follows:

"Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two Houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors."

Fourth. For that said decision excludes all the evidence taken by the two Houses of Congress and by the committees of each House concerning the frauds, errors, and irregularities committed by the persons whose certificates are taken as proof of the due appointment of electors.

Fifth. For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the certificate of — Stearns, governor, as also that of the board of State canvassers, was procured or given in pursanace of a fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy to cheat the State of Florida out of its rightful choice of electors and to substitute therefor those who had not been chosen or appointed electors by said State in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Sixth. For that said commission refused to recognize the right of the courts of the State of Florida to review and reverse the judgment of the returning board or board of State canvassers rendered through fraud and without jurisdiction, and rejected and refused to consider the action of said c

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
On the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the member from New York, who submitted this objection, a duplicate, so that each House may have a copy?

Mr. FIELD sent to the Clerk's desk a copy of the objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the decision? [A pause.] If there be none, the Senate will retire to its Chamber, that the Houses respectively may consider and determine the objection.

The Senate then withdrew.

Mr. LYNDE. I move the House take a recess until Monday morning.

Mr. HALE. I raise a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. It is that under the act providing for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President the House has nothing to do but go on at once and consider the objections which have been do but go on at once and consider the objections which have been taken to the decision of the commission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will please indicate what part of the act he refers to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Chair—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois later; he desires now to hear the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. The section upon which my point is made is section 4 of the act.

But first let me call the attention of the Chair to a part of section 3, which provides that whenever a decision is made by the commission it shall be reported with its reasons to the Houses, "whereupon"—showing that the whole purpose and scope of the law is to provide for immediate action at every stage—"whereupon the two Houses shall again meet and such decision shall be read and entered Houses shall again meet and such decision shall be read and entered in the Journal of each House, and the counting of the vote shall proceed in conformity therewith"—shall proceed in conformity therewith unless upon objection made thereto in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House, &c. The intention fundamentally is here shown that the count "shall proceed" unless under the provision of the act something else intervenes. Now what is that? That is the objection provided by the act of five objectors on the part of the Senate and the House, and when that shall be received, the Houses shall separate. Then section 4—after section 2 has provided for this intervening matter, which is the only thing that can interrupt the counting of the votes—goes on to declare the order to be pursued when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, the business is confined strictly to the purposes for which the Houses have separated, and the president of the joint meeting of the two Houses has just declared what that purpose is, namely, to consider and determine upon the objections raised in the joint session. We separated for no other purpose; we are here for no other purpose, and when we found ourselves in separate session we had two hours only to arrive at a determination upon the one question before us and must proceed at once to consider it and settle it in that time. No man upon this can speak more than it and settle it in that time. No man upon this can speak more than ten minutes, and the question must be put at the end of the debate.

If the framers of this bill did not by these provisions mean to set-tle clearly and determinately that the count should proceed at once, that no other business should intervene, that nothing could interrupt it but an objection, and that when the session closed or the two it but an objection, and that when the session closed or the two Houses separated they were to meet for a specific purpose to be at once acted on, it is difficult to see how they fixed upon the language used. We are here under that provision. We are here in the House for the purpose of considering such objection as has been raised in the joint session. We are here under the language of the statute which declares the count shall proceed; and I appeal to the Chair, this being the evident purpose of the law, this being in the regular order of its proceeding, that we ought to go on and consider its objection, not to overrule this point of order, which tests to a certain extent the efficiency of this bill which, so far as we are concerned upon this side of the House, was not forced into enactment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I send up to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read, a portion of section 5 of the act under which the two Houses are now operating.

two Houses are now operating. The Clerk read as follows:

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, this portion of section 5, which has just been read by the Clerk, was framed to meet exactly the contingency in which this House now finds itself; and it is a strange coincidence, this is Saturday, and the very terms provided there exclude Sunday, which makes this motion to take a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock in order. I further submit it is not unreasonable this House should take this short recess in order to determine whether we will overrule this judgment, when the commission have had nearly ten days to consider whether they would make this judgment.

Mr. McCRARY. The clause of the act which the gentleman from Illinois has had read at the Clerk's desk, so far from supporting his position, is entirely conclusive against it as I understand it. It provides:

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to the counting any such votes or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided to direct a recess, &c.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a question did arise at the last meeting of the joint convention, and in pursuance of the power given by this very clause of the act a recess was ordered and several subsequent recesses have been ordered. The power to take a recess under that provision of the act has now been exhausted. We have resorted to the means which the act provides for determining what is the constitutional vote of this State, and we have now reached again the point where we are to proceed under the Constitution to count the vote; and when in that state the act clearly means that we shall take no recess until we have counted all the votes that we can count, objections to them having been considered and reported upon.

But, sir, I make another point. I submit to the House that independently of this act of Congress, in view of the imperative provision of the Constitution itself, under which we are proceeding, the House can take no recess at this time. The Constitution provides that when the votes are opened in the presence of the two Houses they "shall then be counted." From the necessity of the case, we had to call a halt, and take measures to determine which of three certificates from the State was the vote of the State of Florida. We could only justify the delay which we have already had under the Constitution upon a plea of necessity; for the Constitution expressly declares that "the vote shall then be counted." But we have taken the steps required by the act. We have sought the opinion of this commission. We have received their report. We have exhausted our power to delay the proceedings by taking a recess; and we are now at a point when the Constitution imperatively commands that the vote shall be counted.

I submit, therefore, that, whether we look at the act itself or whether we look at the Constitution, we are bound to proceed as fast and as far as it is possible for us to proceed, without any further

Mr. KASSON. There is an interpretation of the meaning of the act made in the very report of the committee to which I find appended the signature of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] who last spoke. I beg to remind the House of the concluding words of the report of the committee that prepared the bill. They say:

In conclusion, we respectfully beg leave to impress upon Congress the necessity of a speedy termination upon this subject. It is impossible to estimate the material loss that the country daily sustains from the existing state of uncertainty. It directly and powerfully tends to unsettle and paralyze business, to weaken public and private credit, and to create apprehensions in the minds of the people, that disturb the peaceful tenor of their ways and mar their happiness.

The spirit of the bill, sir, is indicated in the report of the commit-The spirit of the bill, sir, is indicated in the report of the committee, a committee that was able to carry with them upon the principles of that report a large majority of this House; and the essential principle of that report is that, in the question of determining who is the Chief Magistrate of this country, there should be no delay and no possibility of doubt left to embarrass the public mind, which the two Houses could avoid by the passage of an extraordinary act. Now the question is presented, shall we unnecessarily take a recess postponing further action for two days? We all know the Constitution says that when the votes are opened they "shall then be counted;" and we have given the construction to that that they are to be counted on the very day that they are opened; and that construction has and we have given the construction to that that they are to be counted on the very day that they are opened; and that construction has force to-day so far that now we are legislatively in the day of Thursday the 1st day of February. It is useless, Mr. Speaker, to disguise the fact that if the majority of this House take a recess to-day until Monday unnecessarily, instead of going on with the count, the public agitation will be increased tenfold. The people will ask the reason why we are suspending the processes provided for by the Constitution and the law, and postponing action, and continuing doubt for two days unnecessarily. And when they make that inquiry, it will be followed by another: Does the majority of the House of Representatives intend to prevent the completion of the presidential count?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

Mr. KASSON. Right or wrong, that question will be asked from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean to-morrow morning if this action is taken now. It is evident to us all that objections may be made from time to time and delay may be necessarily caused, but certainly the reasons given for this delay are entirely inadequate. While this commission have been considering these questions, the members of this House and the Senate have been considering them. There is no justification whatever for delay to consider this decision, when the principles upon which it rests have been under discussion in this House even before the commission was organized.

Under these circumstances I submit to the patriotism of the House of Representatives, to the interest it has in preserving the peace and restoring the prosperity of the country, that they at least interpose no unnecessary delay in those processes to which the whole country is looking for solving a difficult question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he voted for this bill on which he is invoking the patriotic consideration of Proventations.

tion of the House of Representatives?

Mr. KASSON. I did not; but the majority of this House did, alleging their own patriotism and uniting in the report from which I leging their own patriotism and uniting in the report from which I have read this extract.

Mr. SAVAGE. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the debate should be confined to the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. I am speaking with the view of getting the attention of the House to the spirit of the bill as well as the mere language of the report of the committee.

The spirit of the bill is to insure speedy action, and it is a question worthy the consideration of the Speaker, if there be any doubt about the matter whether he should not solve that doubt in the spirit and intent of the bill.

intent of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] who last addressed the House directed his argument rather to the question whether a recess would be desirable or proper than to the question whether it would be admissible. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrary] who preceded him made two objections to the right of the House at this time to take a recess. The first was that a recess cannot be taken because the contingency provided for in the law upon which a recess could have been taken has expired. The language is:

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act; in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Now, sir, the gentleman says that a question has arisen; that it has been committed to the tribunal; that the tribunal has passed upon it; that the question is settled, and that there is no longer any right upon the part of the House to take a recess. Now, the gentleman himself voted for and defended this bill. The whole theory upon which the act was justified was that the final decision upon any question raised as to who were the electors in any State rested with the two Houses and that this tribunal was an advisory beard.

the two Houses, and that this tribunal was an advisory board.

We attached a certain weight to their decision, making it prima facie evidence, and binding ourselves not to reject their conclusions except by concurrent vote of the two Houses. But to say that any question has been settled simply by the report of the commission is clearly not authorized by the language of the act.

The second point made by the gentleman is a broader one. He puts it on constitutional grounds; that the counting of the votes once commenced must proceed without interruption to the end. The objection means this or it means nothing. The only comment I have to make upon his argument on that point is that if the gentleman from Iowa is correct, then I do not know how he found it within his power, as a Representative, under the terms of the Constitution, to vote for a bill which provides for a recess in a contingency which has arisen and still exists and pending which contingency this motion arisen and still exists, and pending which contingency this motion was made

Mr. HOSKINS. I have no doubt that the Speaker of the House desires to arrive at a just decision under this law upon the point of order now pending, and I rise more especially to call the attention of the Speaker of the House to the last clause of the fifth section of the bill, which I will read :

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Now the recess here spoken of very clearly is the recess while these questions are under consideration by the joint commission, and no recess shall be taken except when there is a question arising and that question is under consideration by the joint commission. The language of the act is:

And while any question is being considered by said commission, either House may proceed with its legislative or other business.

It was clearly, it seems to me, the intention of this law to provide that no recess should be taken except while the two Houses shall be temporarily dissolved and the joint commission is in session. When the joint commission makes its report to the House there is no pro-vision of law for a recess until another case shall have arisen upon the electoral vote of a certain State, and shall have been referred to the joint commission.

I submit then to the Chair that the law, both in its spirit and letter contemplates no recess whatever, except while the joint commission is in session on matters that have been referred to it. It therefore seems to me clear that the point of order ought to be sustained.

Mr. HOOKER. An objection has been made to the motion offered by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] by some gentlemen on the oppposite side, that it is in violation of that provision of the Constitution which provides that, when there is an assemblage of the two Houses for the purpose of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, the vote shall "then be counted." It will be found by reference to the first section of this bill that it provides for the manner in which the two Houses shall separate and consider the vote where there is but one return, and that section provides as follows:

where there is but one return, and that section provides as follows:

Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one return has been received shall be rejected except by the affirmative vote of the two Houses. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the Presiding Officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted.

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that even in cases where there are two returns from a State, but a single return, there is no provision of the law which prevents either House from taking a recess, and I think there is no reasonable construction of the Constitution which would imply that there is any imperative necessity for the House making a decision upon a contested case upon the same day on which the two Houses separate.

When you come to the second provision of the law which provides for the commission, it has been well stated by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Warren] that this bill recommended itself to this House primarily because it reserved in the second clause of the bill the power to five Representatives of this House and five Senators of the other House to present their objections in writing to the consideration and adoption of the report of the commission. The bill then goes on to provide that the two Houses shall separate when the objections have thus been presented, as they have been presented this morning by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] properly signed according to the terms of the bill. And the act then proceeds to provide that at least two hours shall be given to discussion upon those objections. It has been well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] that, inasmuch as the consideration of this grave question of the electoral vote of Florida has occupied the time of the joint commission for ten days, it is not unreasonable that this House should have some little time to deliberate in reference to it.

Now in reference to the power of the House to take a recess, under to this House primarily because it reserved in the second clause of

Now in reference to the power of the House to take a recess, under the second section of the bill, I take it for granted that the argument just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hoskins] cannot apply, for the simple reason that the power to take a recess pending the consideration of an objection made to the finding of the commission is as emphatic as if objection was simply made to the counting of the vote of a State from which but a single return has been made.

If an objection be made to a single return, it must be considered by the House, it must be discussed by the House, and it must be deliberated upon by the House. It is unreasonable to suppose that this re-cess cannot be taken when the two Houses separate to consider an ob-jection to the judgment of the commission, when the commission has occupied so much time in its consideration.

The fifth section of the act has been referred to as giving the power to the House to take a recess. It has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hoskins] that that section applies alone to the question of the power of the House to take a recess pending the consideration of objections to the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we will not the electoral vote of a State, which we wil tion had been made before the commission had convened. I find no such restriction even in the language or in the context of the act. On the contrary, the powers to take a recess must be emphatic with reference to the one case as to the other. It is not confined to the case in which a matter is being considered by the Commission, but it is a general power, where an electoral vote is objected to, for either House to take a recess not beyond ten o'clock of the next day, Sunday ex-

Therefore, if we now take a recess until ten o'clock on Monday morning, we will be taking a recess under the provisions of the act. I think the objection to the power of the House to take a recess at this time is not good, whether you look to the first section of the act regarding single returns or to the second section of the act when dual returns are being considered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We met in joint meeting on the first day of this month to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President. If no question had arisen, such as has been referred to this commission, we could not have taken a recess at all; we must have continued in joint session and gone on from day to day until all the States were disposed of.

Provision is made in the electoral-commission act to the effect that when we come to the point where we cannot go on in joint meeting, the commission having received possession of some of the papers, then by the latter clause of section 5 of the act we are allowed to proceed with legislative business, and while doing so we can take a recess. Section 4 of this bill should have come in after section 5, because it brings us down to the place where we now are in the counting of these electoral votes; that is, after a matter has been referred to the commission and the commission has made their report upon it to the two Houses in joint session, and objection is made to the report of the commission. The spirit of the act must be that the act of one House cannot defeat its provisions; that no act of either House can interfere with the convenience of the joint meeting of We shut our doors against the Senate by taking a recess and prevent the work of the commission under the act. The Senate may prevent the work of the commission under the act. The Senate may find it convenient to do the same at some future time and the good faith that should exist between the two Houses in determining the great question thereby destroyed. The principle that should control in taking a recess while both Houses are considering questions relative to the count should at least be by concurrent action; otherwise the convenience of one is the plea for dangerous delay.

The two Houses have now separated to consider and decide upon

The two Houses have now separated to consider and decide upon the objections that have been made to the report of the joint commis-

Now here comes the privilege as well as the mandate under the each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes—

Until two hours are consumed, when the main question shall be

That is the only thing in order. We have, therefore, since we met on the 1st day of February, been acting under the first, second, third, and fifth sections of this act until to-day; and now we are acting under the fourth section of the act.

Leaving out of section 4 the permission to debate, and we have a duty imposed upon us in these words:

SEC. 4. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, * * * t shall be the duty of each House to put the main question.

Even with the power to debate, the main question is to be put at the end of two hours, and no recess is under these circumstances provided for.

It is now in order, and nothing else is in order, to proceed to debate for two hours, if gentlemen see fit to do so, the objection which has been made to the report of the commission; and at the end of the two hours a vote must be taken, and then the two Houses come together again. Any other interpretation will nullify the act under which we are proceeding, and will be revolution against that act, as well as against the Constitution, that certainly requires the votes of State the country without recess or adjournment when it has a State to be counted without recess or adjournment when it has been determined what are the votes of a State, as has been in this case. The act must be interpreted so as to carry itself into effect.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. It seems to me there is no lawyer in this House, and no one with a discriminating mind, if I may so speak without disrepect, who after a minute and careful examination of this act can doubt for a single moment that the motion for a recess now pending is in order. The word "recess" does not apply to the joint meeting in any respect whatever. The joint meeting of the two Houses cannot take a recess.

But the act provides that when a certain event occurs, when an objection is made and the two Houses have separated, then the two Houses may take a recess; but the word "recess" is applied exclusively to the two Houses. The act provides that when a count may be objected to or any other objection is made, for whatever purpose, and the two Houses separate, then either House may take a recess, but the two Houses in joint meeting cannot take a recess.

Now here is the very contingency contemplated by the act, in which we may take a recess. Here is a vote objected to. And if it was any other objection what is the language of the act?

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act; in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Now we have a perfect right to take a recess at this moment before we go into the consideration of the objection made. I admit that after the House goes into consideration of the objection there is a provision requiring that debate be limited to two hours in tenminute speeches. But it seems to me there is no doubt whatever as to the admissibility of the motion now made.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask the Chair to consider whether or not section 5, to which gentlemen on the other side have referred, operates in point of fact upon the condition of the House at this moment in its present situation with regard to the business which has been intrusted to it. The House is now in that position in which, in accordance with the uniform practice heretofore, under that provision of the Constitution which made it the imperative duty of the Presi-dent of the Senate to open the certificates at an appointed time and declared that the votes should then be counted.

In the course of seventy-six years, from 1789 to 1865, more than three-quarters of a century, I do not think there can be found a single instance where the point having been reached at which the Constitution required that the votes should "then be counted" in the presence of the two Houses that a recess has been directed or proposed. It has been the invariable practice, so far as I remember, that at the point of time I have specified when the Constitution required them to be counted they have been counted. I do not suggest any theory as to whose duty it might have been to perform this work, but only to assert that without recess, adjournment, delay, or proposition of delay, the votes have then been counted.

We have now reached this exact point of time when the Constitu-tion requires that the electoral votes given at the presidential elec-1876 shall be counted.

All the proceedings preliminary to this final result have been completed.

The certificates have been opened, and in pursuance of a law enacted to meet the difficulties presented in this case, disputed ques tions of law and fact have been referred to a committee composed of Representatives, Senators, and judges of the Supreme Court. They have been considered and debated by this tribunal for eight days; they have, with the aid of the ablest counsel the country affords, been brought to a final decision, which has been reported to the Senate and House in pursuance of the provisions of the law, namely, that the votes of certain electors from the State of Florida for President and Vice-President should be counted. We are here to count those votes. It is true that if certain formal objections are made in the manner prescribed by the law, the Houses may separate, and there may be debate for two hours. But nevertheless, at the conclusion of this debate, the command of the Constitution and of the law is peremptory that the votes shall then be counted.

Let me ask the attention of the Speaker to the provision of the statute, section 5, which has been read by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, and other gentlemen, as justifying the proposition for a

Such joint meeting [of the Senate and House] shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House, not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

"In which case!" These are the words that control the House in regard to a recess. That is, after the joint meeting shall have been terminated by the submission of all disputed questions to the electoral commission for consideration and final determination, and the two Houses shall have separated, then it shall be in order for either House to take a recess not beyond the hour of ten o'clock the next day, or to "proceed with its legislative or other business"— in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon; and while any question is being considered by said commission either House may proceed with its legislative or other business.

sidered by the electoral commission. Its labors in that regard are finished. Its final and conclusive report, so far as that tribunal is concerned, has been entered upon our Journal and is now before the House. The provisions of section 5 of the act, as to the right to difinished. House. The provisions of section 5 of the act, as to the right to direct a recess, are not applicable to the House at this moment and in its present condition. The House cannot now "proceed with its legislative or other business;" neither can it now, in accordance with any provision of the law, "direct a recess." It has but one power and one duty, and that is to consider the report of the commission, and count or reject the electoral vote of the State of Florida.

The gentleman from New York has stated correctly the ground upon which this motion should be ruled out of order. It is that the experience of the state of the ground upon which this motion should be ruled out of order. It is that the opportunity and time appointed for a recess have been exercised and exhausted. The power has been exercised, not only by the joint convention, but by the two Houses, for nearly eight days; since Thursday of last week. There is no other opportunity or right for the exer-

of last week. There is no other opportunity or right for the exercise of this dilatory power.

Now the provision of the Constitution is imperative that "the votes shall be counted." This provision in regard to the recess is applicable to another stage of this business; and the motion for a replicable to another stage of this business; and the motion for a recess is not admissible now, and ought not to be entertained.

I must ask the Speaker to consider this proposition: If we may now take a recess until next Monday at ten o'clock, then on Monday at ten o'clock we can take a recess until Tuesday at the same hour, and so on, if a majority of the House should favor the proposition, until the 4th of March. Thus an imperative constitutional duty devolved upon the two Houses may be defeated. The Chair must take the responsibility of deciding that this most important duty—the most important that ever rested upon the House of Representatives, which is to be performed under the command of the Constitution at this moment, without postponement, adjournment, or delay—can be deferred. ment, without postponement, adjournment, or delay—can be deferred, without any reason assigned of necessity or expediency, until Monday next at ten o'clock, and from that time until the next at the same hour, and so on for the remainder of this session, and until the authority of Congress shall expire. I trust that the Chair will not make this decision, nor involve the House in such conflict with an imperative and solony constitutional data.

decision, nor involve the House in such conflict with an imperative and solemn constitutional duty.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state the interpretation he gives to the words "or otherwise under this act" in the next to the last clause of the fifth section?

Mr. BANKS. In what line is it?

Mr. BANKS. In what line is it? Mr. SAYLER. I will read the clause:

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this

Now let me state what I mean by the point I raise. My idea is that the first clause refers directly to the counting of the votes in the commission or in the joint session of the two Houses. Then the only question that would lead to a recess would be a difference of opinion in regard to the counting of the votes. But the words "or otherwise under this act" seem to refer to the very case now before us: the taking of a recess in a session of either House separately when the only question that can arise under this act arises as it does to-day; that is, a difference of opinion as to the judgment of the commission in is, a difference of opinion as to the judgment of the commission in reference to the counting of the vote of a State. I ask the gentleman's reference to the counting of the vote of a State. I ask the gentleman's attention to that question.

Mr. BANKS. My answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is very simple and plain. Whatever meaning may be put upon these words to which he has referred, "or otherwise under this act"—whatever those words mean, and whatever act they may refer to, they refer to that which has taken place in the joint convention of the two Houses. In the joint convention a recess may be taken and when a disagreement occurs, on the vote of a State or otherwise.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask whether the House in joint session can take a

Mr. SAYLER. I ask whether the House in joint session can take a recess at all?

Mr. BANKS. This refers to a recess or a separation of the two Houses and the suspension of its labors by the joint convention as has been done to day and heretofore.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The joint convention did not take a recess, but the two Houses separated. The joint convention cannot

Mr. BANKS. That part upon which we stand is in a subsequent paragraph. "In which case"—those words control the action of the House—"in which case," that is, after the two Houses shall separate for one reason or another under this act. In that case it shall be competent for either House acting separately in the manner hereinbefore provided to take a recess of such House not beyond the next day at ten o'clock. Now we have gone past that. The joint convention has met. The joint convention has taken a recess.

Mr. SAYLER. Now what does the gentleman mean by the joint convention having taken a recess to-day?

day, or to "proceed with its legislative or other business"— or senate begins the session ae noro, but it is to be a meeting in pursuance of the order under which we met on Thursday of last week, eight days ago.

Mr. SAYLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BANKS. Let me state this again, for it is upon this point the whole question hangs. When this joint meeting has been suspended and the commission has met to consider the questions referred to it, then, "in that case," it is competent for the House to take a recess until ten o'clock the next day, and from day to day until its report has been made. Now, the report of the joint commission has been made. All that the commission and the joint convention of the two Houses can do has been done. They have made a report; the report is that the vote of the State of Florida is to be counted, and the Constitution puts its solemn command upon the House to count that vote now. There is no opportunity for recess or for adjournment, either under the law or under the Constitution, under which the law is professedly made; and for seventy-five years, Mr. Speaker, there never was a proposition for a recess after the certificate had been opened by the President of the Senate and submitted to the tellers of the House and Senate to be counted.

I except from this general declaration as to time the practice of the two Houses under the reconstruction acts, where the joint rule of the two Houses allowed a separation of the two Houses to decide for themselves in their own way upon the merits of the questions referred to them. In those cases with secreely an execution, the question was two Houses allowed a separation of the two Houses to decide for themselves in their own way upon the merits of the questions referred to them. In those cases, with scarcely an exception, the question was whether a State was in fact a State or not, whether a State whose vote was to be counted was a State of the Union. Although there were some circumstances which would imply that a different question was considered under this rule from 1865 in regard to the reconstructed States, yet when you consider them carefully and closely every objection will be found, with scarcely a single exception, to have rested on the question whether the State purporting to give a vote was or on the question whether the State purporting to give a vote was or on the question whether the State purporting to give a vote was or was not a State in the Union.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference to this House to-day whether or not during the last seventy-five years there has or has not been a recess taken during the counting of the electoral votes. Why, sir, during the period of the last seventy-five years the emergency which is upon us, and the condition of things which surrounds us now, never have existed. This Congress never before has been acting under and by virtue of a law similar to that under which we are acting now. We have adopted a law to cover a peculiar condition of affairs and a peculiar state of the electoral votes, and under the phraseology of that law we must act and by virtue of that law we must act. The two Houses, by legislative process, and the Executive, by his affirmative signature, have impressed this act with the sign of constitutionality, and until it is declared unconstitutional by any judicial proceeding properly invoked, and the decision of a proper tribunal, the objection of the gentleman from New York cannot apply to our proceedings. We are acting under this law as if it were constitutional, understanding that it is constitutional, and we must act solely under its provisions.

were constitutional, understanding that it is constitutional, and we must act solely under its provisions.

Now, sir, this law is imperative that so long as the joint assembly is proceeding with the counting of the electoral votes there shall be no recess. That is imperative. But this law also declares that when there shall arise an obstacle to impede the progress, to stop the further pursuit of the counting, then there may be a recess. For what happens then? The joint assembly is not dissolved, but the two Houses separate and retire to their respective halls, and then what happens? In the event of the objection being made of such a nature and in such a shape, when the return is dual in its form, that it must be submitted to the commission, there is no doubt, gentlemen say, that either House separately may take a recess. But, sir, there is another objection which may be made, an objection not to be submitted to the joint commission because it is an objection to the single return of the electoral vote of a State. That objection is to be submitted to the two Houses respectively in their separate capacities. Why, then, cannot they take a recess? This is the language of the act:

No recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting

No recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes.

When we have separated, as we do to-day, to decide upon the counting of a single return, we could take a recess. There is no doubt about that. But the law does not stop there. It says:

Now what means "or otherwise?" We are objecting to the return made by the commission. The commission has brought in a declara-tion that the vote of Florida shall be counted. We have objected to their decision, to their judgment, and we come under the words "or otherwise." Even if it should be said that it is not an objection to otherwise." Even it it should be said that it is not an objection to the counting of the vote, it is an objection to proceeding further on the decision or judgment of the commission.

Now, sir, when we separate for that purpose, what does section 4 say may happen showing what action shall be or may be taken in just such a case as this, a case where we object to the decision or judgment of this high commission? Section 4 provides that—

When the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act—then debate may ensue limited to two hours. But shall it be said that that does not come under the head "or otherwise" when we have the right to a recess? Why, sir, suppose that this decision had been sent in at a quarter of twelve o'clock to-night instead of at a quarter past one o'clock to-day—I admit that a legislative day may be continued into Sunday—but would gentlemen on the other side say that we should be held to take action at once during the Sabbath upon the decision of the commission?

I think it would be admitted that we could take a recess from a quarter to twelve o'clock on Saturday night till Monday morning. And if we can take a recess at a quarter to twelve o'clock on Saturday, what is there to prevent us from taking a recess from half past two o'clock on Saturday?

It seems clear to my mind that we are acting under the provisions of this law alone, and that the law gives the power to take a recess in either of two cases: either when an objection is made to counting a vote or otherwise; contemplating, as the section does, that that "otherwise" includes the objection to the decision or report of the commission; the position in which we now are.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair allow me to make a remark on this question of order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. COX Yor win

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that he has allowed a good deal of latitude to this debate because of the magnitude of the question involved. He thinks, however, that the discussion should be confined exclusively to the question of the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I had not purposed to take any part whatever in the discussion which should arise upon the report of the commission. It seemed to me that it would be indelicate; and I believe that is the opinion of my associates in the House on both sides who have been placed on the commission by the House. I suppose, however, that there is no impropriety in my making a suggestion upon this question of order, as I had the honor also, as well as the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer,] to have something to do with the framing of

I should regret very much the delay even of a day in proceeding to execute this law, for reasons which I need not state, but which I suppose the whole country shares. But the question before the House now is in regard to the right to take one single recess not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock, on the arising of a question. It seems to me that right is secured to the House by the bill; that when the case has gone to the commission on the objection of a member of the Senate and a member of the House, and the commission has made its report and then five members of the the commission has made its report, and then five members of the Senate and and five members of the House unite in a new objection to that report, the question being on the acceptance or rejection of the report, that that presents a question and the only question which can arise before the counting of the vote of Florida; and that, there-fore, by the strict letter of the law the right arose to take this single recess provided for.

It is eaked if way more that the

It is asked if you may take this one recess, may you not take a recess again and on from day to day, and so take recess after recess until the expiration of the Congress. Well now, in the first place, that question implies the possibility of an act of personal and party and political dishonor, which for one I am not prepared to believe possible in any political party of which I have had the good fortune and political dishonor, which for one I am not prepared to beheve possible in any political party of which I have had the good fortune to be a member.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire my colleague to ask me a question until I have got through with the statement I am now making. Now, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that proposition is, as I have said, that if you were to believe such an act of public dishonor possible, which no man here certainly does, the answer to that is, that the bill clearly limits this power to a recess. The law I know declares that the House shall not adjourn and the Constitution so provides, but that it shall be in constant session. And that when any question arises a recess may be taken upon the question to the next day. Certainly no man will pretend that that law permits a recess from day to day forever. It is a recess provided for by the law and on the arrival of the next day there are to be two hours allowed for debate and then the question must be taken on the main question pending before each House.

Now I will allow my colleague to ask me a question.

Mr. BANKS. I do not desire to ask a question, but I want to state that the rules of the House prohibit a member from attributing motives to any member or members of the House. What I said did not impeach the motives of any member.

Mr. HOAR. I did not refer to my colleague at all.

impeach the motives of any member.

Mr. HOAR. I did not refer to my colleague at all.

Mr. BANKS. Allow me a moment. My colleague, in his remarks, intimated that the statement that this motion for recess could be repeated from day to day until the close of the session implied dishonorable motives to those who sustained it. I made no such implication at all; I spoke of the power of the House; it was my right to speak of its power. I merely stated that it was in the power of the House to do this, and I made no implication upon the motives of my fellow-members. Therefore my colleague had no right to use the language which he did.

Mr. HOAR. I did not even hear my colleague. I was out of the House when he spoke, if he did speak, and I have not alluded in any remark that I have made to anything that fell from his lips in any form, shape, or manner. [Laughter.] I was absent from the House when he spoke.

Mr. BANKS. Then the gentleman should have made that state-

Mr. BANKS. Then the gentleman should have made that statement when he was first upon the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I did not know that I was alluding to any argument that had been made on the floor of the House. I said that the argument had been made outside that if you could take one recess you could take twenty, and so defeat the count of the votes for President and Vice-President; that act involved first an act of public dishonor and then a violation of the law. But I did not know that any gentleman on the floor had suggested any such argument.

Mr. COX. The question of order upon a recess is not debatable under our rules. A recess amounts simply to a withdrawal for a short time, as our rules say, from the ordinary business that is progressing. Gentlemen, however, upon the other side of the House have departed from a question of the recess to debate other matters, and some intimations were made, I will not say by whom, but I will say that the sensibilities of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] seem to point out to him that this side of the House might not receive the conclusions of the joint commission in good faith. No man on that side of the House and no man in the country is authorized to say that the gentlemen on this side of the House who helped to frame this bill and voted for it are not equally with gentlemen on both sides of the and voted for it are not equally with gentlemen on both sides of the House as prompt to accept the situation to-day as the most distinguished and thoroughly honest members on the other side of the House. No such intimation should have been made.

A recess is indispensable, and is admissible under the fourth section of the bill for the purpose of considering the return made by the joint commission and the objection made thereto. But look at the terms of the bill. Nothing could be clearer, and it is hardly worth while to elaborate it:

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the electoral votes are all counted and the result declared.

This bill and the action of the House under it show that there has been no intent and no object to dissolve the joint meeting. I read

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act; in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Where a question arises upon the report of the electoral commission it is to be debated here for two hours on the question of counting the vote. My colleague [Mr. HOSKINS] made the point that the debate must take place immediately, and he laid emphasis on it. But here comes the substance of the whole matter, "or otherwise under this act." What does that mean? Where does it come from? Why, it comes from the twenty-second joint rule, a portion of which I will

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any of such votes; in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess not beyond the next day at the hour of one o'clock p. m.

Evidently this portion of the bill was copied from the twenty-second joint rule. In addition to the language of the rule the words "or otherwise under this act" are inserted.

Now what do the words "or otherwise" mean? I have here Worcester's Dictionary, which ought to be authority on the other side, because I have heard gentlemen on the other side quote the words from it. What does "otherwise" mean? It means "in a different manner;

it. What does "otherwise" mean! It means "in a different manner; in another way; by other causes; in other respects; not the same; not this; not these; different; not these, but the contrary."

Now let us read this act in connection with the explanation of these words from the dictionary. "No recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes or otherwise"—that is, not the same sort of a question—"under this act." In another way, under this act, to be sure, but not with reference to counting the votes. By other causes, under this act all the time, but in a different way than in regard to counting the votes. In other respects, the very opposite, not the same question; under this act all the time, but not in reference to counting the electoral vote. "Otherwise" is a word of large and comprehensive meaning. Whenever any sort of question comes up under this act and the joint meeting separates, this House has the right to take a recess.

Now, if gentlemen would stand by this act, let them stand by the power of the House under it in all respects. There comes honor; there comes integrity; there comes a fair count, a fair consideration of these objections made, and not objections made on the instant, of these objections made, and not objections made on the instant, without a recess and without consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in ruling upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] desires to say that he does not think that the third section of the act, which reads "while the two Houses shall be in meeting, as provided in this act, no debate shall be allowed, and no question shall be put by the presiding officer, except to either House on a motion to withdraw; and he shall have power to preserve order," has any pertinency to the question now before the House, although alluded to by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Chair will allow me, for a moment, to interrupt him; I did not allude to section 3 of the bill, but to section 2.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will pass from that. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Hoskins] alluded to that portion of section 5 which reads:

Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared.

The Chair thinks that portion of the act has no pertinency whatever to the question now before the House.

The portion of the act to which the Chair desires first to direct the attention of the House is embraced in section 4, which reads as follows:

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon the objection that may have been made to the counting of an electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Under that directory clause of the act, the Chair thinks that at no later time than the time when the motion was made would such motion to take a recess have been in order. That is to say, if the debate had been entered upon, then the clause of the law last quoted is clear and distinct that a vote shall be taken.

The Chair would also direct attention to that portion of section 5 which reads as follows:

And no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon.

It is the fact that this is the first time when a question has arisen such as is alluded to and spoken of in that clause of the act. such as is alluded to and spoken of in that clause of the act. The question having arisen now for the first time, the Chair thinks it is competent for this House, if in their judgment it shall be expedient, to now take a recess, but only until the next day at ten o'clock in the forenoon, Sunday excepted.

Mr. HALE. Then the Chair overrules my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I respectfully beg leave to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

the Chair.

Mr. COX. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to; upon a division—ayes 156, noes 76.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] that the House now take a retleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] that the House now take a recess until ten o'clock Monday morning, upon which motion the main question has been ordered.

Mr. KASSON. Is it in order to move an amendment as to the time to which the recess shall be taken?

The SPEAKER. The main question has been ordered, and no amendment is now in order.

Mr. HALE. Upon the motion for a recess Leall for the year and

So the motion for a recess was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. My colleague, Mr. DURAND, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. SAMPSON. My colleague, Mr. McDill, is absent on account of illness.

During the roll-call a message from the Senate, by Mr. Gorham, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The message also notified the House that the Senate was now ready for President and Vice-President.

Mr. LYNDE. Before the vote is announced I ask that by unanimous consent the Clerk of the House be instructed to inform the Senate in response to their message—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the responsibility of directing the Clerk to notify the Senate of the result of this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as before stated; and accordingly (at two o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Monday next at ten o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, February 12, 1877-10 a. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, but I suppose it is not in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business is in order. Mr. DAVIS. I understood the ruling of the Chair on Saturday to be that no legislative business whatever is in order pending the count of the electoral vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is correct

Mr. DAVIS. My object in making the inquiry was on account of a petition which I wished to present if business was in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair denies himself that privilege, and is compelled to deny the Senator from West Virginia, as he has already denied the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it would not be in order even to take recess under the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I so understand it.

Mr. DAVIS. Would it not be in order to move a recess until tomorrow or any hour to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not, except upon a question raised in joint meeting, and the question there raised has been disposed of. The Senate availed itself of that on Saturday and took disposed of. The Senate availed itself of that on Saturday and too a recess until to-day.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course I reserve any question on that decision.

have a different impression; but it is not worth while now to dis-

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (at twelve o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) There seems to be a quorum here now, and there is a small bill on the Calendar which will not occupy more than two or three minutes, and which justice requires to be passed at once. It is the bill (S. No. 481) for the relief of Israel Yount, who during and after the battle of Gettysburgh, opened his house to the wounded and who suffered great losses. The bill only contemplates giving the poor man $1,200 and I wish the Senate would now take up the bill. It can only take two or three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CHAFFEE in the chair.) The Chair has ruled that no legislative business is in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I would like to know why that is.

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair.)

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I renew my motion. I cannot see why we should differ in our proceedings to-day from what we have done on other days. This is a bill which is a mere act of justice to a poor man, and it provides for paying him a very small sum for very great services. It has passed through the Committee on Claims, and I believe received their unanimous approbation. The bill is to give Israel Yount, who kept a hotel at Gettysburgh, $1,200 for opening his house during the battle and taking in the people of the South and the people of the North, and feeding and taking care of them until the troops of the Government were able to take them out. It is only $1,200; and I cannot see that there can be any rule to prevent us from $1,200; and I cannot see that there can be any rule to prevent us from taking up that bill now. I ask the Senate to consider the bill by nnanimous consent

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative business is not in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Why? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No legislative business can be entertained at this time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Then I give notice that I shall renew my motion every day until this deserving man is paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be pleased to hear the Senator at any time.

At two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m. Mr. George M. Adams,

Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House has passed the following order:

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral votes from the State of Florida shall not proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission, but that the votes of Wilkinson Call, James B. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Ordered, That the Clerk inform the Senate of the action of the House; and that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in the Hall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message having been received, the Senate will now repair to the Hall of the House of Representa-

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.; when the President pro tempore resumed the chair and called the Senate to order.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the bill (S. No. 527) for the relief of Major Nicholas Vedder, paymaster United States Army, with the accompanying papers, be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESS-CONRAD N. JORDAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania to give way to me a moment. I desire to introduce a resolution in relation to a witness who is in contempt.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If that can be done without interfering with my motion, I will yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to offer the following resolution, and ask its present consideration:

Whereas Conrad N. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank, New York, was, on the 7th day of February, 1877, at ten o'clock a. m., duly served with a subpana duces tecum issued by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, commanding him to appear before such committee on the 8th day of the present month to then and there testify in reference to subject-matters under consideration by said committee, being matters relating to the controversy concerning the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and to bring with him a full and exact statement of the accounts as shown by the books of said Third National Bank, of Samuel J. Tilden, William T. Pelton, and Abram S. Hewrit, from the 1st day of June, 1876, to the 6th day of February, 1877;

And whereas said Conrad N. Jordan has refused to respond to such subpena, has failed to appear before said committee as required by said subpena, or to produce such statement of accounts as required: Therefore,

*Resolved,* That an attachment issue forthwith, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him to bring said Conrad N. Jordan forthwith to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt of a process of this body.

*Mr. SALU SRUPY L. Object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to the consideration of the resolution this afternoon. It is not reported by the unanimous consent of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There are matters connected with the subject of the resolution which require at least some explanation that time now will not permit. I move, therefore, that the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the present consideration of the resolution, it goes over one day. Is there objection to the motion to print?

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SARGENT. The fact that the Printing Office is suspended would delay the printing of this document otherwise than in the RECORD. I should like to have Senators understand that by ordering the printing of the resolution it is not understood that this resolution shall be postponed until the printing of it in document form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

BUSINESS BETWEEN TEN AND TWELVE O'CLOCK.

Mr. WEST. I should like to inquire from the Chair whether it is the understanding, when the Senate shall meet after the recess at ten o'clock to-morrow morning, that business shall then be conducted as has been customary heretofore during the proceedings of the count of the electoral votes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is no understanding now since the decision of the commission on the case submitted to it.

Mr. WEST. Then, there being no understanding, I move that when the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow, it assemble at that hour with the understanding that there shall be no legislative business transacted prior to twelve o'clock of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall that be the understanding, that no business shall be transacted from ten o'clock to twelve o'colck while the commission is sitting on the present case of Louisiana? The Chair hears no objection; and that will be the understanding.

Mr. WEST. Until further notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the understanding, during the sitting on the Louisiana case or until further order.

Mr. INGALLS. Until further order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be subject to the control of the Senate during the sitting of the commission.

Mr. MORRILL and others. Until further order.

Mr. WEST. Until further ordered by the Senate.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has so stated.
Mr. DAVIS. Until further ordered after twelve o'clock on any day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair will understand, that any motion to change the order of to-day must be made after twelve o'clock for any subsequent time. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, February 13, at ten o'clock a. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCRARY. I believe the regular order is the discussion of the report of the electoral commission; and I rise for the purpose of opening debate on that question.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not wish to interfere with the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCrary,] but it is apparent that there is no quorum present, and I am quite certain that a very large number of gentlemen on this side of the House, who are now absent, are anxious to hear the gentleman from Iowa and others who may speak this morning

Mr. McCRARY. I prefer, of course, to be heard by a full House; but I do not think we ought to waste any time, and if I am in order

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] raises the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McCRARY. I think it is not necessary that there should be a quorum in order to proceed with debate.

The SPEAKER. The House is not a House without a quorum.

Mr. HALE. But, Mr. Speaker, how can the question of a quorum be raised or tested when a gentleman is on the floor for the purpose of debate? The understanding, I suppose, on Saturday, when we took a recess, was that this matter would come up necessarily in regular order, and having come up.

order, and having come up—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it does come up.

Mr. HALE. And the gentleman from Iowa being on the floor, if he chooses to go on, how does the question as to a quorum arise until a chooses to go on, how does the question as to a quorum arise until a vote is taken or some business done?

Mr. CLYMER. I take it that it is competent for any member at any time to raise the question of the want of a quorum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. Has my colleague been recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa stated that he rose to debate, but the gentleman from Iowa has not the floor for that purpose. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Field] who presented the objection to the decision of the electoral commission would be recognized by the Chair.

recognized by the Chair.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am well satisfied that there is a quorum in and about the Hall, and that if the question is not raised a quorum in mediately if there be not one now. I think we have never determined that a quorum is not present unless its absence be

The SPEAKER. A call of the House would settle that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think there is no need of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] who presented the objection as having control of the floor. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrary] has no right to rise and open debate on that objection that the Chair is aware of. But the Chair thinks that there is no difficulty about this matter. If there is not a quorum present now he thinks there will be a quorum within a few minutes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I believe there is a quorum now within and about the Hall.

Mr. BANKS. I would suggest that there be a call of the House. Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it in order to move to take a recess for half an hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CLYMER. I only desire that when this question is discussed there should be at least a quorum present.

Mr. HOLMAN. To dispose of this difficulty at once, I move that there be a call of the House.

there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The better way, the Chair thinks, to avoid the question of another recess is that there be a call of the House, and after a quorum is secured the debate can then be proceeded with.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If that motion be entertained the Chair will see the difficulty we will run into at once. At any time when a gentleman is on the floor, another member who thinks there is not a quorum can move a call of the House. Now, I submit we have no rule requiring the Speaker to estimate by his eye whether a quorum is present or not. We have always acted on what was the previous vote of the House. of the House

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. Under the rules, the Speaker has that power to determine whether there is a quorum

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Speaker must have a fine eye if he can determine now whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. SAVAGE. I call the attention of the Chair to the statement on this point in the Digest, at page 194:

Whenever, during business, it is observed that a quorum is not present, any member may call for the House to be counted, and, being found deficient, business is suspended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is a different case altogether. There is a difference between a call of the House and a counting of the House

Mr. HOLMAN. There is nothing in the law under which we are acting that dispenses with the necessity of a quorum for the transaction of this business.

Mr. COX. That law does not abolish the House of Representa-

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that there be a call of the House.
Mr. BANKS. I think that is the proper course.
Mr. McCRARY. I suggest, at the request of several gentlemen, that we agree by unanimous consent that the debate shall begin at half past ten o'clock, and business in the mean time be suspended.
Mr. CLYMER. I think there will be no objection to that.
The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there is no purpose on the part of any gentleman, so far as he knows, to delay debate on this question.

Mr. CLYMER. For my part, I disclaim any such purpose. What I suggested was in kindness to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Mc-Crary,] that his remarks might be heard by a full House.

The SPEAKER. But, if it is desired that the presence of a quorum should be determined, that can be done by a call of the House. The Chair did not entertain the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] to take another recess, for reasons which must be ap-

House. If the Speaker asks for that unanimous consent, I for one have no objection.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts say that debate cannot go on except by unanimous consent?

Mr. BANKS. I say that it cannot go on, except by unanimous consent, in the absence of a quorum. If any member states that a quorum is not present the Speaker counts the House, as he is bound to do, and if a quorum is found not to be present, business is suspended and a motion for a call of the House may then be made.

Mr. HALE. Can that call for the House to be counted be made even when a gentleman is on the floor?

Mr. BANKS. Yes; at any moment. If the House gives its consent, the debate may go on without the question being raised.

Mr. BANKS. 1es, at any moment. If the House gives its consent, the debate may go on without the question being raised.

Mr. McCRARY. I think an arrangement may be made. I understand there is no objection on the other side, and certainly there is none on this side, to the proposition that by unanimous consent the House take a recess until half past ten.

Mr. HALE. Not take a recess. I object to that. I will not consent that a recess shall be taken even by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCRARY. The proposition is that by unanimous consent the debate shall begin at half past ten.

Mr. BANKS. I ask that the request for unanimous consent be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrary] asks unanimous consent of the House that the commencement of the discussion upon the pending question be waived until half past ten.

Mr. HALE. No business to be done meanwhile?

The SPEAKER. No business to be done in the mean time. Mr. O'BRIEN. I would suggest eleven o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Half past ten.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume there is no objection to the proposition that, by unanimous consent, there be a recess until half past ten.

Mr. HALE. Not a recess. That we shall be here in a condition of suspended animation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of bringing the matter Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of bringing the matter in due form before the House, I offer this resolution; and before it is read allow me to say it is understood that each side of the House shall have its hour and that the gentlemen who desire to speak will arrange the time among themselves.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered. That the counting of the electoral to tes from the State of Florida shal not proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission, but that the votes of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the following as a substitute:

Mr. HALE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HALE. My understanding was—
Mr. FIELD. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. KNOTT. I wish to offer a substitute.
Mr. HALE. It was the understanding that an amendment should be offered from this side.
The SPEAKER. The Chair understanded that a result in the speakers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that amendments are to be offered as far as they can by consent.

be offered as far as they can by consent.

Mr. HALE. It was on that point I wish to call the attention of the Chair. By arrangement with the gentleman from New York I was to be permitted to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was to be recognized,
Mr. HALE. The understanding was the gentleman from New York should allow amendment to be offered from this side. It seems fitting to me that such an amendment should be recognized first, so both sides should be represented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was advised that the gentleman from Kentucky was to be recognized.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the Chair whether it is not proper my amendment should first be received?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no wish about the matter. If the gentleman from New York yields to the gentleman from Maine first, wery well.

Mr. FIELD. It is a mere matter of order, as both gentlemen will have the opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the Chair whether this side should not offer its amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was advised he was to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky first, and then the gentleman from Maine; but if the gentleman from New York wishes to act differently, very

Mr. FIELD. No; let it go as it is.
Mr. HALE. I wish to offer an amendment merely to change the

Mr. KNOTT. I believe I have the floor to offer a substitute. Mr. BANKS. Whoever is to offer an amendment on this side ought to have the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule that the mere offering will ot add any debate to the two hours allowed under the law.

Mr. BANKS. Debate ought to be allowed to proceed now.

Mr. HALE. My amendment is simply to perfect the resolution, which I think would be fairly in order as I presume the amendment which I think would be fairly in order as I presume the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. KNCTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Should the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Maine, could I then offer my resolution as a substitute for the original and amendment? The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KNOTT. Then let the gentleman from Maine offer his, and I will offer mine as a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, if he understands the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Maine, it is more pertinent to have it first; but the Chair was advised the floor was to be yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky, and consequently was to be yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky, and consequently recognized him.

Mr. HALE. I did not know that. I move now to amend the order by striking out the word "not" and all after the word "commission," and if the Clerk will read the order as amended, members will see it simply presents the side of the negative against that of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The original proposition of the gentleman from New York has been read, and the Clerk will now read the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, so it will read as follows:

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral votes from the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the following as a substitute for the original proposition and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KNO11. 1 offer the following as a substitute for the original proposition and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is provided in the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877, that the commission thereby constituted should in reference to the vote of any State referred to it in pursuance thereof decide whether any and what votes from such State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in such State, and may thereon take into view such petitions, depositions, and other papers, if any, as shall by the Constitution and now existing laws be competent and pertinent in such consideration; which decision shall be made in writing, stating briefly the grounds thereof, and signed by the members of said commission agreeing therein;

And whereas when said commission had under consideration the case of the State of Florida evidence competent and pertinent to show that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, the persons named in the paper known as "certificate No. 1," had not been appointed as electors by the said State of Florida in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof was offered before said commission;

And whereas upon objection made thereto said commission did decide and determine that no evidence would be received or considered by said commission which was not submitted to the two Houses in joint convention by the President of the Senate with the several certificates;

And whereas said "certificate No. 1" contains no evidence whatever, and makes no allusion whatever to any evidence, determination, or precedent judgment or decision of any board of State canvassers or tribunal as the basis thereof, showing or tending to show that the said four persons named therein had be the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and should be counted as therein certified, has said in substance that said persons were those whose appointment as electors was regularly certified by the governor of the State of Florida on and according to determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of cancassers of said State.

Now, therefore, in order that said commission may have an opportunity to correct in manifest inconsistency therein and to explain how and in what manner it ascertained that the certificate of M. L. Stearns, as governor of the State of Florida, was on and according to any determination and declaration of any board of canvassers of said State:

Be it resolved. That the decision of said commission, and the grounds thereof, be, and the same are hereby, remanded and recommitted to said commission with the request that the same be so corrected or explained to this House, and that said commission be further requested to furnish in detail the true reasons of its decision, that this House may be enlightened as to the course it ought to pursue in the discharge of its duties in respect of the vote of the State of Florida under the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress above referred to, and that in the mean time the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long shall not be counted.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order upon that resolution. The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state the manner in which at the end of the two hours the vote will be taken upon the propositions pending. The first vote will be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Hale,] it being an amendment to perfect the original matter, the question will then be upon the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] and then upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD.]

Mr. HALE. I raised the point of order upon the substitute of the entleman from Kentucky. Perhaps the Chair did not hear me. gentleman from Kentucky. Perhaps the Chair did not hear me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. It is this, that under the electoral-commission law, under which we are now proceeding, it is the imperative duty of the House, at the end of the two hours' debate, to vote upon the main question, and which is, in the language of the statute, "that the vote shall proceed in conformity therewith," as found in section 2, and that there is no provision or hint in the electoral bill that after the commission has reported to the two Houses anything can be sent back to that commission. The commission only intervenes to settle and determine questions of the electoral count in a particular State, and its decision makes the law, and the count proceeds in conformity therewith, and the electoral votes are counted for the one candidate or the other, unless the Houses shall separately concur in ordering oth-erwise, that is, in ordering that the decision of the commission is overruled; and I submit that nothing in the shape of delay, in what-ever form it may be presented, the House having taken a recess up to this time and under the ruling that one recess could be taken, to this time and under the ruling that one recess could be taken, nothing can now arrest the wheels of this proceeding.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair, and it is that this commission is not a standing committee of the House, or a select committee of the House, or the Committee of the Whole of the House, and that we can refer nothing to it. It would require concurrent action to refer anything to that commission. The Chair will recollect that he made a ruling much this point relating to referring the silver bill so called ruling upon this point relating to referring the silver bill, so called, to a commission.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to say a word on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Hale,] and without expressing any opinion in the affirmative or negative in respect to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] I apprehend that there is nothing in the original law that was intended to deprive this House of the right of free expression of opinion. While I concede, as it has been stated by that gentleman, that we have but two hours for debate, I do not concede that that debate is limited in its character or range, or that so long as we do conclude to accept or reject the decision of the electoral commission on any question, I do not concede that we have not the right to express our opinion upon any question pertinent to the matter under consideration before the House.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not expressing an opinion when a vote is taken directly on the resolution whether the decision of the commission shall be overruled or shall stand?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The law directs us to do that. And the intimation of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] and also of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Wilson,] that there is any disposition on this side of the House to delay action or to interpose any factious opposition to any decision that this grand electoral commission may arrive at, is entirely gratuitous and unwarranted by anything that has so far occurred.

Mr. HALE. Has anything been said this morning intimating anything of the kind? I am not aware of it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman himself has just spoken of delay, and on Saturday last he intimated that there evidently was a disposition on the part of this side of the House to delay action. Now I assure that gentleman that there is no such thing. But while we are ready to act in good faith and to carry out in all respects this law and the results that may be arrived at under it, yet at the same time we demand the right to have a free expression of opinion, and the right on the part of this House to place upon record what is its judgment in reference to the action of this grand electoral commission.

Mr. HALE. I was only referring to the delay involved in the proposition. I did not mean to intimate, I do not believe, that the majority on that side of the House will vote to adopt the resolution even if it shall be admitted. But certainly I had the right to claim that the proposition itself involved delay, because it carried delay with it in terms, and that is all there is of it. I do not say that that intention extends beyond the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr.

extends beyond the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] but I do say that delay is embodied in the resolution with all the force that language can give it, whether the gentleman from New York assents to it or otherwise.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would have preferred that this discussion and the propositions submitted to the House should have been confined simply to the affirmative or the negative of the proposition as submitted by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.] Individually I should have preferred to have had the isolated issue presented for debate and determination. But I deny the right of that gentleman to intimate that because any gentleman upon this side of the House seeks this mode of expressing his individual opinion, and sends to the desk a substitute or amendment, that action is intended for delay, because that is an imputation upon the gentleman to for delay, because that is an imputation upon the gentleman to whom it may be addressed. With these remarks I trust that the question of order raised by the gentleman from Maine will not be sus-

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] to again state his point of order, and to refer the Chair to the particular portions of the law upon which he relies as excluding the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.]

Mr. HALE. The sections of the law, those that carry with them the force of the law against delay, and that declare what the two Houses can do, I believe are sections 2 and 4.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Maine be kind enough to read the clauses of each section upon which he relies?

Mr. HALE. Beginning with the word "whereupon," in section 2. That section, after referring to the decision of the commission that shall be presented to the two Houses, goes on to provide:

Whereupon the two Houses shall again meet, and such decision shall be read and entered in the Journal of each House, and the counting of the votes shall proceed in conformity therewith, unless, upon objection made thereto in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two Houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise; in which case such concurrent order shall

Then section 4 provides as follows:

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

My point of order is that but one question can be put, and that is the question contained in the resolution or order submitted by the gentleman from New York as perfected by the amendment offered by myself, which is the one single question that can be submitted to the Houses; that is, that the counting shall proceed or not proceed in conformity with the decision of the commission.

Under this bill there is no power of recommittal by the House. It is specifically provided under this bill that nothing can be sent to the commission except by the two Houses; and once sent to the commission and returned by that commission with its decision, we can do nothing but vote "yes" or "no" upon the question of the count proceeding in accordance with the decision of the commission. No authority is given to this House to send anything to this commission. Nothing can be sent to the commission except in the method provided by the law, upon objection made in the manner provided by the law. Upon that I am willing to take the ruling of the Chair, upon the point of order which I have raised, that this House alone can send nothing to the commission.

Mr. KNOTT. The act under which this commission is organized requires that it shall submit its decision in writing, and that it shall state briefly the grounds upon which such decision may be based. The commission proceeding under that act have decided that the persons named in a paper designated in their decision as "certificate marked No. 1" were entitled to cast the electoral vote for Florida because their appointment was regularly certified by the governor of Florida upon and according to the determination and declaration of the board of canvassers of that State. There is their decision; and the board of canvassers of that State. There is their decision; and there is the reason given by them for it. I have this morning examined "certificate marked No. 1," and I find that it not only contains no evidence whatever that there ever was a canvass of the votes of Florida, but makes no allusion to any evidence showing that the votes of Florida ever were canvassed. Moreover the only evidence offered before that commission that the votes cast for electors in Florida were ever canvassed by any board whatever is contained in certificate No. 3, which was ruled out by the commission.

Now we have here a decision resting upon a certificate that affords no evidence at all. Thus the commission is involved in an inconsistno evacence at an. Thus the commission is involved in an inconsistency which justice to it requires it shall have an opportunity to explain, if an explanation can by any possibility be made. This is but justice to the commission itself; and I apprehend that nothing in the law precludes this House, with the concurrence of the Senate, from remitting these papers to that commission in order that it may give a satisfactory explanation and that it may not impair its reputation in bistory. in history.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman, following out the suggestion of the Chair, to put his finger on that portion of the law which gives one House the right to send anything to the commission.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not yield to the gentleman. We all love to hear him talk; and he seldom rises to address the House; but I cannot yield to him on this occasion.

I say that the facts to which I have imperfectly adverted, but which are specifically set out in the preamble to my resolution, demand imperatively at our hands that this commission shall have an opportunity to explain the glaring and palpable inconsistency in its decision; and I submit that there is nothing in the law that prevents this House, with the concurrence of the Senate, from remanding that decision to the commission in order that it may have an opportunity

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he confine himself to the discussion of the point of or-

Mr. KNOTT. I am endeavoring to do so, if the Speaker please. The resolution provides not only that the matter be remanded to the commission for its revision and correction, but that in the mean time the votes shall not be counted. It is a matter of justice to this House and to the Senate, as well as to the commission itself, that this commission should give a detailed statement of the true reasons upon which this important decision, the most important ever rendered by human tribunal, was made.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. BANKS. I do.

Mr. SEELYE. May I make a single inquiry? I wish to know whether this discussion is to come out of the two hours appropriated to general discussion on the question?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair allow me to say that it has been Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair allow me to say that it has been ruled elsewhere that all this discussion counts as a part of the time allowed for the discussion under the provisions of the act?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with any ruling

Mr. EDEN. I object to the gentleman's reference to proceedings at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the discussion of this question of order can come out of the time allowed under the law; it proceeds only by general consent, and can be closed at the suggestion of any member. I ask leave to say a few words on the point of order.

This resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is clearly not in order. The act under which we are proceeding requires that the counting of the votes of the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission, unless objection shall be made. Objection has been made, and by five Senators and eight Representatives, and every member of the House is entitled to an affirmative or negative vote upon the question whether in the presence of this objection the votes from Florida shall be counted in accordance with the report of the commission. We are entitled to an affirmative or a negative vote upon that single and simple proposition embodied in the law. Now the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky moves us off in divers ways upon divers matters, so that no member can vote upon the direct question which arises under the law upon the decision of the commission and the ob-

In the first place the resolution proposes that the decision of the electoral commission shall be "remanded and recommitted" to the tribunal that made it. The House has not authority or power to give that order. It proposes that the decision shall be "corrected and explained." Such a proposition cannot be adopted by this House. explained." Such a proposition cannot be adopted by this House. It is not quite respectful to the commission to propose it. The resolution proposes that the commission shall "give reasons in detail for their decision, in order that this House may be enlightened." Sir, that commission has a supplied to the commission of the commission that commission has no constitutional, moral, or mental power to give "reasons in detail" for any such purpose as that.

And it is ordered further that "in the mean time the said votes shall not be counted." That is clearly in direct conflict with the law, and deprives every member of this House of that which is his constitutional right to give an effective or negative vector of the second. tutional right to give, an affirmative or negative vote on the report of the decision of the electoral commission, notwithstanding the objec-tions which have been presented by the honorable gentleman from

New York

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will give his attention. Mr. BANKS. I am not yet through. Allow me to say if this decision is "remanded and recommitted" it will possibly be returned to the House as not conferring authority on the commission to reverse or review, once promulgated and reported to the Senate and House, its obeisance to a public statute.

Mr. SAVAGE. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. I desire to know if the law does not provide that the vote shall be counted in accordance with this decision of the commission. unless the two Houses separately agree in ordering otherwise. Suppose they agree in remitting it back to the commission by concurrence of the two Houses, would not that be agreeing in ordering otherwise.

Mr. BANKS. That does not give an opportunity by affirmative or negative vote to pass upon the decision of the commission or the objections thereto. "To order otherwise" must be upon an order in jections thereto. "To order otherwise" must be upon an order in concurrence of the two Houses to negative the decision of the commission.

Mr. SAVAGE. But would not the remission of the decision of the electoral commission, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, be separately agreeing in ordering otherwise than in counting the vote?

Mr. BANKS. It is not, in my opinion, in accordance with the law. It is not a vote on this proposition submitted to us. We have a right to an affirmative or a negative vote on the decision of the commission in the presence of the objections offered by the honorable gen-

Mr. WOOD, of New York.

I should like to remind the gentleman from Massachusetts he confounds a constitutional with a moral right. There is nothing in this law nor is there anything in the power of both Houses of Congress to deprive, under the Constitution of the United States, a member of this House from the expression of an opinion and the giving of a vote. And, as I understand, when we voted to pass this bill we parted with no constitutional right.

While I agree with the gentleman, I think under this law we are in honor bound to settle, and settle forthwith, within two hours any determination this electoral commission may reach on any question referred to it, yet I deny there is anything in the law or the rules of this House that will take a member off his feet if the Speaker accords him the floor. And we have the right to present our opinion by any positive proposition, and it is for the House to dispose of it when thus presented. We cannot deprive a Representative of the people upon this sented. We cannot deprive a Representative of the people upon this floor of his constitutional right to a vote or action on any proposition before the House Mr. BANKS. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York it is a constitutional not a moral right merely to vote affirmatively or negatively directly upon the decision of the electoral commission. It is a constitutional right for each member to have an affirmative or negative vote upon the decision of the commission; that is, whether, with due consideration of the objections made there-to, the votes shall be counted in conformity with the decision of that to, the votes shall be counted in conformity with the decision of that commission. That is fixed by law. The gentleman from New York, as was his right, makes objection; and we have the right to pass upon the proposition in the affirmative or negative, each member of the House to vote "ay" or "no." Now the gentleman from Kentucky moves the House off by platoons upon other inquiries, elaborate in their statement, incomprehensible to the House in the manner in which they are presented here, not because they are not clearly expressed but because we have not time, critically and proporty to study them; moves us off from the entral question which is erly, to study them; moves us off from the actual question which is before the House to the consideration of numerous other questions which we do not and cannot satisfactorily consider. They are not and cannot even be printed; and that is, whether these votes shall be counted in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission in the presence of the objections made thereto. It moves us off from that. Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. KNOTT. Let me ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky desires to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts before he takes his

The question which I would respectfully ask the gen tleman from Massachusetts is this: Suppose the commission itself ascertained it had made a manifest error in its decision before action had been taken by the House, would or would he not deny the right to ask the decision be remitted to it for correction or reversion?

Mr. BANKS. If the commission sends a communication to this House that it withdraws the decision it has made, then I agree further proceedings should be suspended. They have made no such decision; and we cannot remand or recommit their decision to them for revision. Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. KNOTT. Let me ask the gentleman another question.
Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman yields to me to suggest to the gentleman from New York this proposition is not an expression of opinion by the House, but it proposes an order of the House to refer papers before the House to a commission not authorized under the rules of this House to receive any such papers. These papers went under law from the joint meeting, and the Speaker decided it was not in order to refer a bill to an outside commission created by law. Hence, under the rules of this House, there would be no authority to refer these papers to the commission. The certificates and papers referred to them went under the law, and not under the rules of this House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that there are no rules of the House applicable to this special and particular case. This is a law—a law unto itself. We are now confronted with this question, how under the electoral bill to dispose of an action upon the part of the electoral commission. The law says that we shall after two hours' discussion determine. Now this is preliminary to that discussion, and has reference to the mode of expression of opinion. When we come to vote, if we can be permitted to vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, then we will come to an action; but as preliminary to the action on the part of the House the mere sending up to the Speaker's table an amendment, a substitute, or anything that is proper in form, pertinent to the proposition, is nothing but an individual expression of opinion on the part of the gentleman who offers the substitute. And I hold that if under the rules I am permitted to offer an amendment or substitute pertinent to the proposition I am not out of order in doing it. But if the House shall sanction an improper action, that is an entirely different matter. I submit that there are no rules that guide us or control us in reference to a question of this peculiar character.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] in making his point of order refers the Chair to two portions of the law; a part of the second section which he read, as follows:

Whereupon the two Houses shall again meet, and such decision shall be read and entered in the Journal of each House, and the counting of the vote shall proceed in conformity therewith, unless, upon objection made thereto in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two Houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise, in which case such concurrent order shall govern.

And the whole of the fourth section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection, that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

That portion of the law read which really relates to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, it occurs to the Chair, is embraced in the following clause:

But after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Upon the question involved in that point of order the Chair will presently rule. But in stating that proposition another point of order has cropped out. In fact, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] indicates his purpose to raise the point of order whether it is competent for this House, either under the law or under the rules of the House, to commit to an outside commission what is embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair there-fore desires in a measure to consider this subject in its two aspects; because of course the gentleman from Iowa, as soon as the point of order of the gentleman from Maine shall have been decided, will im-mediately be entitled to raise his point of order. The language of the law is:

It shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further de-

The Chair thinks that the amendment or substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky could not be excluded under that language. The main question in law and in parliamentary proceedings embraces all questions upon which the previous question can be seconded and the main question ordered; and in any proceeding in this House, therefore, it would be competent for the main question to embrace, first, the original proposition, next, an amendment to the original proposition to perfect the matter of it, and third, a substitute for both. The Chair overrules that point of order. The Chair will now, so as to bring it wilson] to make the douse, recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] to make the other point of order.

Mr. HALE. If the Chair please, I stated that as part of my point

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine stated it as a part of his argument. Mr. HALE. Mr. HALE. I stated that the law gave this House no right to send anything to the commission, and I called upon the gentleman from Kentucky to point out anything in the law which gave that right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on that. The Chair has already stated that the other point of order had cropped out in the re-ready stated that the other point of order had cropped out in the remarks of the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman from Iowa is now recognized to make the other point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not wish to occupy any of the time of the House in support of that point of order. I think if the reference might possibly be made under this act, it would at least take the concurrent action of both Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to find anything in the law which powerly a recommittal of the question back to the commission.

which permits a recommittal of the question back to the commission. Nay, more; the Chair continues to hold as it has been intimated he heretofore ruled, that it is not competent for one House to refer ll or any matter to an outside commission. The Chair therefore a bill or any matter to an outside commission. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order taken by the gentleman from Iowa.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. FIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCrary.]

Mr. McCrary. Mr. Speaker, the decision of the commission embraces of which the braces several important points, upon the correctness of which the two Houses are now to decide. That these propositions are eminently sound and fully supported, both by reason and authority, seems to me entirely clear. The first point decided is that the two Houses of Congress, in the exercise of their power to count the votes for Presi-dent and Vice-President, cannot go into an inquiry as to the number of votes cast at the polls for the electors in the several States. In other words, it is held that the decision of that question is left to the proper authority in the States, and that when that authority has can-vassed the votes, declared and adjudged the result, and certified the election of their electors in due form, that is the appointment of the electors required by the Constitution of the United States. This is in accordance with the important precedent established by the electin accordance with the important precedent established by the elect-oral bill of 1800, which, after thorough and exhaustive discussion, passed both Houses of Congress and was only lost by a failure to agree upon the form of a single provision. That bill created a "grand committee," to whom were to be referred questions arising upon the count of the electoral votes of the States; but it was carefully pro-vided, both by the Senate and House bill, that no inquiry should be made as to the number of votes cast for the electors at the polls, that being regarded by all the statesmen of that day as a matter within the exclusive control of the States. The House bill of 1800 drafted, reported, and advocated by John Marshall, afterward Chief-Justice of the United States, embodied the views of that great constitutional lawyer upon this question. After providing for the grand committee, it defined their jurisdiction in these words:

And the persons thus chosen shall form a joint committee and shall have power to examine into all disputes relative to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, other than such—other than such as might relate to the number of votes by which the electors may have been appointed.

Mark the words-

This legislation was proposed and supported by the men who took part in the formation and adoption of the Constitution, and the suggestion of power in Congress to review and reverse the action of the State in the appointment of electors was never once made. If made it would have excited only astonishment.

The ruling of the commission is also abundantly supported by the most cogent reasons. To have ruled otherwise would have been to assert a jurisdiction to inquire into and overturn the action of all the States in the appointment of their electors and institute here pro-States in the appointment of their electors and institute here proceedings in the nature of suits in quo warranto to try the title to his office of every one of the persons appointed as such. What clause of the Constitution confers such a jurisdiction upon the two Houses? Their power in the premises is all conferred by the words of the Constitution, "and the votes shall then be counted." The commission has decided, and I think upon the soundest reason, that these words confer no judicial power whatever. They describe, and very aptly describe, a ministerial duty only. The words of the Constitution are the last words that would have been chosen by which to confer that impense power and vast jurisdiction which have lately for the first immense power and vast jurisdiction which have lately, for the first time, been claimed for the two Houses. The impossibility of exercising this jurisdiction is a strong argument against its existence. How can the two Houses of Congress entertain and try a suit to determine the title of electors to their offices? If it can be done in one case it can be done in all, and Congress may have brought before it three hundred and sixty-nine contests over elections for electors with witnesses, numbered by hundreds in each, all to be determined within the brief interval between the meeting of Congress in December and the counting of the votes in February. It is plain that to establish this doctrine is, in effect, to give the election of President and Vice-President into the hands of Congress and to take it out of the control of the States, where the Constitution places it. The commission has therefore very properly, as I think, decided that the record of the final canvass and decision and declaration of the result, made by the proper State authority, is final and conclusive, and that when this record is presented, duly authenticated and accompanied by the return required by law and the Constitution, there is but one thing that can be done, and that is to obey the mandate of the Constitution, which is that "the votes shall then be counted."

The commission has decided one other point of importance, namely, nesses, numbered by hundreds in each, all to be determined within

The commission has decided one other point of importance, namely, that the appointment of electors made by the State prior to the time when they are to meet and vote for President and Vice-President is final, and cannot be set aside by subsequent State action after the votes have been cast and the return thereof has been duly made to the President of the Senate. This decision rests upon the following, among other grounds:

1. For reasons of great public importance it is provided by the Constitution that the electors shall meet in all the States upon the same day and east their votes, and Congress is authorized by the Constitu-tion to fix the day for such meeting, which was done by the act of 1792. The great wisdom and importance of this provision are apparent. Its purpose is to prevent the very mischief which has been attempted in Florida. It was to prohibit a State from withholding its vote until it is seen how it will affect the result, and from changing its vote after it has been once cast, in order to change a result. And above all, it must be apparent that the Constitution cannot be so construed as to allow a new State administration, upon coming into power, to proceed to set aside and reverse the action of the State government completed under a previous administration, in the matter of appointing presi-dential electors and casting and returning the vote of the State for President and Vice-President.

2. If proceedings, either by the State Legislature or the State courts, had in the latter part of January, can be allowed to set aside the constitutional action of the State in this respect had in December, it must result, not only in a violation of the constitutional requirement that the votes of all the States shall be cast on the same day, but must also lead to the most serious consequences in the future. If a judgment of an inferior court in Florida, rendered on the 27th of January, can annul the vote of that State cast on the 6th of December, uary, can annul the vote of that State cast on the 6th of December, it follows that similar judgments in any or all the other States may be certified to the President of the Senate and must govern the count. In New York, I believe, there are more than thirty judges possessing jurisdiction in cases of quo warranto. Can any one of them, after the presidential election is over, transfer the thirty-five votes of that State from one candidate to another? Who can fail to see that such a doctrine would result in confusion, disaster, and ruin? If by an ex post facto judgment in one State one party should secure an advantage, by a similar movement in another State a corresponding advantage would be sought for the other party. We should encounter the very evil which our fathers sought to prevent, and instead of counting the votes cast by the States at the time and in the manner prescribed by the cast by the States at the time and in the manner prescribed by the Constitution and law, it would become necessary to count the judgments in quo warranto rendered in the various States and certified up to the President of the Senate. The only safe, sound, and constitutional rule is that adopted by the commission, to wit, that the decision made by the proper State authority upon the claims of candidates for the office of elector prior to the time fixed by the Constitution and law for electing the President and Vice-President is not subject to review, and must stand as final. The power of Congress is to count—not to set aside—duly certified votes of the States.

Mr. FIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker.]
Mr. Tucker. In the remarks that I shall submit I do not propose to criticise, much less to censure, the action of any member of the commission. But I propose, in doing my duty as a member of this House on the question now before it, to criticise with respect the judgment of the commission.

By the law under which this commission acts, each member takes an oath to render a judgment "agreeably to the Constitution and the laws." The commission is bound to observe the Constitution in making up its decision.

The law then provides that the commission shall "decide whether any and what votes from such State are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and how many and what persons were duly appointed electors in such State."

In the report which the commission has made, it declares:

The commission is of opinion that, without reference to the question of the effect of the vote of an ineligible elector, Mr. Humphreys was not a Federal officer on the day of election.

Now, does the commission mean by this to intimate or to decide that the ineligibility of an elector is to have no effect upon the validity of his vote?

Let me examine this point for a moment.

If a disqualified elector be chosen, is he an elector at all, or can he vote? By the Constitution, State judges are bound by it, anything in the constitution and laws of the State to the contrary. The laws of a State repugnant to it are therefore held null and void. If such a law be void, can the act of the Government or of a returning board have a better fate? Every act or law of a State repugnant to the Constitution is and must be void. For if it be held valid, then the Constitution is nullified. And if it is void for such repugnance, are we to treat it as if valid and make an act which violates of equivalent effect to one which conforms to the Constitution?

The reasoning of Marshall, Chief-Justice, in Marbury vs. Madison, on the effect of an unconstitutional law, is applicable to the ministerial and executive acts of the State with even greater force than to the laws of the State. He says:

If an act of the Legislature, repugnant to the Constitution is void, does it, not-withstanding its invalidity bind the courts and oblige them to give it effect; or in other words, though it be not law, does it constitute a rule as operative as if it was

Those, then, who controvert the principle that the Constitution is to be considered in court as a paramount law are reduced to the necessity of maintaining that courts must close their eyes on the Constitution and see only the law.

This doctrine would subvert the very foundation of all written constitutions. It would declare that an act which, according to the principles and theory of our Government is entirely void, is yet in practice completely obligatory. It is prescribing limits, and declaring that those limits may be passed at pleasure.

From the obligation taken by each member of the commission, from the duties prescribed in the law creating it, and from the operative force of the Constitution as the supreme law of the land, I declare, therefore, the imperative duty of the commission to deny to a disqualified elector the power to vote as such for President.

But there is another question to which I desire to call the attention of the House, which is of more importance, and that is as to the decision upon the main inquiry; and I must state it very briefly.

The State appoints the electors and the Legislature directs the manner of appointment. There are, therefore, in all this, two functions: the elective or appointing function and the determinant function.

The determinant rower is a State must not by any illegal or frauds. The determinant power in a State must not by any illegal or fraudu-lent means usurp the elective function. If it transcends its legal authority or fraudulently changes the results of an election, it assumes the elective function and quits the realm of its merely determining authority. It does not decide whom others have elected, but it decides to elect by its own will. Such illegal or frandulent act is void. In Florida the board is the creature of law, must act under it, and not above it. It is subject to law. It may exercise its powers within the limits prescribed by the law, but not beyond them; within these its acts are valid; beyond them they are void.

Nor can it decide finally on the extent of its own powers. Though some of its powers may be quasi-judicial, it belongs to the executive, not the judicial, department. The limits of its power must be subject to the supervisory control of the judiciary in cases arising under its action. This is the nature of judicial power. If the board could execute its powers and judge of their extent finally, it would unite executive and judicial powers.

The legislative department prescribes the general rule of civil conduct; the executive administers it in the private cases for which it was designed; and the judicial defines its terms, applies it to the case and makes the execution conform to the precept of the law. The judiciary must see that the execution does not pass beyond the meaning of the law—that the executive act realizes the legislative conception-but no more.

In the case already cited Judge Marshall says:

It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases must of necessity expound and interpret the rule.

The point I make is this: The board had the primary right to can-as. The extent and nature of its action, and whether final and conclusive or not was not, for it to determine, but was for the Florida courts to decide, and for them alone and finally to decide.

The Supreme Court of the United States has from the earliest period to the latest case in the last report held that the interpretation of a State statute by the supreme court of the State is binding upon courts elsewhere and upon the Supreme Court itself. It will not intrude its opinion in opposition to that of the supreme court of the State.

If this be so, a fortiori, these two Houses and the commission created to act with their respective and united powers must be bound to defer to the decision of a State court upon a State statute; to the judgment of a Florida court upon a Florida statute.

The supreme court of Florida, in the late case of The State of Florida

The supreme court of Florida, in the late case of The State of Florida ex rel. Drew vs. The Board of Canvassers, has defined the meaning of the statute creating this board and the extent of its powers. It has corrected the board's canvass, by which it elected Stearns, and compelled it by mandamus to decide in favor of the election of Drew. It plants itself upon its previous decisions, and is clear and emphatic in denying the claim of the board to do in that case what it has dear in the case of the electors. It quotes a present from itself. has done in the case of the electors. I quote a passage from its elaborate decision:

phatie in denying the claim of the board to do in that case what it has done in the case of the electors. I quote a passage from its elaborate decision:

Westcott, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The view that the board of State canvassers is a tribunal having power strictly indicial, such as is involved in the determination of the legality of a particular vote or election, cannot be sustained. The constitution of this State (article 3), and section 1 of article 6) provides that "the powers of the government of the State of Florida shall be divided into three departments: legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person properly belonging to one of the departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except in those cases expressly provided for by this constitution."

"The judicial power of the State shall be vested in a supreme court, circuit court, county courts, and justices of the peace."

All of the acts which this board can do under the statute must be based upon the returns; and while in some cases the officers composing the board may, like all ministerial officers of similar character, exclude what purports to be a return for irregularity, still everything they are authorized to do is limited to what is sanctioned by authentic and true returns before them. Their final act and determination must be such as appears from and is shown by the returns from the several counties to be correct. They have no general power to issue subpensa, to summon parties, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to grant a trial by jury, or do any act but determine and declare who has been elected as shown by the returns. They are authorized to enter no judgment, and their power is limited by the extrems. They are authorized to enter no judgment, and their power is limited by the extension of a right after notice, according to the general law of the land as to the rights of parties, but it is a declaration of a conclusion limited and restricted by the letter of the sentil as a shown by beyond the power of this board. As to the words "irregular, false, and fraudulent," in this connection, their definition is not required by the questions raised by the pleadings in this case.

These respondents have not alleged that they have before them any return "so irregular, false, or fraudulent" that they are unable to determine the actual vote cast in any county, as shown by the returns; and nothing can be clearer than that the counting of returns sufficiently regular to ascertain the whole number of votes given and signing a certificate are merely ministerial acts. Under these pleadings the genuineness and regularity of the particular returns in question here are admitted. We will say, however, that the clear effect of this clause in the statute is that a return of the character named shall not be included in the determination and declaration of the board; and that it has power to determine the bona fide character of the returns dehors their face. It is not within the power of this board to refuse to count some of the votes embraced in a return and to count others embraced therein. They must count the whole of the return or must reject it in toto. We will also say that the powers here conferred are ministerial powers. It is true that in some respects these powers are something more than simple counting or computing, but they are powers which necessarily appertain to the discharge of every ministerial duty of this character. Their existence is no obstacle to the control of such officers by mandamus from a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

In defining the duties of a board of State canvassers where there was no like clause to this in the act defining their powers, this court in 13 Florida, 73, said.

"Their duties and functions are mainly ministerial, but are quasi judicial so far as it is their duty to determine whether the papers received by them and purporting to be returns were in fact such, were genuine, intelligible, and substantial authenticated as required by law." The power to asc

In the circuit court for Leon County that court, on a quo warranto proceeding of The State of Florida ex rel. Call and Others (Tilden electors) vs. Humphreys and Others, (Hayes electors,) begun December 6, 1876, (before the Hayes electors voted,) rendered a judgment which I quote in full:

Information in the nature of quo warranto.

Information in the nature of quo warranto.

And now, on this 25th day of January, 1877, came the parties by their attorneys, and the court having fully considered what should be its findings and judgment herein, finds that respondents did not, as shown upon the face of the returns of the election held on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, transmitted to the secretary of state from the several counties, and did not, in fact, (as shown by the proof produced herein,) receive the highest number of votes cast at said election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, for the State of Florida; but that the relators did, as shown by said returns upon their face, and did, in fact, as shown by the proof produced herein, receive the highest number of votes cast at said election for such electors. It is therefore considered and adjudged that said respondents, Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not nor was any one or them elected, chosen, or appointed, or entitled to be declared elected, chosen, or appointed as such electors or elector; and that the said respondents were not, upon the said 6th day of December or at any other time, entitl 3 to assume or exercise any of the powers and functions of such electors or elector, but that they were upon the said day and data mere usurpers, and that all and singular their acts and doings as such were and are illegal, null, and void.

And it is further considered and adjudged that the said relators, Robert Bullock, Robert B. Hilton, Wilkinson Call, and James E. Yonge, all and singular were at said election duly elected, chosen, and appointed as such electors, and to have and receive certificates thereof; and upon the said day and date, and at all times since, to exercise and perform all and singular the powers and duties of such electors, and to have and receive certificates thereof; and upon the said day and date, and at all times since, to exercise and perform all and singular the powers and duties of suc

Now the question is, is the judgment of this commission right that no evidence shall be introduced before it to prove that the act of this canvassing board and of the executive department of Florida was absolutely null and void because contrary to law? Are we to be precluded from inquiring whether the board has fraudulently and illegally acted by an actual usurpation of the elective function vested by law in the people instead of a mere exercise of its determinant function under the law of the State, as interpreted by its own courts? Now I say that upon a question of this kind the whole organism of

Now I say that upon a question of this kind the whole organism of the State must speak its voice; but the commission seems to say that the only organisms that shall speak for the State is that of the canvassing board and of the executive. We say that the State must speak not only through them, but through the ultimate determinant authority of the judiciary, which has defined the extent of the powers of the canvassing board. We must respect the authority of the State expressing its will through its whole organism, and not merely regard the acts of the board and of its executive, which are themselves subject to the judicial authority. We cannot strike off the judicial head of State authority and bow to the mutilated trunk of the board and the executive. We must defer to the whole authority of the State. We must hear its full-toned voice, and submit to it.

What is it? Its Legislature, its judiciary have set at naught and

What is it? Its Legislature, its judiciary have set at naught and annulled the acts of the board. Florida, through its State organism, has declared the act of the board giving the election to the Hayes' electors a nullity, and the act of the electors in voting in the name of Florida on the 6th of December, 1876, a usurpation, and that act "illegal, null, and void."

But it is said the judgment in the quo warranto case had nothing to operate on, as the electors had voted prior to its rendition, on the 25th of January, 1877.

of January, 1877.

In answer:

1. Concede it; this tribunal or these Houses must decide on the question of right of these electors to vote. Suppose by their action, non obstante, the pendency of the quo warranto proceedings, they put themselves beyond the reach of preventive power of the court. In other words, suppose in the face of Florida's demand, "By what warrant" you assume to act, the parties defiantly dare to use the prerogative of the States; shall the two Houses give effect to the usurpation, ative of the States; shall the two Houses give effect to the usurpation, adjudged to be such by the Florida court, because the usurpers' act was done in the teeth of its procedure and judicial remedy was thereby defeated? Shall we award to their usurpation a triumph against the sovereign voice of the State, adjuding them convict of usurpation?

2. But the judgment in quo warranto is to seize the franchise in manibus regis—into the hands of the king—Salk., 374; Comyn's Dg., title Quo Warranto, ch. 5.

Now, the vote cast by electors and by them certified is not effectual until opened and counted. The act of voting on December 6, 1876, by them was inchoate. It now claims to be made consummate. In the interval the inchoate act is declared to be usurpation by the court of Florida. Shall we make the inchoate usurpation consummate by our judgment? mate by our judgment?

The quo warranto proceeding is in nomine regis - in the name of Florida. The Constitution gives to Florida the power to appoint electors. The elective function is in the State. These electors assume to speak her Through her judiciary Florida forbids it. Their title she has adjudged void.

Now shall we give a validity to their title, which Florida declares void?

3. But it is said the acts of a de facto officer are valid. True as to private parties, as to the mass of the public generally, in order to the furtherance of the rights of private parties and of justice.

But this is never held as to any political act or against the de jure sovereign. (See United States vs. Insurance Companies, 22 Wall., 99, and cases there cited.)

In these cases all acts of the confederate government or of the governments of the States of the confederacy, relating to the private rights and relations of citizens, were held valid, but all exercise of power, when against the authority of the de jure government, was held utterly null and void. This doctrine bears striking analogy to the case under consideration.

Besides, the right of no officer having a colorable title can be disputed by a denial of his title collaterally. It must be assailed by the sovereign whose power he usurps. Hence, while his acts may avail as to private parties, because done in the name and under color of the authority of the sovereign, they can never stand against the arraign-authority of the sovereign, they can never stand against the arraignment and judgment of the sovereign power.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask leave to print some further remarks.

No objection was made.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to give notice that I shall object to any remarks being printed in the RECORD on this subject in the future which are not delivered on the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. I insist that I had permission before the gentleman

Mr. PAGE. I do not object to the gentleman's printing additional remarks, because the same privilege has been accorded to a gentleman on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COCHRANE.) Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Virginia to print additional remarks, and the same permission was accorded to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCrary.]

Mr. TUCKER. Now, what does the commission decide? It holds

Mr. TUCKER. Now, what does the commission decide? It holds that neither the Houses nor the commission shall bear any voice from Florida but through its board and its governor. Before these omnipotent usurpers the Legislature of Florida and its judiciary are powerless. The trio of its board and the bass-notes of its executive must less. The trio of its board and the bass-notes of its executive must drown the acclaim of its Legislature and the solemn voice from the judgment-seat of the State. Her Legislature and judiciary are naught. When the board and the governor speak let her Legislature and her judges keep silence before them! Whatever illegality or fraud the board or governor commit must triumph over all other departments of the State government. The State judiciary should not, and we cannot intrude inquiry into their supreme, conclusive, and final determinations. minations.

Justice is said to be blind. This commission claims that we and its members are deaf as well as blind. Having eyes, we see not and cannot see, and ears, we hear not and cannot hear, the illegality and fraud that shock the sight and hearing of forty millions of people. It seems to me this conclusion is plainly unsound. It puts fraud at a premium, fair dealing at a discount.

Therefore, we may proclaim it from the house-tops that through all the ranks of social life, in all departments of human affairs, public the ranks of social life, in all departments of human affairs, public and private, the rewards of success in all, as the highest offered to American ambition, are to be won by those who can best organize fraud and most surely screen it from inquiry by the Federal and the State authority. Upon such principles the entries for the presidential race of 1880 will be for the worst jockeys, and not for honorable gentlemen. He who can best cheat will best succeed, and the people will mourn because the vilest men will be exalted to rule the country. Then may we tear down the Goddess of Liberty from the Dome of our Capitol and elevate Fraud in her place as the patron saint or rather the tutelary divinity of the American Republic.

Let us, the Representatives of the people of the States, whose victory by a majority of a quarter of a million of freemen is to be reversed by the fraud of a trio in Florida and a quartette in Louisiana, stand our ground, and if we may not avail by our vote in this House to re-our ground, and if we may not avail by our vote in this House to reverse, we may yet utter our solemn protest against the successful achievements of wrong over the rights of an outraged people.

Let it not be thought that victories thus won will bring joy to the victor. The wreath upon his brow will wither before the breath of public indignation; the flowers will fade along his pathway, and tangled thorns will obstruct and impede his progress. The fraud of the agent taints the title of his principal, whether he directs it or not. Since Eve plucked and Adam ate of the forbidden tree, the taker of the fruit of fraud has ever been held the full partaker in its guilt. The wearer of presidential robes obtained by such means may win a fleeting renown, but history will herd him with its pretenders to right and its usurpers of popular liberty; his glory will be turned into shame and his fame will be immortal infamy.

In the closing moments of the convention of 1787, Mr. Madison relates that Dr. Franklin (referring to a painting of the sun behind the lates that Dr. Franklin (referring to a painting of the sun behind the chair of the President) said :-

I have often in the course of the session, and the viscisitudes of my hopes and fears as to its issue, looked at that picture behind the President without being able to tell whether it was rising or setting; but now at length I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting sun.

Shall we, ninety years after the great philosopher first saw the sun of constitutional liberty above the American horizon, be doomed to see it go down under a cloud of impenetrable fraud? May the God of our Fathers forbid such a destiny for this federative Republic of great and growing Commonwealths!

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, it is one of the highest privileges I have had, as a member of the House, to give my vote in support of the decision and report of the electoral commission. It will, in my opinion, be the foundation of that change in the fundamental law of the country, constitutional and statutory, now made imperatively necessary by conflicting and irreconcilable opinion in regard to the proper method of counting the electoral votes for President and the proper method of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President. In the few moments that are allowed me for the expression of my opinion, I shall reply very briefly to the suggestions made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker.]

And, first, in regard to the ineligibility of electors.

In the case of Humphreys, according to the decision of the electoral commission and according to the facts in the case, there was no substantial pretense of ineligibility. He had been an officer of the United States. He had resigned his office. His resignation had been accepted. Now nuless it he a fact that a commission from the United accepted. Now unless it be a fact that a commission from the United States once accepted and held incapacitates a man forever after from being an elector for President and Vice-President, then Humphreys was absolutely and entirely free from any political disqualification to take, hold, and execute that office in the late presidential election in Florida.

But I go further than this. In the Constitution and laws of the United States there are some twenty specifications made in regard to the appointment of electors of President and Vice-President. There are three hundred and sixty-nine electors, and if there are twenty specific conditions upon the fulfillment of which the validity of the appointment depends then there are more than seven thousand points appointment depends then there are more than seven thousand points of qualification upon the failure of any one of which conditions, if the argument upon the other side be good, the House of Representatives can annul the appointment of an elector and upon its own judgment as to the invalidity of the appointment take the election of President into its own hands. That, sir, is a result never contemplated by the law, and it is not, ought not to be applied to this case. If we add to these specific conditions of election imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States those of the thirty-eight separate States, it will increase the specific qualifications so many thousand more, upon the failure of any one of which an elector would be disqualified, that it would be impossible ever to effect a valid election of President by the votes of the people I do not hesitate to state it as my opinion and the basis of my vote on the question of the eligibility of the elector in Florida whose appointment is disputed, that the doctrine here asserted cannot be maintained upon any just principle of conhere asserted cannot be maintained upon any just principle of constitutional law nor without defeating the operation of the especial feature of our system of government.

I do not question or deny the assumption that the people are bound to know the law because the law is made so that they can know it; but to make the case good upon the argument now advanced they are not only bound to know the law but to anticipate and inform themselves upon every fact that can exist in connection with the choice of electors and upon what the validity of the choice will depend. It will be impossible for the people to make themselves acquainted with every fact connected with the election of an elector and his qualifications for that office. They cannot upon any principle of law or justice be held responsible for the failure of information which, in many cases, it will be out of their power to obtain; and, in the absence of fraud, no election can be or will be held invalid for such reason or upon such grounds as are asserted in regard to the case of Humphreys

Let me state briefly an incident of the late civil war. During the war, in one of the four great States of the Union an active, vigorous, and able man held the office of adjutant-general. He was possessed of all the secrets of the Government; he had the most intimate and confidential intercourse with the President, with the Cabinet, with the commanders of the Army and Navy, and with the executive officers commanders of the Army and Navy, and with the executive omeers of the principal State governments. He knew everything that was going on. When the war closed business called him to a foreign country, and he now holds a seat in the British Parliament as a native-born subject of the British Empire. Now, it would have been an offense in him, it would have been an offense in any portion of the people of a State, to have allowed him to hold this position under these circumstances if they had known the facts to be as I state them. But no one knew them and no one had the means of knowing But no one knew them, and no one had the means of knowing them. If he had been chosen an elector under these circumstances, who can say that that fact, unknown to everybody but himself, would so far have incapacitated him from holding that office as to defeat the will of the people in a presidential election and elevate to that high office a candidate against whom a majority of their votes might have been given?

If the people use due diligence to get such information as is in their power, and it shall be found in a matter of this kind that a man fails in some one of the many qualifications prescribed by law and is therein some one of the many qualifications prescribed by law and is therefore ineligible, the people are not to be deprived of their votes, nor of their voice in the organization of the Government which they have chosen. This is a principle which has been recognized by the House of Representatives, and never questioned, so far as I know. Where a condition is attached by the statute to the election of public officers, as Representative in Congress for instance, and the State elects a Representative in violation of that statute, the House in every case has yielded its assumed right to control that election and has submitted to the decision of the State in the election. And so it would be in to the decision of the State in the election. And so it would be in

In the election of Senators and Representatives the condition pre-In the election of Senators and Representatives the condition prescribed by the Constitution as to age is often disregarded so far as the period of election is concerned, "and a member-elect of either body is admitted whenever he reaches the age required by the Constitution." The act of 1845, so much cited in this discussion, which required the appointment of presidential electors on the same day in every State of the Union, also provided that the Representatives to Congress from each should be chosen by the separate congressional districts and not upon a general State ticket as they had before been elected. The State of New Hampshire disregarded and disobeyed the law, electing as before all her Representatives to this House upon a general ticket for the entire State, and they were received upon a general ticket for the entire State, and they were received here, rightly received, as if they had been elected in accordance with the law. And this principle, in the absence of fraud, must be applied to electors of President and Vice-President; and when the State has chosen its electors, and their duty has been executed as it was in-tended by the State it should be, and their votes deposited, it will be too late for Congress to set it aside as invalid and void.

We come in this discussion upon the very essence of the Constitution. The question is in what manner the powers of the Constitution shall be executed, and the answer is by the election of President and Vice-President. In framing the Constitution there were three important objects kept constantly in view on the part of the convention and of the people. It was to elect a President in such a way as, first, to avoid tumult and disorder; second, to suppress cabal, intrigue, and corruption; and third, a chief object was to avoid the danger arising from the disposition on the part of foreign powers to control this Government. These objects are set forth in the sixty-eighth trol this Government. These objects are set forth in the sixty-eighth number of the Federalist as showing that the convention that framed number of the rederaist as showing that the convention that framed the Constitution took the greatest care and exerted the highest possible degree of prudence and circumspection to avoid these dangers. They found what they thought to be the safety of the Government in the appointment of electors. They did not make the appointment of a President to depend upon pre-existing bodies of men who might be tampered with before hand to prostitute their votes, but they referred it in the first instance to the immediate act of the people, to be exerted in the choice of these persons, these electors, "for the temporary and sole purpose" of making the appointment of President and Vice-President. President.

President.

We have in this statement the best possible exposition of the nature and character of the office of presidential elector. It is a temporary office. When the elector has voted, his office and his duty and his functions are exhausted. No court of a State and no court of the United States can change that act. It is executed, it is completed, the elector exists no longer, and there is no power to change his official act from what it was and is to what some of ms might think it. cial act from what it was and is to what some of us might think it should be. Whatever the State may choose to do in regard to the appointment or the action of electors it must do before he deposits appointment or the action of electors it must do before he deposits his ballot and certifies his act to the President of the Senate, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. When his act comes within the scope prescribed by the Constitution the State and the people have parted with their power. The vote, in the language so often repeated, "must then be counted." It cannot then be changed from one candidate to another or annulled so as to confer upon another tribunal the election of President and Vice-President. Let me state an incident that happened among men who were parties to the organization of the Government, under the Constitutions.

parties to the organization of the Government under the Constitution, illustrating the impossibility of changing an executive or ministerial act of a public officer. Samuel Adams, of Massachusetts, whose statue was lately placed in the old Hall of the Capitol, a man whose name carries with it weight, and whose virtue and integrity constitute a part of the history and the glory of this country, when governor of the State of Massachusetts was called upon to approve or disapprove an act of the Legislature to provide for filling a vacancy in the office of presidential electors. He signed the bill; and the very day, possibly the very hour, in which he placed his signature to that bill, he followed it to the office of the secretary of state, where that bill, he followed it to the office of the secretary of state, where it had been sent to be afterward transmitted to the senate, in which body the bill originated, and erased his name from the bill. But the senate of Massachusetts held that he had no power to erase his name, that the act had been done. If there were at any time authority of or discretion in him to consider and decide it had been exhausted when he signed his name, and there was no power to reverse it. The senate and house of representatives, elected with him upon the same ticket, held that he had no rewrite withdraw his name from the hill effer. held that he had no power to withdraw his name from the bill after it had been once written. And when he recorded the passage of an act repealing the statute they refused their assent to its passage. How much greater is the necessity and justice of the recognition of this principle of government, that when an act is done it is done, where so much depends upon the completion of the act of the people, and where the question arises, not between officers of the same State, but between the authorities and the people of the States and the Federal Government.

So neither these electors nor any court in Florida, nor any subsequent Legislature, nor any political party, still less any defeated candidate, has the right or even the shadow of a power to reverse the decision of the people as expressed in and by the official and final act of their electors [Here the hammer fell.] The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELD obtained the floor and said: I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I oppose the counting of the vote of Florida in accordance with the decision of the electoral commission, for the reason that the commission, in the course of its deliberations on this subject, adopted an order to this effect:

Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two Houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors.

This order excluded evidence which would have conclusively shown that a majority of the legal votes actually cast and canvassed by the returning board in the State of Florida were in favor of the Tilden electors, and not in favor of the electors certified by the commission. The case of Florida has been stated most clearly and ably by Mr. Charles O'Conor, of counsel for the Tilden electors, in his argument before the electoral commission; and therefore I quote his remark in reference to it. He said:

So, then, in this case of rivalry between these two sets of electors it appears to me that we present the best legal title. That we have the moral right is the common sentiment of all mankind. It will be the judgment of posterity. There lives not a man, so far as I know, upon the face of this earth who, having the faculty of blushing, could look an honest man in the face and assert that the Hayes electors were truly elected. The whole question, therefore, is whether, in what has taken place, there has been such an observance of form as is totally fatal to justice and beyond the reach of any curative process of any description.

It is a conceded fact that the people of Florida have not in truth appointed the electors certified by the decision of this commission. A Procrustean rule was adopted which prohibited them from consid-A Procrustean rule was adopted which prohibited them from considering the allegations of fraud that were made in the objections laid before them by this House, and which could have been proven beyond all question if they had heard evidence in the case. Surely this is the most remarkable decision ever pronounced by any tribunal in this or any other country; a decision which renders it utterly impossible to defeat the wicked fruits of fraud and conspiracy even if this fraud and conspiracy result in the election of the Chief Magistrate of this people. The objectors of the two Houses charged before the commission and offered to prove by competent testimony that the pretended Hayes people. The objectors of the two Houses charged before the commission and offered to prove by competent testimony that the pretended Hayes electors were never appointed by the people of Florida; that the pretended certificate of their election signed by Governor Stearns was in all respects untrue, and was corruptly procured and made in pursuance of a fraudulent conspiracy to assert and set up fictitious and unreal votes for President and Vice-President and thereby to deceive the proper authorities of this Union; that the State of Florida, by all its departments of government, legislative, judicial, and executive, had repudiated the authority of these pretended electors and pronounced them usurpers and declared all their acts null and void. By excluding this evidence the commission have decided in effect that if excluding this evidence the commission have decided in effect that if all the allegations of the objectors be true it would not change their

I oppose, further, the counting of the vote of Florida in conformity with this decision for the reason that to do so would be giving our sanction to the legal proposition laid down by the commission as the basis of their judgment. The commission, as a proposition of law,

That it is not competent, under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the governor of the State of Florida on, and according to, the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature or of the executive of Florida subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose.

on the prescribed day are madmissible for any such purpose.

This proposition differs materially from the first order adopted by the commission, and to which I have already referred. By the first order we were led to believe that all the papers laid before the joint convention by the President of the Senate, with the different certificates, would be regarded as evidence, and due weight would be given to them. But it seems they only proceeded to consider the papers opened by the President of the Senate in so far as they related to the certificates of Governor Stearns and the Hayes electors, and excluded all evidence which, if considered as they resolved to do in the first order, would have shown by the face of the returns submitted with the third certificate that the Hayes electors were not elected. They decided that they would not consider the facts before elected. They decided that they would not consider the facts before them, but ruled them out as appears by this portion of their decision:

And that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature or of the executive of Florida subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day are inadmissible for any such purpose.

What purpose? Inadmissible to show that the pretended electors were never elected; that they were usurpers and the mere creatures of fraud and conspiracy!

or traid and conspiracy:
So that this House and the country are informed that there is no power in Congress to correct this fraud, that there is no power in the State of Florida to correct it, even by the concurrent action of all the departments of the government; but that we are to stand powerless in the presence of it, and recognize it, and make it a living reality.

Further, this decision is not the law. If you will turn to Cushing's work on the Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, you will find the law thus laid down on page 72:

SEC. 195. It is the invariable practice, therefore, with us, to allow the authority and qualifications of returning officers to be inquired into.

And also this rule:

Sec. 197. If returning officers act in so illegal or arbitrary a manner as to injure the freedom of election, the whole proceedings will be void.

Further, it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 15 Peters's Reports, that—Fraud will vitiate any, even the most solemn transactions; and any asserted title founded upon it is utterly void.

Any title founded upon fraud is utterly void. This rule applies as well to the title to the presidential office as to that to a piece of prop-

But the court, in the same case, further hold:

In the solemn treaties between nations it can never be presumed that either state intends to provide the means of perpetrating or protecting frauds; but all the provisions are to be construed as intended to be applied to bona fide transactions.

That is the law as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Amistad case, in 15 Peters, page 520.

But there are other authorities applicable to this case. The honorable gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCrary,] in his Treaties on the American Law of Elections has laid down the law thus:

American Law of Elections has laid down the law thus:

It is undoubtedly the policy of the law not to throw too many obstacles in the way of investigating the correctness and bona fides of election returns. On this point the court in Reed vs. Kneass, 2 Parsons, 554, very justly observe:

"The true policy to maintain and perperuate the vote by ballot is found in jeal-ously guarding its purity, in placing no fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions in the way of testing election returns charged as false and fraudulent, and in assuring to the people by a jealous, vigilant, and determined investigation of election frauds that there is a saving spirit in the public tribunals charged with such investigation, ready to do them justice if their suffrages have been tampered with by fraud or misapprehended through error."—McCrary on American Law of Elections, pages 382, 383.)

This is the law of elections laid down by the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrary] in his own book as the law unto us. Yet by the decision we have before us we are confronted with "fine-drawn metaphysical obstructions" in the presence of a gigantic fraud, and are informed that there is no power to correct it either in Congress are informed that there is no power to correct it either in Congress or in the States themselves.

But, further, I regret that this decision has come here by the significant vote of 8 to 7. I regret this the more because it is contrary to the spirit of the electoral law and disappoints the expectation of those who framed it. It was fondly hoped that this law would be carried out in a spirit of patriotism and justice, and not in a spirit of partisanship. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoan] in supporting this bill said:

But it is charged that this commission is in the end to be made up of seven men.

But it is charged that this commission is in the end to be made up of seven men who of course will decide for one party, and seven men who of course will decide for the other, and who must call in an umpire by lot and that therefore you are in substance and effect putting the decision of this whole matter upon chance. If this be true, never was a fact so humiliating to the Republic expressed since it was inaugurated. Of the members of our National Assembly, wisest and best selected for the gravest judicial duty ever imposed upon man, under the constraint of this solemn oath can there be found in all this Sodom not ten, not one to obey any other mandate but that of party?

This decision answers, "No, not one." But the honorable gentleman especially repelled the imputation that the Supreme Court would be actuated by any partisan bias. He said:

But I especially repudiate this imputation when it rests upon those members of the commission who are to come from the Supreme Court. It is true there is a possibility of bias arising from old political opinions even there, and this, however minute, the bill seeks to place in exact equilibrium. But this small inclination, if any, will in my judgment be overweighted a hundred-fold by the bias pressing them to preserve the dignity, honor, and weight of their judicial office before their countrymen and before posterity. They will not consent by a party division to have themselves or their court go down in history as incapable of the judicial function in the presence of the disturbing elements of partisan desire for power, in regard to the greatest cause ever brought into judgment.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I was much impressed by these eloquent words of the gentleman from Massachusetts, so much so that in the remarks submitted by me the evening following on the same bill I remarks stometted by me the evening following on the same off is stated that an appeal from the Louisiana returning board to this commission was like stepping from a diminutive mole-hill to the sublime heights of Mont Blanc. But it seems that in this I was mistaken, and that the mountain heights from which we expected a decision in this case were, like the mountains spoken of by the poet and referred to by a distinguished Senator elsewhere—

Evermore Tumbling into seas without a shore.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FIELD. I yield now for ten minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. FIELD. I yield now for ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, that which impresses me more than anything else, and has impressed me for the last month, is the unblushing effrontery with which charges of "gigantic fraud" are made against the republican party of this country. [Cries from the democratic side, "Ah!"] Four times the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer,] in his speech charged "gigantic fraud." Out of the eight objections filed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Firld] to the acceptance of the report of this commission four of them charge fraud against the republican party. To use the language of one of them, "fraudulently and corruptly cheating the honest voters of Florida out of the electoral vote of that State." And when I go into the Supreme Court room from this floor I find there the gentlemen arguing "fraudulently and corruptly cheating the honest voters of Florida out of the electoral vote of that State." And when I go into the Supreme Court room from this floor I find there the gentlemen arguing on the democratic side rolling the word "fraud" on their tongues like a sweet morsel. When I come back into the House I find a great committee organized and appointed to hunt up the fraud of the republican party, and under the lead of the distinguished gentleman from New York throwing out the drag-net, bringing in telegrams and letters, unexplained, throwing out the drag-net, bringing in disreputable witnesses and allowing no opportunity up to a certain time for the refutation of these witnesses, all pointing at what the gentleman from Illinois calls in his speech "the gigantic frauds of the republican party." publican party."

publican party."

And then there comes the cry that the republican party interposes and places the law between those frauds and God's pure sunlight so they can be obscured from the people of the land; that we dare not open the door for investigation; that we dare not take evidence in the cases of Florida and Louisiana. I say to the gentlemen that there is no republican on this side of the House who would not court investigation into the frauds of Florida and the frauds of the State of Louisiana. I court it into the frauds of the city of New York; I court it into the frauds of New Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford, in Connecticnt, by which the democratic party this year stole the electoral vote of that State; I court it into the State of Indiana, where, under their laws requiring no registration whatever, they imported voters from the great cuiring no registration whatever, they imported voters from the great State of Kentucky, thus gaining and counting the electoral vote of that State for Tilden. Ay, by which one of the democratic counties in Southern Indiana cast more democratic majority than there were males twenty-one years of age living within the county. The republican party fear no examination and testimony, and I would like to

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. FRYE. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Indiana. I desire to know of the gentlemen on the other side what is the evidence of our stealing the vote of Florida? Where do you find it? Turn to Senate report 611, page 414, and you will find Attorney-General Cocke, one of the pure, undefiled democrats of the South; you will find McLinn, secretary of state; you will find Dr. Cowgill, comptroller of the State, sitting as canvassers of the State of Florida to determine under the judicial authority which they had by the law who had received the electoral vote of that State. And on page 415 you will find a protest filed against allowing Attorney-General Cocke to sit there in the capacity of judge. Why? Because he had sent a telegram as follows: telegram as follows:

The returns of county managers of election are not yet in. The board of State officers, of which I as attorney-general am one, does not meet until thirty-five days after the election, and you may rest assured that Tilden has carried the State, and Drew is elected. I do not think the radicals can cheat the democrats out of this State.

WM. ARCHER COCKE.

And because he signed that dispatch a protest was entered; but when he assured the board of canvassers that he would act under his oath, and under the knowledge of the law which he had, they permitted that democrat to sit as a judge of the election in Florida.

And now I call your attention to the canvass of Hamilton County, in the State of Florida—

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will ask whether Drew is not elected, and now

Mr. FRYE. I do not yield to anybody. And you will find on page 25 of Mr. WOODBURN'S report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that this Attorney-General Cocke, a democrat, joined with the republicans in throwing out precincts in the county of Hamilton which if counted would have given the democratic party 138 majority. Now you only claim 90, counting every democratic vote cast in that State, not excluding anybody; and you know the attorney-general decided against you by a majority of over 60. Turn to Monroe County and you will find he was asked his opinion as a lawyer by Dr. Cowgill, and replied emphatically-

Under the law, sir, those precincts must be thrown out.

And he voted to throw out precincts in Monroe County, with the two republicans, which, if they had been counted, would have given 342 majority for the Tilden electors. Where, then, comes the "steal" of the electoral vote of Florida? By your own democratic authority acting under his oath of office, and acting deliberately, we have a majority for Hayes of nearly 400 votes in that State. I know this weak man, Attorney-General Cocke, left the office of the canvassing acting under his oath of omce, and acting deliberately, we have a majority for Hayes of nearly 400 votes in that State. I know this weak man, Attorney-General Cocke, left the office of the canvassing board at three o'clock in the morning, went to his own office, there met Manton Marble, and F. Perry Smith of Illinois, and a dozen other faithful democrats. What took place I know not. But I presume they threatened, and bull-dozed, and entreated, and promised. They took him up into a high mountain and said to him, "All the possessions of the earth shall be yours, Attorney-General Cocke, if you will but be faithful to the democratic party and Samuel J. Tilden." He was convicted. He was converted. He at once commenced doing works meet for repentance, went back to the canvassing board, asked to change his vote on Monroe County—

Mr. CLYMER. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him—
Mr. FRYE. No, sir. He did not ask to change his vote in Hamilton County, but he asked to change it on Monroe County, which, if that had been allowed, would have left a majority for Hayes and Wheeler in the State of Florida of over 50 votes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Hurd.]

Mr. HURD. I do not rise, Mr. Speaker, to criticise the action of the commission in reporting their judgment to this House nor to complain of the result as it may affect the presidential candidate of my choice, but as a member of the legal profession and a member of this House to enter my protest against the novel, anomalous, and dangerous doctrine upon which this decision rests.

When the President of the Senate submitted to the two Houses the certificates from the State of Florida, certificate No. I was objected to on the ground that it had been procured through fraud and as a result of a conspiracy entered into between the members of the returning board, the electors named in the certificate, the governor of the State, and others to the objectors unknown. This objection was referred to the commission. Evidence was te whatever.

I protest most solemnly and earnestly against this judgment. As has been frequently said, fraud vitiates everything. It poisons the sources of all jurisdiction. It taints the blood of every body-politic which it infects. It avoids every deed; it cancels every obligation, annuls every contract, revokes every award, repeals every law, reverses every judgment. Every tribunal, however organized, is bound to treat as a nullity every fraudulent transaction, however it comes before it, whether directly impeached in an independent proceeding or whether it comes under its notice collaterally. The judgment of the highest judicial tribunal may be treated as of no effect by the humblest court if fraud has precured it. humblest court if fraud has procured it.

As stated by a distinguished writer:

It matters not whether the judgment impugned has been pronounced by an inferior or by the highest court of the land; but in all cases alike it is competent for every court, whether superior or inferior, to treat as a nullity, any judgment that can be clearly shown to have been obtained by manifest fraud.

Why is it claimed that there is an exception to this universal rule why is it claimed that there is an exception to this universal rule in the case of the returning board of Florida? What sanctity surrounds that tribunal that shall enable fraud to do its perfect work, without hindrance, behind its authority? Why is it that it alone, of all the tribunals on the face of the earth, can render judgment charged to be tainted with fraud which can bind courts and Congresses, commissions and peoples? If this exception is to prevail it is because either of the constitution of the returning board or of this commission, or of the subject-matter referred to it for decision.

There is nothing in the constitution of this returning board that allows this principle to be established. The highest judicial tribunal of Florida has decided that the duties of the returning board are purely ministerial. It takes the returns, counts the votes, aggregates the result; and whatever fraud may do anywhere else, no person has the result; and whatever fraud may do anywhere else, no person has ever been found bold enough to say that a candidate for office can profit by the fraud of the canvassers of his election or that officers can fraudulently thwart the will of the people. But even if you say that the authority of this board, as claimed, is judicial, then I maintain it is a court of limited jurisdiction. Its judgment can have no more sanctity than the judgment of the supreme court of Florida. That court has unlimited jurisdiction subject to its constitution. This is the ultimate appellate tribunal of that State, and every judgment it renders may be impeached for fraud.

it renders may be impeached for fraud.

If this be true, how much more can the judgment of this inferior subordinate returning tribunal, constituted by a statute for the performance of a particular specific duty, be impeached for the same cause. The constitution of the commission does not authorize this exception, as the language of the law expressly declares that it was created for the purpose of determining the true and lawful electoral vote of a State. It cannot be said that the commission can determine that vote when it refuses to receive evidence to show that the vote is false and unlawful. Under the Constitution this commission was organized to assist in counting the vote, and in counting the vote the first thing is to ascertain the vote, and in ascertaining the vote you must first distinguish between the true and the false returns, and in doing that testimony must be heard; for it is the only method by which the fraud and falsity of returns objected to can be exposed. There is nothing in the nature or subject-matter of this inquiry that requires this exception; it relates to the election of a President. The duties and interests of forty millions of people depend upon it. The hopes and fears of all who love free institutions throughout the world hang upon it. Can it be said, that while fraud may vitiate the humblest act of the most subordinate tribunal in the most trifling cause, fraud shall be sacred and protected here in this the greatest cause of all time? Nor will it do to say the State of Florida has acted in the matter and that therefore the fraud cannot be inquired into. No matmatter and that therefore the fraud cannot be inquired into. No matter how perfect the sovereignty, no matter how solemn the ceremonies under which a fraud is perpetrated, it is void, and courts must so declare it, and States and returning boards cannot escape the inexorable force of this rule. Moreover the State of Florida by its highest judicial tribunal has decided that the vote cast by those named in certificate No. 1 was the vote of usurpers.

The courts of a State are part of its governmental machinery. The people vote, the returning board counts, the judiciary determines. Every contract made, every act done within the limits of the State is upon the implied condition that it shall meet with the approval of the courts in a case properly brought. The validity of all official acts depends upon the judicial finding. Not until the judiciary has spoken, if objection be made, is the true will of the State known, and when it has spoken every other voice is a false one. has declared its will, not through a returning board, but through its courts. Her courts, without objection by the defeated, have reversed the action of the returning board, and given her a governor, a Legislature, and State officers. Why shall her voice be stifled as a Legislature, and State officers. Why shall her voice be stifled as to electors. Florida is indeed unfortunate if its will cannot be truly announced in choosing a President. Fraud has stolen her greatest offices; it has installed itself in her highest places. Congress cannot relieve. Commissions cannot interfere. She is powerless to help herself. Who, then, shall deliver her from the body of this death?

Mr. Speaker, a decision reached with the charges of fraud uninvestigated will not be satisfactory to the American people. It has been believed by millions that the certificates given to electors in certain southern States were procured through fraud. The whole country has been excited for months upon this question. The commission was accepted by the people because it was supposed that this question would be determined by it; but if evidence of fraud is to be excluded, the questions as to which the people have differed cannot be decided. No result thus reached will be accepted. It cannot bring the peace and quiet to the country we all so much desire, and he who assumes the duties of the presidential office with a title obscured by fraud, which, while charged, no one is permitted to prove, will be regarded which, while charged, no one is permitted to prove, will be regarded as a usurper by the vast majority of the American people.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. FIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] for

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say that I do not understand that under Mr. RASSON. I wish to say that I do not inderstant this law either of us have a right to dispose of the floor for an hour. I am now recognized by courtesy simply to designate the order of speaking during the second hour, which belongs to the minority, as the gentleman from New York has done during the first hour. I yield ten minutes, or as much of that time as he needs, to the gentleman from

Indiana, [Mr. Carr.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Field] controls the floor, and yields ten minutes to the gentleman

Mr. KASSON. How does the gentleman from New York control the floor for two hours, or for anything more than ten minutes, to which he is entitled?

Mr. FIELD. It is all the result of an arrangement made before the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] came into the House. It was agreed that certain gentlemen should be called on on behalf of both sides of the House, and called on by me, but I do not desire to do it

Mr. KASSON. I was not aware of that. I wanted only to disclaim any right to parcel out the floor in my own behalf.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen upon both sides of the House

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen upon both sides of the House have been recognized in their order.

Mr. KASSON. O, there has been no disorder in the assignment of the floor, only I disclaim the right to dispose of it on my own part. I yield the ten minutes to which I am entitled to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CARR.]

Mr. CARR. Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitancy in saying that the electoral commission in refusing to receive any other evidence as to the genuineness of electoral votes than that presented in the certificate of the governor of a State, have sought to establish a destructive principle, and in this particular, for a partisan purpose, have ignored the duty to inquire into the facts, which was plainly imposed upon both these Houses, and through them upon their comimposed upon both these Houses, and through them upon their commissioners, by the Constitution. I have further no hesitancy in saying my convictions are that under the palpable facts behind the governor's certificate the vote of the State of Florida should have been returned for Tilden and Hendricks. But, sir, at the same time I hold that the democratic majority of this House have no moral right to complain that this commission have rendered a partisan decision in reporting the four electoral votes of Florida for Hayes and Wheeler. reporting the four electoral votes of Florida for Hayes and Wheeler. While I assert that this decision is contrary to the facts and contrary to the will of a large majority of the people of the United States, yet I as boldly assert that the wrong is chargeable to a cause further back than the commission. The wrong rests upon the shoulders of those who established this partisan tribunal. When the democratic majority of this House adopted this law with the full knowledge that a majority of the commission would be republican, governed by republican instincts, controlled by republican interests, warped by republican biases, and moved by republican motives, they deliberately abandoned every claim which the democratic masses asserted to a control of our national affairs.

The commissioners have done no more nor less than what could or should have been expected or required of them. You erected a polit-

The commissioners have done no more nor less than what could or should have been expected or required of them. You erected a political tribunal, invested it with political attributes, and gave them political questions to determine, which they have settled from a political stand-point. Being republicans, they believed the republican candidate for the Presidency was and ought to be elected. In making their declaration they have been true and faithful to their political sentiments, education, and associates. No legal wrong can attach to them for this. But when you as democrats deliberately put such power, over such questions, in the hands of a tribunal so constituted, you committed a hold and daring wrong to your pretended political convictions, and a bold and daring wrong to your pretended political convictions, and assuredly, to your political associates, whose political sentiments and rights you betrayed and abandoned to your political adversaries.

I rise to remind the democratic majority that in common decency your votes on this measure have estopped you from indulging in even one word of criticism against the decision of that tribunal. Sirs, it one word or criticism against the decision of that tribunal. Sirs, it is your own offspring; you brought it into being, you gave it life and power, and you and you alone are responsible for the result. It is no excuse for you to assert that you did not anticipate such a result, that you expected higher and better things from your fondling. You had no more right to expect a tribunal so constituted to produce a had no more right to expect a tribunal so constituted to produce a different result than to expect a thorn-bush to bring forth figs. Nor will so weak an apology save you from the just condemnations which your betrayed and outraged constituency will forever heap upon your treacherous heads. [Laughter and applause.]

No, sirs, the wrong, the great and burning outrage lies at your hands, and your hands alone. Nor will the democratic people be slow in ascertaining the true source of their discomfiture and defeat. It may subserve your purpose for a brief time to attempt to shield yourselves under the cover of hollow denunciations of your tribunal, as the cry of "stop thief" for a moment may delude the officers of the law; but when the mad populace shall have vented their unmerited anger upon this tribunal for a brief hour it will seek the true object of its just indignation, and the blame will at last lie where it properly belongs.

true object of its just indignation, and the blame will at last he where it properly belongs.

The few only who had the moral courage to stand here upon this floor, and, amid the derision and contumely of the democratic majority, dared to warn you of the inevitable results of that day's work have a moral right to complain of the end of this day's labor; but, sirs, while they have deep regrets as to the action of the commission, they have deep and bitter denunciations and condemnations to heap upon the heads of those who, claiming to be leaders of the great democratic party in this trying hour of its existence, have proven themselves either incommetent from ignorance or unworthy for baser reasons. either incompetent from ignorance or unworthy for baser reasons.

[Renewed laughter and applause.]

Here, then, in the name of the democracy of the whole country, I absolve that commission from all charges, save it may be that of an absolve that commission from an energies, save it may be that of an honest mistake; and in the name of the same great power I denounce the majority of this House as being responsible for the wrong, and recreant, ignorantly or corruptly recreant, to the confidence which has been imposed in them, and faithless to the trusts confided in them.

Deen imposed in them, and faithless to the trusts confided in them. [Applause.]

Mr. KASSON. I am advised that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thompson] will next speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair intended to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thompson] as the next to speak.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I oppose the adoption of the finding of the electoral commission in relation to the vote of Florida for the recent that that finding is not in accordance with the first but the finding is not in accordance with the first but the f the reason that that finding is not in accordance with the fact, but declares a falsehood to be the truth. It says that the Hayes electors were duly appointed by the State of Florida when in truth and in fact the Tilden electors were so appointed, the Hayes electors being appointed by the board of State canvassers, and not by the legal voters of the State. The State of Florida and the whole country are pre-pared to prove this fact, have offered to prove it, but the commission has refused them an opportunity to prove it.

The finding of the commission amounts simply to this: that a majority of the board of State canvassers of Florida have declared the Hayes electors elected. This the people of the United States have known for more than two months and they did not need an electoral commission to inform them of it. The people believe that the declaration made by that board is false and they have relied, as this House has relied, upon this commission to inquire into the situation and declare, after a full and careful examination, the real fact. The country demands that the truth of the statement of that board shall be inquired into by this commission. This House has inquired into that fact and the evidence taken by it shows beyond all fair controversy that the Tilden electors were elected. The House has copies of the returns from every county in the State, certified by the chairman of that board, clearly showing that result. That evidence the House took for the purpose of setting the question as to which set of electors were elected. It has offered it to the commission, but the commission were elected. It has offered it to the commission, but the commission declares that question of fact to be whelly immaterial. A lie told by the returning board the commission regard as binding as the truth, a fraud committed by that board as having all the elements of an honest act. The position assumed by the commission is: if, through the foulest corruption and the grossest bribery, the State board of canvassers have declared the Hayes electors regularly appointed and elected, although they may not have received a single vote and the Tilden electors may have received every vote in the State, these falsely rilden electors may have received every vote in the State, these falsely declared elected are in law the regularly and duly appointed electors, and no power exists in the State of Florida or in the United States to prevent the votes cast by electors so certified from being

What a spectacle we shall present to the civilized world, confess ing that, under our system of government, which we claim to be a model in excellence, the Government, although it can raise armies and navies to defend itself from foreign invasion and domestic violence, is helpless before internal fraud and corruption; that the known and admitted fraud of two men can usurp the Government, and the people are not only powerless to resist the fraud but are bound when it is initiated to use the Army and Navy and all the resources of the Government to put into execution the fraud and to accept usurpers as their lawful rulers.

If it were shown that R. B. Hayes bribed the board of canvassers to make the declaration and certificate which they did, a false certificate, there is no power, we are told by the commission, to prevent him from getting those votes, and the two Houses of Congress must count the votes, declare him elected, inaugurate him, and, there be-ing no power to impeach him for an offense committed before his inauguration, we must accept him as a constitutionally elected President and continue him in office as such. A statement of the proposition is all that is needed to show its falsity. But we are asked to sanction such a principle. The certificate of the canvassing board is known to be false. It has been declared by the supreme court of Florida to be false. That court adjudged its certificate to be false, made at the same time upon the same principles, declaring Marcellus L. Stearns duly elected governor of Florida. The court told them their statement was false and demanded of them the truth; they told their statement was false and demanded of them the truth; they told part of the truth, said that their certificate giving a majority of over four hundred votes for Stearns was false, and that, instead of his having four hundred majority, Drew had a majority; and he, Drew, is now governor of Florida by virtue of that majority. That false canvass then made, the commission says, is a correct canvass, although the board has been compelled to admit it to be false and it is in fact

The commission had only to read the record from which the State board of canvassers made their declaration to learn that their declaration was false. But I may be told that the board has exercised quasijudicial powers. My answer is that the record shows they did not reject a single vote, precinct, or county for any lawful cause. Their own record shows that there was nothing to change in any single instance the face of the certificate as made by the county canvassing boards, and that the only duty the State board had to perform was to certify the vote as it appeared upon the face of the returns. The certificate is just as false as if it had said the Hayes electors received 90,000 votes and the Tilden electors 100,000 votes, and we declare the Hayes electors elected. The commission would find just as properly the Hayes electors elected under that certificate as under the one they have. They being declared elected the declaration cannot be controverted however false; this is the finding of the commission. This commission has declared that there is no power through the forms of law, State or national, to resist a fraud and prevent usurpation, and consequently that the only constitutional mode of resisting fraud and usurpation is by revolution. I know the people of this country are not prepared to sanction such a proposition as this, and shall we their representatives sanction it?

It is a plain proposition of law that when an offer is made to prove a fact and the evidence is decided to be immaterial, the fact is admitted to be true in its broadest sense and fullest significance; so this commission have by their action admitted that the most wicked conspiracy did exist alleged to have been entered into by the Hayes electors and M. L. Stearns and other persons, to the objectors unknown, to deprive the people of the State of Florida of the right to appoint electors and deprive the Tilden electors of their right to said office, and to assert and set up fictitious and unreal votes for President and Vice-President, and thereby deceive the proper authorities of this Union; and that a paper purporting to be a certificate signed by M. L. Stearns as governor of said State of the appointment of the Hayes electors was and is in all respects untrue and was corruptly procured. The commission say that these facts are in no wise material to the investigation they are to make. I cannot accede to such a proposition as this, and therefore I am opposed to ratifying the finding of the commission; and I further most earnestly object to the ratification of the finding of that commission for the reason that it has utterly refused to hear the question submitted to it.

The question submitted to that commission is not which set of electors are indorsed by the board of State canvassers; that as I have before stated, has been known to the whole country for more than two months; but the question submitted is which were, as a matter of fact, elected. This country is not to be ruled by returning boards. It will acknowledge no persons as duly elected but those who have a majority or plurality of the legal votes. The country demands that it be made known who were elected electors for the State of Florida without regard to the false and fraudulent declarations of returning This commission has been charged with the duty of making that fact known. But it has refused to make the examination neces sary to determine the question. How can this House, with any resary to determine the question. How can this House, with any regard for its duty to the country, approve of such a course of proceedings? This House is in duty bound to return to the commission its finding, with an earnest request that the question submitted to the commission be heard, and if it refuses to hear and determine the question submitted to it, it will be the duty of this House to do all in its power to vacate that commission.

This House ought not to submit another question to this commission until after it has heard and determined the Florida case according to the fair intent and meaning of the submission. It most assuring to the fair intent and meaning of the submission. It most assuredly ought not to ratify the action of that commission as reported.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, the commencement of this session of Congress witnessed a new phase in national legislation. For the first time in the history of the Government, the dominant party in this House proposed something wholly new, something wholly strange. The power behind the throne, which had first manifested itself at Saint Louis, demanded of the majority of this House that an attempt should at once be made to overturn the decision of the people of Florida, Louisiana, and of South Carolina, as made at the election on the 7th of November last. The honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] the chairman of the national democratic committee, early on the first day of the session, proposed that a committee from this House should start out toward Florida, another committee to-ward South Carolina, and another committee toward Louisiana, for the purpose of overturning, if possible, the will of the people as ex-pressed in those States in favor of Hayes rather than Tilden as Pres-

These committees were appointed, and I feel compelled here to indulge myself in this statement, that if the other committees acted with an eye as single to the purpose of their creation as did the committee to Florida, then I venture to say that nothing was left unsaid, nothing was left untried, on their part, to prejudice the American people against the expressed will of the States. On the part of the majority of the committee to Florida there was pre-eminently but one majority of the committee to Florida there was pre-eminently but one single object in view, and that was to do anything and everything in the interest of the Tilden electors. We of the minority, in our simplicity supposed that, at the very beginning, there would be placed before us as a committee, the affidavits, the evidence, and the testimony upon which the returning board of Florida had acted; for we were called upon and directed to report to Congress the action of the returning board. How were we to judge of that action, whether it was just or unjust, legal or otherwise, unless we were to have the affidavits and all other evidence upon which that board had acted? But the majority of the committee said no, not an affidavit, not a scrap of paper, not a piece of testimony shall come before this committee that went before the canvassing board of Florida; not a ray of light that struck the canvassing board shall strike this committee; not one particle of evidence that that board had, shall this committee know anything about. And they voted down the resolution that we in our simplicity had presented as lying at the very beginning and threshold of an honest investigation. And, from the beginning to the end, not one particle of evidence that went before the canvassing board did we have. board did we have.

There was left over at Tallahassee from the raid made by democratic There was left over at Tallahassee from the raid made by democratic politicians from the city of New York a certain democratic politician. He was found there as a part of the debris of that grand raid upon the canvassing board, made by the democracy of New York and other portions of the country. This democratic Tilden attorney was caught up and made the secretary of this investigating committee. He had papers; he had affidavits; he had telegrams; but they were only to be read, only to be examined by the democratic portion of this committee; they were never once seen or looked upon by the minority.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman—
Mr. DUNNELL. No, sir; I was voted down in Florida by the majority of this committee, and I propose now to have my ten minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. They took the original certificates from the State of Florida.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not yield. No one was more surprised than I, to read or hear the report of the majority of that committee. When the grand announcement was made that the State of Florida had as clearly gone for Tilden as Massachusetts had gone for Hayes, then I returning board, untouched and unaffected by any decision of the supreme court of Florida. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that they counted in Drew for governor. They were authorized to recanvass for governor, but not for electors. But even if they had recanvassed for electors on the same basis that they recanvassed for governor, then the State went for Hayes by a majority of 211. And there it stands, first by the returning board and then by the decision of the supreme court of that State, if that decision had ordered a recanvass of the electoral vote.

A democratic Legislature came into power on the 2d of January. A democratic Legislature came into power on the 2d of January. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Thompson] suppose that any commission made up of intelligent men would let in the action of a democratic Legislature, born out of due time, without any earthly connection with this canvass? It is not a matter of surprise. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Hurd] said that it was supposed that this bigh electoral commission would go behind the certificates and down to the polls. Did any man on that side of the House ever claim, when this bill was under consideration, that any such thing would be done? No; no man here can claim that any tribunal that mortals can create, could ever go down to the polls in all the States of the can create, could ever go down to the polls in all the States of the can create, could ever go down to the polls in all the States of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one point here. They talk of gigantic frauds. They talk in their report of "Archer No. 2." They relied for their proof upon one Mr. Fleming; he and he alone was their sheet-anchor. Let me say here that every democratic witness upon the stand, no matter if he had perjured himself like Green R. Moore or Floyd Dukes, was a paragon of virtue; and every republican witness was a liar because he was a republican. How turns out this Mr. Fleming, the only witness upon whom they rest in Archer No. 2, and upon whose testimony they claim 219 fraudulent votes?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware until this discussion began that I should have the opportunity of addressing the House upon this question. My remarks will therefore be rather desultory.

rather desultory.

I desire to say at the outset that I was one of those democrats who supported this electoral bill in good faith; and I say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. CARR] that it will take more than him or the few who voted with him against this measure to read the majority of this House out of the democratic party. We voted for that measure; and it was to my mind one of the grandest and loftiest evidences of democratic faith in the honesty of mankind. And if it so be that this commission has not risen to the full height of the great occasion, if so be that this commission has not decided in accordance with what so be that this commission has not decided in accordance with what we believe to be law and precedent and right, we have the satisfaction of knowing that we at least have done our duty and made the grandest effort possible for us to make to settle this great question according to law and according to right.

Sir, I am also one of those who do not agree with the decision of this commission. I am rejoiced that these objections were presented here, because I want the Democratic party in this House by their votes to enter their solemn protest against this consummation of outrageous wrong under mere legal fictions.

We are establishing precedents here. This electoral bill is a great precedent for our successors to follow; and that very bill provides that each House, after the report of the commission shall have been made, shall decide whether they will abide by it or not. I would not that each House, after the report of the commission shall have been made, shall decide whether they will abide by it or not. I would not have supported this bill, I would not have voted for it, if it had removed entirely from the control of Congress this question. We called in these gentlemen as an advisory board. They have advised us of their conclusions; and I say to you gentlemen here to-day, I believe their conclusions are wrong, and I believe the great body of the people will so decide and so hold for all time to come.

What, sir! Are the people of a great State to be disfranchised, their voices hushed into silence by the mere fraud and theft of a few men who happen to be called a returning loant? Yet the decision of men who happen to be called a returning board? Yet the decision of this commission precludes utterly in this case, and if it is to stand as law prohibits forever any inquiry beyond the simple certificate of law prohibits forever any inquiry beyond the simple certificate of the governor of a State.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this House will by its vote to-day show to the country that it does not agree with that principle. I hope it will show that it stands ready to-day to face the real facts in every case as they may arise. This evidence is shut out. Gentlemen say that we have been crying fraud and that they have been ready to meet us upon that cry. How have you met us? By skulking behind the merest legal fictions. If you believe that Hayes carried the State of Florida or the State of Louisiana, why do you not like men, come up and say, "Let us investigate these facts and determine whom the people of these States honestly desired to elect?"

Mr. Speaker, I rose simply to express my hope that the House would to-day sustain these objections. If they are sustained also by the Senate, then of course the vote falls. But if the Senate sustains the decision of the commission, then of course the vote will have to be counted, and the wrong will receive the sanction which will damn the party profiting by it.

I yield the remainder of my time to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. ROBBINS.]

Mr. ROBBINS.]

Mr. ROBBINS.]

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against concurring in this decision of the commission because it was not reached and rendered on that lofty plane of equity and candor upon which the country expected the tribunal to act when it was created.

When this great plan for settling the pending dispute as to the Presidency was devised and adopted, this House and the country and the world expected that the question would be considered and decided upon the broadest principles of truth and right, and not upon legal quibbles. I am proud of the position of my party in this crisis. We go before the electoral commission and say, "If we have the Presidency upon the merits of the case, give it to us, but not otherwise." The other party go there and say in substance through their counsel, "No matter how fraudulent, no matter how false, if there is any legal technicality upon which you can give us the Presidency, then we want the Presidency adjudged to us without inquiring as to what was the true voice of the people." The world will take notice of the difference in the moral attitude of these two parties in this great controversy. One asks that it be decided upon the very right and truth of the matter; the other says, "Give us success by any dodge truth of the matter; the other says, "Give us success by any dodge retth of the matter; the other says, "crive us success by any dodge necessary to win."

A great man once said that he would rather be right than be President. I would rather see my party do right than win the Presidency. If the victory should finally be awarded to our adversaries by the system of special pleading together with the refusal to look at the bottom facts, which has led to this decision in the Florida case, I say "Take the Presidency and welcome. We scorn to have it on such terms." The man who shall consent to receive that exalted office under such a decision and the members of the commission who shall give that a decision and the members of the commission who shall give that decision upon such principles will write themselves down in history so deeply disgraced that the hand of resurrection can never reach them to restore them again to the respect of mankind. And the party which accepts victory by such means will find its cup of fancied triumph contains only the bitternesss and poison of ultimate ruin and eternal dishonor.

Sir, this crisis will always be distinguished by some extraordinary features. The first is the unparalleled villainy of the conspiracy that brought the country into this difficulty; the next is the sublime spirit of moderation, conservatism, and magnanimity by which a peaceable way was devised to get the country out of the difficulty; and I did trust that this spirit would be responded to and further and I did trust that this spirit would be responded to and further illustrated by the commission itself showing that it could meet this issue on the high patriotic basis of equity and impartiality. I trust that they will yet do it. I have not yet lost hope in the success which our good cause deserves; nor have I yet withdrawn all faith in the commissioners. Under the great responsibility which rests upon them and with the eyes of the world and of posterity looking at them, I shall not believe until it is done that they will finally decide this great upon the paragraph and the believe until it. decide this case upon the narrow and technical grounds upon which they seem as yet to be standing.

I hope the voice of this House to-day, emphatically pronouncing its non-concurrence in their judgment on the Florida case, may be heard and received by them as an earnest call to the commission for the sake of liberty and country to rise to the grandeur of the occasion and decide the Presidency so that the conscience of the country and mankind will be satisfied with the decision. To do this they must look at everything which history will look at in making up its final verdict on this case and on the actors in this great crisis. Let them inquire into the facts. Let them search for truth as for hid treasure. Let them expose fraud, and annul every result founded on fraud. Thus only can they satisfy public opinion, preserve the good name of our institutions, and give genuine contentment to the

Mr. HOPKINS. I believe there is one minute left of the time of the gentleman from Virginia, and he yields that one minute of his time to me so I may have a paper read to show how much truth and justice there is in the complaint of the gentleman from Minnesota that he was precluded from getting at the truth.

Mr. PAGE. I object to the reading of any paper. The law does not contemplate any remarks not delivered printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will read it myself if the gentleman insists on objecting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. Cochrane in the chair.) The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk proceeded to read—

Mr. BANKS. Is it the right of any member to have a paper read?

If it is read as part of his speech then I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asked the paper be read as part of his remarks, and it is now being so read by the Clerk. The Clerk will proceed. The Clerk will proceed.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, in the largeness of debate which we are accustomed to allow in this House I think on the part of both sides on this occasion the debate has wandered somewhat, I may say rather widely, from the precise point involved in the questions submitted to the House.

Under the act of Congress this commission has made its report. Objections have been filed to that report, and on those objections this House is required to act. There is no evidence before the House upon which it has jurisdiction to act in the case of Florida. The question presented is purely a question of law so far as it invites our judgment and that question is, has this commission in making the order, based upon the reasons reported, gone contrary to the Constitution and laws of the land? If so, they ought to be overruled; if not, of course this

Now, sir, in that condition of the question it is said that an offer was made to prove certain allegations of fraud or error in the proceedings of the popular election. Grant the offer was made, and the question, of course, is then raised of the admissibility of the evidence under the Constitution and laws. But upon that slight hinge gentlemen come before the House and ask us to proceed at once to discontinuous and the companies of the state of of t cuss the true canvass of Florida. If the commission is right, this House has no jurisdictiction to recanvass the popular votes of Florida. If the commission was wrong, then gentlemen may possibly argue that the House has the right to discuss the original election, although I should still deny that the true canvass would change the result in the case of electors or that they could judicially determine the rights of electors

Sir, I say to the gentlemen who declare we are relying on legal fictions to elect a President of the United States that this whole Constitution is a legal fiction if the position taken by the majority of this commission is incorrect. Unless gentlemen can point me to some clause or phrase in that Constitution that gives us power to revise the action of State governments in the canvass of their votes for electors, then I affirm that the attempt to do it is necessarily a usurpation of authority by the House.

Now, sir, upon this unconstitutional assumption of right they come before us with unproved charges of fraud which they claim vitiates before us with unproved charges of fraud which they claim vitiates the election. My honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] to whom we always listen with so much interest, declared that fraud vitiates everything. I must take direct and pointed issue with him on that declaration, even where fraud does exist. If a bill, for example, passes this House by a majority of one vote, and upon trial afterward by the House the man who casts it is unseated because he is shown to have been elected by bribery or fraud, your law still stands; your law cannot be impeached; the courts of the country have decided it over and over again.

your law cannot be impeached; the courts of the country have decided it over and over again.

So you turn, repeatedly, members from their seats on this floor who have voted on all the questions that come before this House; and, whatever the ground of unseating the members, every act that they have done stands valid in the eye of the law. So of many other public officers. It is, therefore, Mr. Speaker, incorrect and against the law to say that fraud vitiates everything. It does not have the effect of vitiating a public and completed act like that in question. So much vitiating a public and completed.

for that allegation.

But they say: "If we had been allowed to prove certain things, we would have shown, in Florida, that the returning board acted corruptly and carried out a conspiracy." I regret even to turn in this debate to these conflicting statements of fact. Mr. Speaker, it is immitted that we can agree on the disputed facts. When your without the confliction of the debate to these conflicting statements of fact. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible that we can agree on the disputed facts. When your witnesses are nearly half and half swearing to different statements, when your judges decide differently, what is the use of coming before this House and making these charges and counter-charges? What would be the use on this question of my reminding the gentlemen who make these charges that the evidence of corruption is on the other side; that money has been passed from New York to Oregon; that offers of money were made in Florida, as sworn to by some witnesses, and that offers of money were also made in New Orleans, as sworn to by other witnesses, to corrupt republican electors or republican officers? I have kept all that out of the debate before the commission, and I have no desire to throw it in here beyond the simple point that in have no desire to throw it in here beyond the simple point that in that way I desire gentlemen to recognize the utter futility of assuming for granted the charges of fraud that are made and hurled from one side of the House to the other, and of which we have no judicial proof, and about most of which the evidence is absolutely conflicting.

There is one point, however, upon which the evidence is not conflicting. It is this: The supreme court upon application being made ordered a recanvass by this same returning board upon a different rule of law from that first adopted. In that recanvass which the court made applicable to the votes for Drew, the same principles were applied to the election of the electors and the return made by the board to the supreme court, contained the result as applied to the presidential electors and to the State officers alike. This recanvass on rules settled by the supreme court elected by about two hundred majority the Hayes electors, as it also elected Drew on the democratic State ticket. They moved to strike out the electoral recanvass from the return as not within the order of the court. It was so done. But the fact remains that the very principles applied to the recanvass which elected Drew and the democratic ticket also elected the republican presidential ticket.

Now, then, I beg with these statements to call again the attention of the House to the simple question whether this commission, embracing the majority of the judicial element upon it, have decided against the Constitution and the law, when they declined to go back of the election record made by the State. We affirm they have decided in strict accordance with the Constitution and the law: first, because in the Constitution you have not a single clause giving power to the National Congress to touch the action of the State authority behind National Congress to touch the action of the State authority behind the organization of the electoral board; secondly, because by this same Constitution, under its executive clauses, you find no grant of power to examine into those facts; thirdly, because under its legislative clauses you find no possible power to go behind and examine into the action of the State authorities prior to the time the electoral college is constituted; and, lastly, because the trial of right to an office is a judicial act, and the Constitution by its third article positively affirms the whole judicial power of the United States to be vested in the Supreme Court and inferior courts to be organized by Congress. Nobody pretends that we have organized this commission as an inferior court under the Constitution. Consequently there is no judicial power in Congress or in this commission. As a result of no judicial power in Congress or in this commission. As a result of that, it is evident that they cannot try a judicial question. It is a hybrid organization made up from the judicial and legislative branches of the Government to do an executive act; and from neither of those branches can Congress derive judicial power which it either can use or delegate in this case; and it is impossible, without a usurpation, that this commission or the House itself should attempt to try a question of title to the electoral office, because the trial is judicial in its nature and requires the consideration of unofficial evidence not provided for by Constitution or statute.

Here the hammer fell. 7

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, scarcely had the election taken place in November when the President invited representatives of the republi-can party to visit the disputed States of the South for the purpose of witnessing the canvass of the votes, declaring as he did it that no President could afford to be elected by fraud. When Congress met in December, acting in the same spirit, it sent committees of investigation into the same States to ascertain the truth. The States have been ransacked, hosts of witnesses have been examined, and piles of evidence have been laid upon our tables. Now, of a sudden, it is discovered that the invitation of the President was an act of superfluous folly, and that his messengers and the committees of the two Houses went on a fool's errand.

went on a loors errand.

This discovery is made by republicans. There is not a democrat in either House of Congress who does not disown and reject it. It is now to be seen whether the republicans disown or accept it. We shall soon know whether the republican party has so far forgotten the brave words and heroic deeds of its earlier days as to cry, "Evil, be thou my good," and seek to install a falsehood in the Chief Magistracy of the land.

The electoral commission which you have constituted to solve the doubts and relieve the consciences of the people has gravely resolved, first, that no evidence can be received beyond the certificates and papers submitted to the two Houses by the President of the Senate.

And, second, that of these certificates and papers none can be con-

And, second, that of these certificates and papers none can be considered which bears record of any act done after the casting of the votes by the electors. This decision means nothing less than that the certificate of the governor of the State, in accordance with the determination of the State canvassers, is conclusive, unless before the electoral vote is cast the State rectifies the certificate. The qualification, I was about to say, is a mockery. We know that there is scarcely a State in the Union where the canvass is completed until within a few days of the meeting of the electors. We know moreover that in the State of Florida the canvassers completed their canvass at three o'clock in the morning, and that the electors voted at twelve o'clock of the same day. Upon the theory of the commission, unless the State of Florida, within those nine hours, acting through its various departments, aroused itself and rejected the determination of the canvassing ments, aroused itself and rejected the determination of the canvassing board, there is no power to do it in the State or in Congress. The doctrine of the commission, if I interpret it aright, amounts to this: that if the general commanding in Florida had upon the morning of the 6th of December marched a corporal's guard into the State-house, told off four of his soldiers, and forced the State canvassers to certify to their election and the governor to superadd his certificate, there would then have been no power in the land to prevent the votes of these soldiers from being counted as the electoral vote of Florida. We are here called upon to say whether in the solemn judgment of this House this is the law of the land. Let me show you some of its consequences. We offered to prove fraud; we were denied the right to do so. We offered to show that the pretended appointment of the Hayes electors was corruptly made. This was refused. But the truth cannot all be concealed. One of the persons certified by the commission to be a lawful elector of the State of Florida is Charles H. Pearce. There is a record of him from the reports of the supreme court of the State which shows him from the reports of the supreme court of the State which shows him to be a convicted felon. In the fourteenth volume of these reports I find the case of The State of Florida against Pearce. The indictment set forth "that Charles H. Pearce, colored, a minister of the gospel and a senator representing the eighth district in the senate of the State of Florida," on the 4th of February, 1870, during the pendency before the house of assembly of a resolution to impeach the governor of high crimes and misdemeanors with the intent of feloniously influencing the vote of a member, offered and promised him $500. He was convicted by a jury, and upon his appeal to the supreme court of the State the judgment and sentence were affirmed. That man, a pardoned convict, gave the one vote which will elect Mr. Hayes, if elected at all, to the presidential office.

Mr. Speaker, the decision of this commission, as I view it, is entitled to no respect. It is as unsound in morals as it is unfounded in

Mr. Speaker, the decision of this commission, as I view it, is entitled to no respect. It is as unsound in morals as it is unfounded in law, and mischievous in its consequences. The spectacle of successful villainy is corrupting in proportion to the extent of the theater on which it is displayed and the prizes which it wins. The prize of the Presidency has never yet been won by fraud. If it is thus won now, the spectacle will be more injurious to our good name and more corrupting to our people than all the peculation, robbery, and frauds of all our history. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question now is first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale] to the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Field.] The resolution of the gentleman from New York will first be read, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

of the gentleman from Maine.

The Clerk read Mr. FIELD's resolution, as follows:

Ordered. That the counting of the electoral vote from the State of Florida shall not proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission, but that the votes of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. Hale's amendment was then read, as follows:

Strike out the word "not," and also strike out all after the word "commission," to the end; so that it will read:

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral vote from the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission.

Mr. HOSKINS and Mr. BANKS called for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 167, not voting 20; as follows:

Mr. COOK (one of the tellers) read the certificate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there objections to the certificate from the State of Kentucky? If there be none, the vote of that State will be counted. It will be announced by the teller.

Mr. COOK, (one of the tellers.) The State of Kentucky casts 12 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and 12 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair opens a certificate from the State of Louisiana received by mail, no corresponding one by messenger. One of the tellers will read the same in the hearing and the State of Louisiana received by mail, no corresponding one by messenger. One of the tellers will read the same in the hearing and presence of the two Houses.

Senator ALLISON (one of the tellers) read a certificate of William P. Kellogg, as governor of the State of Louisiana, to the election of certain electors, and the certificate of those electors that they had met and cast 8 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and 8 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

York, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened a certificate received by messenger from the same State the Chair hands it to the tellers, to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. A corresponding one received by mail is also handed to the tellers.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) read a certificate, signed by John McEnery, as governor of the State of Louisiana, to the election of certain electors and the certificate of those electors that they had met

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair having opened another certificate from the State of Louisiana, received by messenger, one of the tellers will read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. A corresponding certificate received by mail is also handed to the tallers.

Senator INGALLS (one of the tellers) read a certificate of William P. Kellogg, as governor of the State of Louisiana, to the election of certain electors, and an accompanying certificate of the electors that they had met and cast 8 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and 8 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair having opened another certificate received by mail from the State of Louisiana—no corresponding one by messenger—it will be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) proceeded to read a paper signed "John Smith, bull-dozed governor of Louisiana," purporting to give "the proceedings of the college of electors" at New Orleans, December 6, 1876.

Senator SARGENT, (when the certificate had been thus far read.) It is obvious that this certificate is not bona fide. I doubt whether anybody desires its reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to submit all papers coming into his hands and purporting to be certificates. He has opened and presented this in compliance with his duty. Is there objection to this paper being suppressed?

Senator BLAINE. Read it.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) resumed the reading of the paper, but was interrupted by Senator McDONALD, who said: Do I understand that this was received by messenger? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair on opening it stated that it was received by mail, without a corresponding one by messenger.

Mr. McDONALD. It seems to me very clear that this is not a certificate of any votes cast, and that we are not compelled to listen to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The teller will read the indorsement upon the envelope, which designates it as containing an electoral vote and so explicitly that the Chair had no discretion in respect of laying the paper before the two Houses.

Mr. STONE (one of the tellers) read as follows:

To the Vice-President of the United States, Washington, D. O:

Vote of electoral college of the State of Louisiana for President and Vice-Presi-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The teller will proceed with the reading. The reading was resumed, but was interrupted by Mr. HOAR, who said: I desire to inquire if the Chair has held that it is not in order by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of this paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asked unanimous consent the Chair to direct that the reading proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I hope unanimous consent will be given to dispensing with the reading, unless some gentleman rises in his place to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, Is there objection?
Mr. MILLS. This is a burlesque and I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the reading will proceed.

The reading of the paper was then concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This closes the reading of the certificates from the State of Louisiana. Are there objections to the cer-inicates from the State of Louisiana. Are there objections to the certificates which have been read?

Senator McDONALD. On behalf of the Senators and Representatives whose names are subscribed hereto, I submit the following objections to the counting of the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana as cast for Hayes and Wheeler.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objections to counting the vote will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. Gorham, Secretary of the Senate, read as follows:

The undersigned Senators and members of the House of Representatives of the United States object to the lists of names of the electors made and certified by William P. Kellogg, claiming to be but who was not the lawful governor of the State of Louisiana, and to the electoral votes of said State signed by W. P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, Oscar Joffrion, being the two several certificates the first and third presented by the President of the Senate to the two Houses of Congress in joint convention, for the reasons following:

Because on the 7th day of November, 1876, there was no law, joint resolution, or other act of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana in force directing the manner in which electors for said State should be appointed.

Because if any law existed in the State of Louisiana on the 7th day of November, 1876, directing the manner of the appointment of electors it was an act of the Legislature which directed that electors should be appointed by the people of the State in their primary capacity at an election to be held on a day certain, at particular places, and in a certain way; and the people of the State in accordance with the legislative direction exercised the powers vested in them at an election held in said State November 7, 1876, in pursuance of said act and of the laws of the United States, and appointed John McEnery, R. C. Wickliffe, L. St. Martin, F. P. Poché, A. De Blanc, W. A. Seay, R. G. Cobb, and K. A. Cross to be electors by a majority for each of six thousand and upwards of all the votes cast by qualified voters for electors at said election, and said electors received a certificate of their due appointment as such electors from John McEnery, who was then the rightful and lawful governor of said State, under the seal thereof, and thereupon the said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross became and were vested with the exclusive authority of electors for the State of Louisiana, and no other person or persons had or could have such authority or power, nor was it within the legal power of any State or Federal officer or any other person to revoke the power bestowed on the said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross, or to appoint other electors in their stead, or to impair their title to the office to which the people had appointed them.

Because the said Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, Sheldon, Marks, Levissee, Brewster, and Joffrion were not, nor was either of them, duly appointed an elector by the State of Louisiana, in the manner directed by the constitution and laws of said State and of the United States, and the lists of names of electors made and certified by the said William P. Kellogg, claiming to be, but not being, governor of said State, were false in fact and fraudulently made and certified by said Kellogg, with full knowledge at the time that the said Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, Sheldon, Marks, Levissee, Brewster, and Joffrion were not duly appointed electors by the qualified voters of said State, and without any examination of the returns of the votes cast for electors, as required by the laws of the State.

Because the pretended canvass of the returns of said election for electors of President and Vice-President by J. Madison Wells, T. C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Louis Kenner, as returning officers of said election, was without jurisdiction and void, for these reasons:

First. The statutes of Louisiana, under which said persons claimed to have been appointed returning officers and to have derived their authority, gave them no jurisdiction to make the returns or to canvass or compile the statements of votes cast for electors of President and Vice-President.

Secondly. Said statutes, if construed as conferring such jurisdiction, give the returning officers power to appoint the electors, and are void as in conflict with the Constitution, which requires that electors shall be appointed by the State.

Thirdly, Said statutes, in so far as they attempt to confer judicial power and to give to the returning officers authority in their discretion to exclude the statements of votes and to punish innocent persons without trial by depriving them of their legal right of suffrage, are in conflict with the constitution of the State of Louisiana, and are anti-republican and in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, in so far as they refer it to the discretion of the returning officers to determine who are appointed electors.

Fourthly, If said Louisiana statutes should be held valid, they conferred no jurisdiction on said Wells, Anderson, Casanave, and Kenner, as a board of returning officers, to make the returns of said election or to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the commissioners of said election, for the reason that they constituted but four of the five persons to whom the law conflict hose duties; that they were all of the same political party; and that there was a vacancy in said board of returning officers which the said Wells, Anderson, Casanave, and Kenner failed and refused to fill as required by law.

Fifthly. Said board of returning officers had no jurisdiction to exercise judicial the returns.

Sixthly. Said returning officers, with a full knowledge that a true and correct compilation of the official statements of votes legally cast November 7, 1876, for presidential electors in the State of Louisiana, showed the following result, to wit:

	Votes.
John McEnery	83, 723
R. C. Wickliffe	83, 859
L. St. Martin.	83, 650
F. P. Poché
A. De Blanc	83, 633

W. A. Seav.	83, 812
R. G. Cobb	83, 530
K. A. Cross	83, 603
W. P. Kellogg	77, 174
J. H. Burch	77, 162
Peter Joseph
L. A. Sheldon.	74, 902
Morris Marks	75, 240
A. B. Levissé	75, 395
O. H. Brewster	75, 479
Oscar Joffrion	75, 618

And that said McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross were duly and lawfully elected electors, illegally and fraudulently changed, altered, and rejected the statements of votes made by the commissioners of election and the returns of supervisors of registration, and declared the following to be the state of the poll, to wit:

John McEnery	8
R. C. Wickliffe 70, 50	9
L. St. Martin. 70. 55.	3
F. Poché
A. De Blanc
W. A. Seay
R. G. Cobb. 70, 49
K. A. Cross
W. P. Kellogg
J. H. Burch 75, 12
Peter Joseph. 74,01
L. A. Sheldon. 74,02
0. H. Brewster
Oscar Joffrion	6

The said returning officers thereupon falsely and fraudulently certified that said Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, Sheldon, Marsh, Levissé, Brewster, and Joffrion were duly elected electors; when the fact was that, omitting the statements of votes illegally withheld by supervisors, those before the returning officers which it was their duty to, but which they did not, canvass and compile showed majorities for McEnery, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross, ranging from 3.459 to 6,405.

5. That said returning officers before making any declaration of the vote for electors offered for a money consideration to certify and declare the due election of the persons who, according to the face of the returns, received a majority of the votes and were duly and properly elected. Failing to find a purchaser, they falsely, corruptly, and fraudulently certified and declared the minority candidates elected, after having first applied for a reward for so doing. Wherefore the undersigned object to the certificate or declaration of the election of electors made by said board of returning officers as utterly void by reason of the fraud and corruption of said board of returning officers in thus corruptly offering said certificates for sale.

The undersigned especially object to counting the vote cast by the said A. B. Levissé for the reason that the State of Louisiana was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States to appoint the said A. B. Levissé an elector, because he was at the time of the appointment of the electors in said State, to wit, on the 7th day of November, 1876, and for a number of days previous and subsequent thereto, holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, to wit, the office of commissioner of the United States circuit court for the district of Louisiana, and his subsequent appointment by the other electors was not only without authority of law, and void, but it was knowingly and fraudulently made for an illegal and fraudulent purpose.

The undersigned especially object to counting the vote cast by the said O. H. Browster for the reason that the State of Louisiana was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States to appoint the said Browster an elector because he was at the time of the appointment of electors of said State, to wit, the 7th day of November, A. D. 1876, and for a number of days previous and subsequent thereto, holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, to wit, the office of surveyor-general of the land office for the land district of the State of Louisiana, and any subsequent appointment of the said Browster as an elector by the other electors was not only without warrant of law and void, but was made knowingly and fraudulently for an illegal and fraudulent purpose.

The undersigned object and insist that under no circumstances can more than six of the eight electoral votes cast in Louisiana for Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler be counted, for the reason that at least two of the persons casting such votes, to wit. A. B. Levissé and O. H. Brewster, were not appointed electors by said State; and they further object especially to the vote given and cast by William P. Kellogg, one of the pretended electors of said State of Louisiana, because the certificate executed by himself as governor of that State is void as to him and creates no presumption and is no evidence in his own favor that he was duly appointed such elector, and there is no other evidence whatever of his having been appointed an elector of said State. And they further object to the said Kellogg that by the constitution of Louisiana he was not entitled to hold both offices, but was disqualified therefrom, and that on the day of casting the vote aforesaid, and on the day of the election for electors, and after those days, he continued to act as governor of the State, and that his vote as elector is null and void.

VIII.

Because the certified lists of the names of the said Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, Sheldon, Mark. Levissé, Brewster, and Joffrion as the duly appointed electors for the State of Louisiana by W. P. Kellogg, claiming to be, but who was not, governor of said State, were falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly made and issued as a part of a conspiracy between the said Kellogg and the said returning officers Wells, Anderson, Casanave, and Kenner, and other persons, to cheat and defraud the said McHenry, Wickliffe, St. Martin, Poché, De Blanc, Seay, Cobb, and Cross of the offices to which they had been duly appointed as aforesaid, and to defraud the State of Louisiana of her right to vote for President and Vice-President according to her own wish as legally expressed by the vote of the people at the election aforesaid.

said.

For which reason the list of names of the said Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, Sheldon, Mark, Levissé, Brewster, and Joffrion as electors, and the votes cast by them are utterly void; in support of which reasons the undersigned refer to the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Louisiana, and among other to the evidence taken at the present session of Congress by the Committee and sub-committees on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, the select committee and the sub-committees of the House of Representatives on the recent election in the State of Luisiana, and the committee of the House of Representatives on the powers, privileges, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the electoral vote, together with papers accompanying said evidence.

Mr. GIBSON. I have the honor to offer objections to the certificates of the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana signed by William Pitt Kellogg on behalf of the State of Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. While the objection is being sent to the desk, the Chair will order the last paper read by the tellers, purporting to be a certificate from the State of Louisiana, to be suppressed from the record of these proceedings, if there be no objection. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the objections presented by the member from the State of Louisiana.

the objections presented by the member from the State of Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON.]

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

The undersigned, Senators and members of the House of Representatives of the United States, object to the certificates and electoral votes of the State of Louisiana signed by William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Mark, A. B. Levissé, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, for the following reasons: First. The government of the State of Louisiana as administered at and prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, and until this time was and is not republican in form.

to the 7th day of November, 1876, and until this time was and is not republican in form.

Second. If the government of the State of Louisiana was and is republican in form, there was no canvass of the votes of the State made on which the certificates of election of the above-named alleged electors were issued.

Third. Any alleged canvass of votes on which the certificates of election of said alleged electors are claimed to be founded was an act of usurpation, was fraudulent and void.

Fourth. The votes cast, in the electoral college of said State, by Oscar Joffrion.

alleged electors are claimed to be founded was an act of usurpation, was fraudulent and void.

Fourth. The votes cast in the electoral college of said State by Oscar Joffrion, William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Morris Marks, are not electoral votes, for that the said Oscar Joffrion, William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, and Morris Marks are and were ineligible by the laws of Louisiana, and were disqualified; for by the constitution of the State of Louisiana, section 117, it is provided that no person shall hold or exercise at the same time more than one office of trust or profit, except that of justice of the peace or notary public; whereas on and prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, and until after the 6th day of December, 1876, W. P. Kellogg was acting de facto governor of said State; Oscar Joffrion was supervisor of registration for the parish of Pointe Coupée, in said State; Morris Marks was a district attorney for one of the districts of said State and candidate for district judge, and was elected at said election; and J. H. Burch was a member of the senate of said State, also a member of the board of control of the State pentientiary, administrator of the deaf and dumb asylum, both salaried officers, and treasurer of the school board of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

Fifth. In addition thereto, said Oscar Joffrion was specially disqualified by the thirteenth section of the act of the Legislature of said State, dated 24th day of July, 1874, which provides that no supervisor of registration shall be eligible for any office at any election when said supervisor of registration shall be eligible for any office at any election when said supervisor of registration in Louisiana, also the testimony taken before the special committee of the House of Representatives to investigate the election in Louisiana, also the testimony taken before the committee of Privileges and Elections of the Senate.

Senator HOWE. I submit some concise objections to counting the vote certified here by John McEnery and his associates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objections will be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read the objections, as follows:

The undersigned respectfully object to the counting of any vote for President and Vice-President of the United States given or purporting to have been given by John McEnery or R. C. Wickliffe, or of either of them, for the reason that there is no evidence whatever that either of said persons has been appointed an elector of said State in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed; and for the further reason that there is evidence conclusive in law that neither of said persons has been appointed to be an elector for the State of Louisiana in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed.

They respectfully object to the reading the recording or the acknowledging of has directed.

They respectfully object to the reading, the recording, or the acknowledging of any commission or license or certificate of appointment or of anthentication signed or purporting to be signed by John McEnery as governor of the State of Louisiana, for the reason that there is no evidence that John McEnery is now or ever was at any time during the year 1876 governor of the State of Louisiana, and for the further reason that there is conclusive evidence that W. P. Kellogg was during the whole of the year 1876 and for several years prior thereto governor of that State; was recognized as such by the judicial and legislative departments of the government of that State and by every department of the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificates from the State of Louisiana? If there be no further objections, all the certificates from that State, and the papers accompanying the same, together with the objections thereto, will now be submitted to the electoral commission for its judgment and decision. The Senate will now retire to their Chamber.

Accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate withdrew.

ORDER OF BUSINESS DURING ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. COX. I rise to a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report back the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Wilson,] being House bill No. 4562, to amend the act in relation to the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions thereon. I am instructed by the committee to offer a simple resolution as a substitute for this bill

Mr. CONGER. Before debate commences upon this report I desire to raise a point of order, that this bill was not referred to the Committee on the Rules, but to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The bill was referred to the Committee on the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, from the Committee on the Rules, reports back with a substitute the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Wilson] to amend the act in re-lation to counting the electoral votes.

Mr. COX. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Rules,

Mr. COX. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Rules, not to the Committee on the Judiciary, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] seems to have supposed. It was my resolution which was sent to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CONGER. I find that I was mistaken.

Mr. COX. My reason for again offering this resolution is—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve any point of order on this proposition as being opposed to the electoral law. The gentleman from New York, as I understand, reports back a bill.

Mr. COX. I report back the bill of the gentleman, with a substitute in the nature of a resolution

Mr. COX. Treport back the bill of the gentleman, with a substitute in the nature of a resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. O, that cannot be done. In the first place, the gentleman has not been authorized to report it back.

Mr. COX. Then I will modify my proposition by merely reporting the resolution from the committee, as they have charge of this sub the resolution from the committee, as they have charge of this subject. The effect is about the same.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to reserve any points of order until we hear what the gentleman's proposition is.

Mr. COX. I was about to say—and I ask attention, for I shall not be very long—that the proper transaction of the business of the House requires that every fresh day should give us all the advantages of that day under the rules. We have but seventeen working days remaining in this session. We have two hundred and forty-one bills on the Private Calendar. We have fifty public bills undisposed of. We have thirty bills which have been made special orders on motions to reconsider. Of the twelve general appropriation bills, only one has become a law; eleven are undisposed of between the two Houses, being liable to come up at any time upon reports of conference combeing liable to come up at any time upon reports of conference committees, &c. We have two outside deficiency bills: one in relation to the public printing and the other in regard to the contingent fund of the House. We have the Mississippi levee bill. We have a bill to pay the interest on the bonds of the District of Columbia. All this business is to be done within the next seventeen days, while at the same time the work of counting the electoral vote must proceed.

This matter was fully discussed the other day. The Judiciary Committee have reported on the subject, and their report, which will be found on page 18 of the RECORD of February 9, declares that—

They are of opinion that the adoption of the resolution would materially aid in carrying out the manifest intent of the provision in that act that while any question is being considered by said commission either House may proceed with its legislative or other business, in order to do which each House may make whatever rules and regulations, consistent with the Constitution, which it may think proper. They would therefore recommend the adoption of the resolution.

It will thus be seen that this proposition has the sanction of the Committee on the Judiciary as well as the Committee on Rules; and I hope that in the interest of the public business it will have the sanction of the House. I call the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it be read first.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, the gentleman from Iowa having reserved all points of order.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the rules of the House be, and are hereby, so amended that pending the count of the electoral vote and when the House is not required to be engaged therein, it shall on assembling each calendar day after recess from the preceding day proceed at and after twelve o'clock m. with its business as though the legislative day had expired by adjournment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to say a word or two on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to suggest one or two words in connection with this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa, if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We think on this side, Mr. Speaker, that it requires an act to interpret the provisions of another act. The electoral bill found us with a certain code of rules and stopped the operation of those rules. I introduced a bill for the purpose of getting operation of those rules. I introduced a bill for the purpose of getting us over the difficulty into which we were put in the work of the House. I think, as my colleagues on this side many of them think, it requires an act to change the operations of the electoral-commission bill. For that reason I have been compelled to raise this question of order against the introduction of the rule just reported by the gentleman from New York, which is calculated, in my judgment, to change the operations of law.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from New York that the law in section 5 provides that while any question is being considered by said commission either House may proceed with its legislative or other business. Now, if I read the resolution of the gentleman from New York rightly, it provides while the electoral count is proceeding, and it seems to me it would not be within the meaning of the provision of the law to proceed with business only while the question is referred to the commission. I trust if the scope of the resolution is more than that, the gentleman will make a modification. I ask the resolution be again read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist on his point of order?

of order?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair upon the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair really does not think it is a point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In a few words, what is the ruling of the Chair? Can a rule of this House amend a law passed by both Houses and signed by the President? My belief is that it cannot. Does the Chair hold otherwise?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, while he does not think it is a point

Mr. HOOKER. It is an argument.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds it is not a point of order, because it is the construction of a law, and he has nothing to do with the construction of the law. The Chair will express it as his opinion that he would feel governed, and be compelled to be governed, by the committee and this House as expressed in the adoption of the rule. The Judiciary Committee is charged with the construction of the law in a measure.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not suppose there will be any serious objection to the resolution presented by the gentleman from New York, if it is understood that in no way, shape, or manner shall it interfere with the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. COX. That is the intent and very meaning of the resolution. Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then will the gentleman from New York allow me to make this modification?

Mr. COX. Read it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That this shall not be interpreted as interfering in any way with the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, or interfering with the report of the joint commission, or the meeting of the two Houses in joint session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest as an additional modification the insertion of the words "when such meetings are necession."

sary."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Of course if the gentleman from New York accepts this as a modification of his resolution, there will I think be no objection to its adoption.

Mr. COX. The rule would supersede the necessity for that, but out of abundant caution, and to save debate, I will accept that proviso if the gentleman will withdraw his opposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then understands that the gentleman from New York accepts it as a modification of his resolution.

Mr. COX. Certainly; and now I demand a vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now ask that the resolution be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the rules of the House be, and are hereby, so amended that, pending the count of the electoral vote, and when the House is not required to be engaged thereon, it shall assemble on each calendar day after recess from the preceding day, proceed at and after twelve o'clock meridian with its business, as though the legislative day had expired by adjournment; and this rule shall not be interpreted as interfering in any way with the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, nor as interfering with the report of the joint commission, nor the meeting of the two Houses in joint session.

Mr. COX. I now demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.
Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I now move the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. HOOKER. And I move to amend that motion, that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOOKER's motion was agreed to; and the motion, as amended, was then adopted.

And then (at eight minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 13, 1877-10 a.m.

The Senate resumed its session.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the Senate take a further recess until twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a re-

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until twelve o'clock.

The Senate re-assembled at twelve o'clock.

Prayer by Rev. Jesse B. Thomas, D. D., of Brooklyn, New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recess having expired, the Senate will come to order. The Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 12, was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4629) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the empropriations for the fixed was adding June 20, 1877, and cies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STATUE OF LIBERTY IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The accompanying memorial is transmitted to Congress at the request of a committee, composed of many distinguished citizens of New York, recently appointed to co-operate with a generous body of French citizens who design to erect in the harbor of New York a colossal statue of "Liberty enlightening the world." Very little is asked of us to do, and I hope that the wishes of the memorialists may receive your very favorable consideration.

EXECUTIVE MANSION. February 9, 1877.

REPORT ON CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

To the Senate and House of Representatives :

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the catalogues and report of the board on behalf of the Executive Departments at the international exhibition of 1876, with their accompanying illustrations.

The labors performed by the members of the board, as evinced by the voluminous mass of information found in the various papers from the officers charged with their preparation have been in the highest degree commendable; and believing that the publication of these papers will form an interesting memorial of the greatest of international exhibitions, and of the centennial anniversary of the Independence of our country, I recommend that they be printed in a suitable form for distribution and preservation.

The letter of the chairman of the board will give to Congress the history of its organization, the laws and executive orders under which it has acted, and the steps which have been taken to preserve the large and instructive collections made, with a view to their forming a part of a national museum should Congress make the necessary appropriations for such a desirable object.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 9, 1877.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Attorney-General, transmitting a full and perfect copy of his letter of instructions to the marshals of the United States dated September of instructions to the marshals of the United States dated September 4, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the Osage ceded lands sold by the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company prior to the 25th February, 1870; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. PATTERSON presented the credentials of David T. Corbin, elected by the Legislature of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of W. E. Comer and 22 other vessel-owners of Detroit, Michigan, praying for an appropriation by Congress for a light-house at Little Traverse, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Detroit, Michigan, praying the repeal of the bankrupt act; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the memorial of the General Assembly of Colorado, praying for a grant of lands in aid of irrigation and reclamation of waste lands in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of W. E. Parker and 57 others, of Emmet County, Michigan, praying for an appropriation by Congress for a light-house at the entrance of Little Traverse Harbor, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LOGAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, which was read and referred to the Committee on Patents as

Whereas the patent laws of the United States have been so devised and construed as to shield and protect great and oppressive monopolies, and to encourage gigantic speculations for the benefit of a few at the expense of the people, while they are totally inadequate to secure to inventors adequate compensation for their invention: Therefore,

Resolved by the house of representatives, (the senate concurring herein.) That the Senators from this State in Congress are instructen and the Representative are requested to use their earnest efforts to secure such amendments to said laws as will provide—

First. That any person may use any patented invention upon executing a bond, in such sum and with such security as the circuit court of the United States for the district in which such use is to be made shall direct and approve, conditioned that he will pay to the owners of such inventions a proper license fee for the use of the same; which bond shall be filed in the office of the clerk of said court.

Second. That in all cases the measure of the license fee shall be such sum as will give the inventor reasonable compensation for his time, labor, ingennity, and expense, which sum shall in no case exceed the fee fixed for such use in contracts made by the inventor or owner; and such license fee shall be the measure of damages in all action and proceedings for the infringment of patents, and no other recovery for damages or profits shall be allowed.

Sneaker of the House of Representatives.

JAMES SHAW, Speaker of the House of Representatives. ANDREW SHUMAN,

Mr. LOGAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in reference to swamp lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 11, concerning Government swamp lands.

Whereas section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1855, entitled "An act to amend the act approved September 23, 1850, entitled 'An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," provides that, upon due proof by the agent of the State or States before the Commissioner of the General Land Office that any land was located subsequent to the 28th day of September, 1850, by warrants or scrip, the State or States should be authorized to locate a quantity of like amount upon any of the public land subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less;

And whereas said law is inoperative on account of the rules and decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, declaring that said indemnity scrip can only be located upon lands subject to entry in the State of Illinois, and of his refusal to further issue said scrip: Therefore,

Be it resolved, (the senate and house concurring therein,) That the Congress of the United States be requested by act or otherwise to instruct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue said scrip and to allow its location upon any of the public lands subject to entry at $1.25 per acre or less, within or without the State or Illinois, and that he be directed to issue the same in eighty and one hundred and sixty acre tracts.

And Price of the Commissioner of the Congress of the States or Illinois, and that he be directed to issue the same in eighty and one hundred and sixty acre tracts.

ANDREW SHUMAN, President of the Senate,

JAMES SHAW, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate February 2, A. D. 1877.

JAMES H. PADDOCK, Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives February 3, 1877.

E. F. DUTTON, Clerk of the Honse of Representatives,

Clerk of the Honse of Representatives.

I, George H. Harlow, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a joint resolution of the thirtieth General Assembly of said State, filed in this office on the 5th day of February, 1877.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and the great seal of state at Springfield this 6th day of February, A. D. 1877.

[SEAL.]

GEO. H. HARLOW, Secretary of State.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, expressing approval of the plan reported by the joint committee of Congress for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Resolution relating to the counting of the electoral vote

1. Resolved, That the senate and bouse of representatives of Massachusetts hereby express their approval of the plan reported by the joint committee of the two Honses of Congress for the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

2. Resolved, That it is desirable that an amendment to the Constitution should be proposed by Congress, clearly prescribing the mode of counting the electoral votes, to the end that this nation may be under a government of laws and not of men.

Notes, to the end that this fatton may be there a government of laws and not of men.

3. Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented a petition of the mayor and common council of the city of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Rappahannock River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KERNAN presented a memorial of Charles A. McLeod and others of Troy, New York, and a memorial of Walter A. Wood and others of Hornit Falls, New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3370) limiting the recovery of damages for the infringement of patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents. Patents.

Mr. EATON presented a resolution of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, approving Captain Howgate's plan for the location of a colony far northward in the arctic regions for the successful exploration of those regions and for the discovery of the north pole, and praying an appropriation of $50,000 to carry out the same; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WINDOM. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Minne sota, asking for an appropriation by Congress for a survey of the Saint Croix and Saint Louis Rivers, with a view to opening a line of navi-gation by that route between the great wheat-fields of the North-west and the lakes. Among other facts stated in the memorial are the following:

The benefits which the Government would derive from the improvement thus contemplated in shortening the distance for the transportation of Government troops and supplies for the Northwestern States, via Lake Superior, Saint Mary's River, and Lake Michigau, more than six hundred miles, thus saving an enormous annual expenditure to the Government, which would soon far exceed the amount required to connect the said waters by canal.

Mr. President, I move that the memorial be referred to the Com-Mr. President, I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and beg to commend it to the careful consideration of that committee. It is believed that the route indicated by the memorialists will be one of great practical value in furnishing an outlet for the products of the vast fertile country lying west of the lakes. All that is now asked is that a sufficient sum be appropriated to survey the route. The expense will be very small in proportion to the value of the information that may be obtained.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

apparatus for the blind; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I present resolutions of the Detroit Board of Trade, praying for the repeal of the bankrupt law. As the resolutions are very brief and express my own views in regard to the necessity of the repeal I ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Con-gress assembled;

At a meeting of the directors of the Board of Trade of Detroit, held this day, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas it is the experience of the manufacturers of this city that the operation of the present bankrupt act is detrimental to the business interests of the country; that it gives immunity in a vast majority of cases to those who become bankrupt through dishonest motives, and that its continued existence is a constant menace to legitimate business: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Board of Trade of Detroit, That we respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to repeal said act.

"Resolved, That in asking the repeal the board acts from a belief in the necessity of immediate relief from the provisions of the present law, and in the hope that Congress can, commencing de now, perfect a law which shall better protect the rights of creditors while providing for the relief of the honestly unfortunate."

Very respectfully,

WM. Y. RUMNEY, Secretary.

REUBEN DAVIS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4556) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi, to report it without amendment.

without amendment.

This bill passed both Houses at the last Congress. It has passed the House of Representatives at this session, but by reason of the inability of the Committee on the Judiciary to meet during this session, it has not received attention until this time. I am advised by the Senator from Mississippi upon my right [Mr. Bruce] that, for reasons personal to himself, he would like very much if the Senate would take up this bill and dispose of it this morning. The delay has been from no fault of his; but some persons, as I understand, have entertained the opinion that he has purposely witheld action upon it. The delay has been by reason of the inability of the Committee on the Judiciary to meet. It is the usual bill for removing the disabilities of persons. I ask for the present consideration of this bill at the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4556) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

THE LEGISLATIVE DAY.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Boutwell] on the 7th instant, in relation to what shall be considered a legislative day, to report it back with amendments. It is desirable that the resolution should pass at this time to avoid the confusion which now exists in the manner of keeping the Journals. I ask that it may be read, and I hope it will receive the consideration of the Senate now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution so as to make it read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That during the sessions of the commission appointed under the act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, each calendar day when legislative business shall have been transacted, shall by each House when in session, be considered a day for legislative purposes, and the Journals of the two Houses shall be so kept and dated.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] on the 26th of January, 1877, to report it with an amendment. I think it will take but a moment, and I ask its consideration by the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported, and the amendment also.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That Rule 43 be so amended as to read, after the word "arrangement," in line 13, as follows:

Motions to adjourn, to take a recess, to proceed to executive business, and to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

The amendment is to strike out the period at the end of the last word, "debate," and insert a semicolon, and add the following: but when a question is not pending a motion to adjourn to a day certain, or that, when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain, or to take a recess, shall be debatable.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This is a rule, as I understand, to govern the action of Senators and the deliberations of this body. I ask whether it is proper to take up the resolution in a hurry and pass it; and whether it had not better lie upon our desks for a day or two in order that we may see what it is. We ought not to bind ourselves by rules until we have duly weighed and considered what those rules are.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to the resolution going over that Senators may consider it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think it ought to be considered now. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over. Mr. SAULSBURY. This is a rule, as I understand, to govern the REPORT ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print extra copies of the report of the Joint Select Committee on Chinese Immigration, have instructed me to report it with a substitute and ask its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Joint Special Committee on Chinese Immigration, with accompanying testimony, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,500 copies shall be for the use of the House of Rep resentatives

RIVER AND HARBOR BILLS.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred a resolution proposing an additional rule referring all bills making appropriations for the improvement of the rivers and harbors to the Committee on Commerce with certain instructions in relation to the same, have instructed me to report it back, accompanied by a substitute for the proposed rule, and to recommend that it be adopted. I will ask that the substitute reported be printed in the RECORD; and I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to consider it to-morrow.

The resolution, as reported from the Committee on Rules, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amend Rule 27 by adding at the end thereof the following:
; and all bills providing appropriations for the improvement of rivers and barbors, and all amendments thereto, shall be referred by the Committee on Commerce to the Secretary of War, who shall make inquiry and report upon the extent, expediency of, and necessity for the proposed improvements; and such report shall be made a part of the report of the committee to the Senate.

RAILROAD LANDS IN KANSAS.

RAILROAD LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HARVEY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1122) to secure the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands, and to repeal the first five sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend its passage. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. If it leads to no debate I shall have no objection. Mr. HARVEY. I think it will lead to no debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I reserve the right to object in case it leads to debate.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for informa-

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not rise to object, but it really seems to me that the bill embraces too many important provisions to be considered in the morning hour. I doubt not that the bill is a proper one or it would not have been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and yet it embraces a great many questions that it seems to me can hardly be considered fully in the morning hour.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me I will state that the substitute reported from the committee has not yet been read, and I think it obviates the objection that occurs to the Senator from Vermont. If he will listen to the reading of the substitute recommended by the committee I think he will not object to the bill

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me it is too large a bill for the morning hour and embraces too many points.

Mr. HARVEY. It is but a brief bill, and I hope the Senator will permit the substitute to be read.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the substitute being read. The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed to issue no more patents to said railroad company for the lands withdrawn from market in consequence of the enactment of the sections of said act hereby repealed, and to withhold from delivery any patents not yet delivered for the same.

Sec. 3. That upon said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successor or successors or assigns, filing with the Secretary of the Interior its acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act, as hereinafter provided, and its execution and delivery of the deeds hereinafter specified, all of said lands so withdrawn and undisposed of shall be restored to market by proclamation of the President of the United States and opened to settlement and purchase under the homestead laws of the United States only.

Sec. 4. That said railroad company, its successor or assigns, shall reconvey, by deed or deeds duly executed, all unsold lands patented to it, in pursuance of the sections hereby repealed, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds of all such lands sold and conveyed prior to the passage of this act; and that if said company shall have any uncompleted contracts for the sale of any portion of such lands, the same shall be forthwith canceled, if the contracting party or parties consent thereto in writing filed with the Secretary of the Interior; and if any portion of the purchase-money has been paid thereon, the same shall be refunded to the contracting party or parties.

Sec. 5. That the acceptance of said company, or its successor or assigns, of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of said co

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not like to object to the bill of the Senator from Kansas, but it really seems to me that the bill is too serious to pass in the morning hour. It involves important considerations and

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator permit me to make a brief statement before entering a formal objection.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. The act of 1866 to which this bill refers granted to the State of Kansas certain lands in aid of certain railroad corpora-The beneficiary named in this bill obtained under that grant tions. The beneficiary named in this bill obtained under that grant about thirty thousand acres of land. A certain portion of this land has been selected, a certain part has been sold; but a great portion remains unselected. The company propose to relinquish absolutely to the Government every acre of land that they received under that grant, on which they themselves have paid about $11,000 in taxes, for which they ask nothing to be refunded, but that these lands may be restored to the public domain, to be entered in accordance with the homestead and pre-emption laws governing the disposition of the the homestead and pre-emption laws governing the disposition of the public lands. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MERRIMON. What consideration is there?

Mr. INGALLS. Absolutely none.

Mr. MERRIMON. There is no consideration moving the railroad company to surrender this vast number of acres of land?

ompany to surrender this vast number of acres of land?

Mr. INGALLS. The railroad company have become satisfied that in consequence of the antagonism and opposition of the people living on those lands that the settlement of the country is retarded and that their local business is prevented from assuming the large proportion that it would reach if these lands were sold to people under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States. They, therefore, propose simply to relinquish absolutely to the Government every acre of these lands, and there certainly can be no objection whatever to it. There is no other question involved. There are no interests at stake which can be affected. The statement that I make is absolutely correct so far as the purpose of the bill is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Kansas whether there was not an obligation on the part of the road to perform certain duties in relation to the transportation of troops and other things which it is proposed that the United States shall now relinquish?

Mr. INGALL'S. There is no proposition of that kind whatever; there is nothing whatever said. There is no claim made upon the Government for any services which have heretofore been rendered or that shall hereafter be rendered. The corporation has become satisthat shall hereafter be rendered. The corporation has become satisfied that their interests will be best subserved by relinquishing this land grant. There is no appropriation required. There is nothing in the bill that looks toward any expenditure of money by the United States Government.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator from Kansas how the substitute differs from the original bill? I notice from a reading of the original bill that it provides for the payment of certain moneys to this expression?

to this company?

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me to explain, I will state that the original Senate bill as introduced did provide for the payment of about $12,000, but the substitute does not so provide. The substitute merely provides for the acceptance by the railroad company of the conditions of the bill, and makes no provision for any such claim. If the bill becomes a law and the relinquishment is accepted by the Government, no such appropriation can be made. can be made.

Mr. MERRIMON. I understand the Senator then to say that the bill appropriates no money at all ?

Mr. INGALLS. None.

Mr. MERRIMON. Does it relinquish the company from any obligation due to the Government?

Mr. INGALLS. From none. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUNIUS J. TURNER-VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. LOGAN. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 561) for the relief of Major Junius J. Turner, have directed me to report it favorably. That bill is one which was vetoed by the President, and afterward, on examination, he sent a letter with the papers stating that his veto was by a misapprehension, and withdrawing his objection as far as he could do so. Now, I suppose it is not important that the bill should be put on its passage now; but it can be taken up at one time as at any other time. The report is that the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go to the Calendar. BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALCORN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1245) for the relief of the estate of George H. Lee, late of Lowndes County, Mississippi, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S No. 1246) for the relief of the estate of U.S. Boon, late of Hinds County, Mississippi, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPENCER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1247) empowering the commissioners of the District of Columbia to buy and sell real estate; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONOVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1248) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right of way through the public lands to the Jackson-ville and Saint Augustine Railroad Company," approved June 7, 1872; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1249) granting the right of way through the public lands to the Golden, Georgetown and Central Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EXPENDITURES OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved. That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate a statement of the appropriations and expenditures, civil and miscellaneous, of the Department of State, from the 4th of March, 1789, to June 30, 1876; and also a statement of appropriations and expenditures on account of foreign intercourse for the same period.

The statements referred to in the resolution are already prepared. They contain a great deal of valuable information which Congress should have.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to. DIGEST ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That of a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General, and of the decisions of the Federal courts, with reference to international law and kindred subjects, prepared at the Department of State, there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and prior years, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Senate bill (S. No. 1103) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Francois Cazeau was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims and an adverse report was made. Parties interested have requested me to have the bill recommitted. I have obtained permission from the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEVENSON] and the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who made the report to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the following report from a committee of conference:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S.

No. 993) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the fol-

A bill (S. No. 1139) to change the time of holding the October term of the United States district court for the district of Nebraska; and A bill (S. No. 1141) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

GLENWOOD CEMETERY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report of the committee of conference just sent from the House be taken up and acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will lay the conference report before the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3741) amending an act incorporating the proprietors of Glenwood Cemetery, having met, after a full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses

RECUSANT WITNESS-CONRAD N. JORDAN.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me yesterday in relation to the recusant witness Conrad N. Jordan.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I have a little bill which I desire to have passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a privileged matter and I think it will not take long.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL, from the Com-mittee on Privileges and Elections, February 12:

Whereas Conrad N. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank, New York, was, on the 7th day of February, 1877, at ten o'clock a. m., duly served with a subperna duces tecum issued by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, commanding him to appear before such committee on the 8th day of the present month to then and there testify in reference to subject-matters under consideration by said committee, being matters relating to the controversy concerning the electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and to bring with him a full and exact statement of the accounts as shown, by the books of said Third National Bank, of Samuel J. Tilden, William T. Pelton, and ABRAM S. HEWITT, from the 1st day of June, 1876, to the 6th day of February, 1877:

And whereas said Conrad N. Jordan has refused to respond to such subpeana, has failed to appear before said committee as required by said subpœna, or to produce such statement of accounts as required: Therefore,

*Resolved*, That an attachment issue forthwith, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him to bring said Conrad N. Jordan forthwith to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt of a process of this body.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, this resolution asks an attachment against a certain party alleged to have been subpœnaed to appear before a subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The resolution cites that the party was duly served with a subpæna duces tecum issued by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. That recitation is not, I apprehend, true in fact. It is true, as I am informed, that a subpœna went out signed by the chairman of that committee; but the records of the committee disclose the fact that no committee was in session at the time that the subpœna was ordered and issued. I am informed that the records of the committee disclose the fact that no committee was in session at the time that the subpœna was ordered and issued. I am informed that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that the records of the committee disclose the fact that no committee was in session at the time that the subpæna was ordered and issued. mittee do not show that there was any meeting of the committee or any meeting of a subcommittee at the time of the issuance of such subpena, but that it was done upon the suggestion of a single member of that committee. Those I understand to be the facts in the case. ber of that committee. Those I understand to be the facts in the case. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, therefore, have never ordered the subpœna to issue which is referred to in the resolution, as I understood. I do not know whether it has been the custom for a single member of a committee to order at his pleasure a subpæna duces stecum for a person to produce any paper, or not. I know not what has been the habit or custom in that committee, or in any other committee; but I apprehend that when a summons is issued it ought invariably to be by action of the committee that orders it to be issued, and that it ought not to rest with every member of a committee at his mere pleasure and option to cause a subpena to issue under the authority of a committee. Therefore I think we ought to pause when we are asked to issue an attachment to produce at the bar of the Senate a witness in response to such a summons. We ought to inquire whether this summons has issued improvidently or not, and if it has so issued, then we ought not to pass a resolution to bring to the bar of the Senate any man, because I hold he is not in contempt of the Senate ate if he disregards a summons which has not been properly issued, but which has been improvidently issued by the mere direction of one member of the committee. I understand this to be the case.

If, therefore, I had no other objection to this resolution than that

If, therefore, I had no other objection to this resolution than that the subpœna was not properly issued, that, to my mind, would be sufficient to control my vote upon the resolution. But I have objections to the resolution of another character. A subpœna duces tecum is proposed to be served upon Conrad N. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank of New York, commanding him "to bring with him the books of the said Third National Bank showing the accounts of Samuel J. Tilden, William T. Pelton, and Abram S. Hewitt, from the 1st day of June, 1876, to the 6th day of February, 1877." I think it would be going a great way for the Senate of the United States, however high its authority, to require the president of a bank or the cashier of a bank to bring before a committee of this body the private accounts of persons dealing with that bank.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask consent that this matter be allowed to proceed until we reach a conclusion, as it is certainly a privileged question.

Mr. WEST. Let the Chair first lay before the Senate the unfinished

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the unfinished business, being the bill (8. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1832, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Oregon moves—

Mr. WEST. O. no.

Whole. The Senator from Oregon moves—
Mr. WEST. O, no.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion?
Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the bill to be laid aside informally subject to call by the chairman of the committee.
Mr. SAULSBURY. If a mere informal postponement of the regular order is proposed, it is I think objectionable. This resolution is a grave matter. When it is proposed to arrest a man and bring him to the bar of the Senate it is a matter that ought not to be considered hastily. If it is proposed to have a mere informal postponement of the regular order, I think it would be better to let the resolution go over. over

Mr. MITCHELL. I cannot consent to let this matter go over at this time

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WEST. I inquire what the parliamentary effect would be upon the unfinished business which is now before the Senate by the adoption of any such order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be displaced.
Mr. WEST. I scarcely can consent to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be displaced if done by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state for the information of the Senator in charge of the railroad bill that it is scarcely possible that the resolution will take up any considerable length of time. It certainly cannot, it seems to me, and I hope he will make no objection to this course. The Senator will see that this is an important matter; that this witness is in contempt according to the resolution submitted, and this witness is in contempt according to the resolution submitted, and certainly action ought to be taken, and that at once.

Mr. WEST. I am quite well aware that action upon this case is much more imperative, perhaps, at the present time than any action upon the bill in regard to railroads or the sinking fund, and I would willingly give way temporarily for such time as might insure the action which the Senator desires; but in doing so the bill that is now under consideration would so lose its place as to have no preference over any other measure at the conclusion of the consideration of the resolution. If that could be assured I would give way as long as resolution. If that could be assured, I would give way as long as necessary to accomplish the Senator's purpose; but I can get no such assurance as that.

assurance as that.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Senator from Oregon suggests truly, and we all appreciate the importance of action upon this matter, a matter that is in the way of the transaction of business. If the Senator from Oregon insists upon his motion, I suggest that it be carried, with the understanding that he will make the motion to take up this railroad bill immediately at its conclusion and that it be understood that it have preference participating the regular order be laid. that is to have preference notwithstanding the regular order be laid aside by a motion.

Mr. WEST. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WRIGHT. If that can be the understanding there will be no difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this understanding

Mr. COOPER. I object.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee objects.
Mr. WEST. Very well. We will take our chances with the railroad

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that, the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, having reported that, having met, after full and free conference, they were unable to agree, it was

Resolved. That the House further insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the Senate and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Henny Walden of Michigan, Mr. John D.C. Arkins of Tennessee, and Mr. Jacob Turney of Pennsylvania be the managers at the same on its part

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Hiester Clymer of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, Mr. James H. Blount of Georgia, and Mr. Eugene Hale of Maine managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4452) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Erastus Wells of Missouri, Mr. William S. Holman of Indiana, and Mr. Charles Foster of Ohio managers at the same on its part.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1222) to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for the public printing and binding for the current fiscal year, disagreed to by the Senate and further insisted upon by the House.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM.

Resolved. That the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

RECUSANT WITNESS-CONRAD N. JORDAN.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution. reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by Mr. MITCHELL, February 12:

Mr. President, I am willing to answer any proper question put to me by the Senator from Delaware or by any other Senator; but I do not think I ought to be drawn into the discussion of a question here that is in my judgment neither proper nor rele-It appears that the subpœna was issued by order of the Comvant. It appears that the subpona was issued by order of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it is immaterial to inquire whether it was issued at the instance of this particular Senator or that particular Senator. It is enough for the Senate to know, and that the record shows, that a subpona was issued by order of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, signed by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him to subpona Conrad N. Jordan, and that that authorize regular on its face, issued as it states on its and that that subpœna, regular on its face, issued as it states on its face by order of the committee, signed by the chairman of the committee, was at ten o'clock on the forenoon of the 7th day of the presmittee, was at ten o'clock on the forenoon of the 7th day of the present month duly and regularly served on Conrad N. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank of New York, commanding him to appear before the committee on the 8th day of the present month. It furthermore appears that, even had there been a question at any time in regard to the formality of the issuance of the subpena, by a vote of that committee the acting chairman has been instructed to present for the consideration of the Senate the resolution now before it.

The honorable Senator from Delaware on yesterday and again today has seen proper to refer to what took place in the committee, and day has seen proper to refer to what took place in the committee, and he even went so far as to state on yesterday that the resolution now pending before the committee was not directed by the whole of the committee, a matter which I hardly think he had authority to state. But conceding that it was proper to state it, I beg to say that the vote by which the acting chairman of that committee was authorized to present this resolution for the consideration of the Senate was a unanimous vote, that there was not a dissenting vote in the com-

Mr. SARGENT. At a full meeting.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was no vote against the resolution, and, as suggested by the Senator from California, it was a full meeting of the committee. The honorable Senator from Delaware also stated to-day, if I gathered his remarks rightly, that this subpena was issued by a subcommittee. In this he is mistaken. The subpena, as appears from the record now in my hands, is a subpena issued by order of the committee and concludes as follows: of the committee, and concludes as follows:

And concludes as follows:

Hereof fail not as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties as may be in such cases provided.

To John R. French, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, to serve and return.

Given under my hand by order of the committee, the sixth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, seven.

O. P. MORTON,

Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. COOPER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Oregon if he wishes to be understood as saying that this resolution now before the Senate was reported by a unanimous vote of the committee and that all the members of the committee were present.

Mr. MTCHELL. I undertake to say this—
Mr. COOPER. That all of the members of the committee were

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; I have not said so, nor I do not mean to say so; but I do mean to say it was not at a meeting of any subcommittee, but at a meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the whole committee. What I mean to say is that it was a meeting regularly called, and that at that meeting there were present a matrix appears of the whole committee and as my friend from regularly called, and that at that meeting there were present a majority, a quorum, of the whole committee, and, as my friend from Delaware [Mr. Saulsbury] has undertaken to refer to what took place in committee, I take the liberty of saying that upon the vote authorizing the acting chairman of the committee to report this resolution to the Senate, there was no dissenting voice. The honorable Senator from Delaware and the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] were both present, as I remember.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Oregon is mistaken. I was not

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg pardon then. The Senator from Delaware,

I am very certain, was present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very certain the Senator from Delaware was not present, but came in after the resolution had passed. I was informed of it afterward, when the vote had been taken.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I am wrong, of course I stand corrected. I am always willing to be corrected if I am wrong, but I will state that there was a quorum of the full committee there, that democrats as well as republicans were there, and that on the vote authorizing the well as republicans were there, and that on the vote authorizing the acting chairman of the committee to present this resolution to the Senate there was no dissenting vote. If the Senator says he was not there, of course I stand corrected so far as that is concerned.

Mr. President, I must confess to some surprise that an objection should be interposed here against the adoption of this resolution. What are the facts? A committee of this body, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, instructed by a vote of the Senate on the very first or second day of the present session to inquire into the matter of presidential electors and also by a special resolution conferring ter of presidential electors, and also by a special resolution conferring upon that committee power, and directing them specially, to inquire into the matter of the electoral controversy in the State of Oregon, has proceeded with that inquiry, has taken testimony, a mass, of it; and before concluding its inquiry it issues a subpœna, directed to the Sergeant-at Arms, commanding him to summon a witness to attend before the committee at a day certain, in order to testify in relation to certain things, the subject-matter of which is under investigation by that committee. That subpæna is duly served upon the witness and that witness treats that service and that process with contempt, never so much as offering either to the committee, to the Sergeant-at-Arms who served the process, or to the Senate any kind of excuse for his failure. Upon his failure to appear the committee that issued the process, by a unanimous vote of a quorum, directs its acting chairman to present that matter to the Senate, and upon being presented to the Senate we are met with an objection, with a protest, by the honorable Senator from Delaware. Why? What is the objection, aside from the intimation given that this subpona was improvidently issued, and which objection is answered by the subpæna itself, by the record before the Senate?

It appears from this resolution that this subpœna was a subpæna and, so far as the disbursements are concerned, to whom disbursements, and, so far as the disbursements are concerned, to whom disbursements, and, so far as the disbursements are concerned, to whom disbursed and for what purpose, of Samuel J. Tilden, W. T. Pelton, and Mr. HEWITT, the chairman of the national democratic committee. In view of the testimony already taken in reference to the use of money in Oregon, is that not a proper inquiry? Will my democratic friends say that We have been told from the time the late presidential campaign was inaugurated that the democratic party was a reform party. It is heralded all over the land to-day, from one end to the other, by democratic Representatives and democratic investigation committees, that all the frauds that have been perpetrated in connection with the re-cent presidential election have been perpetrated by the republican party, by the republican managers, and that the democratic party, the democratic managers, and democratic candidates were the pure persons, standing out pure and undefiled before the nation and the world; that they ought not to be charged with any improper action, with any improper use of money in connection with the elections or in with any improper use of money in connection with the elections or in connection with electoral controversies going on in the States of Louisiana, Florida, Oregon, and South Carolina.

The investigation has shown already, in reference to the electoral controversy in Oregon, that no less than $15,380 in money was placed to the credit of a banking firm in Salem, Oregon, Ladd & Bush, all for the purpose of being used, as testified to by a leading democrat from Oregon, Mr. Asahel Bush, in connection with the controversy going on in that State between Watts, the republican candidate, and Cronin, the democratic candidate. It appears from the testimony already taken that the sum of $8,000 in money was, on the 1st day of December last, deposited by one Erwin Davis with Kountze Brothers, bankers, No. 12 Wall street, to the credit of one J. N. H. Patrick; and it further appears from that same testimony that under the direcit further appears from that same testimony that under the direction of the political managers in the State of New York, W. T. Pelton and others, this same J. N. H. Patrick, who resides at Omaha, Nebraska, was employed to proceed to the State of Oregon there to look after the electoral vote. It further appears that he did proceed to the State of Oregon, that dispatches were forwarded to the gov-ernor of the State shortly after he left Omaha, stating to the governor that a man had been sent to see him and to delay action until he arrived, and telling the governor of that State when he would arrive; arrived, and telling the governor of that state when he would arrive; and that he did arrive there in Oregon on the 27th of November; that there he held a secret conference with the leading managers of the party in that State; and that it was there stipulated that certain moneys should be paid to certain parties, $3,000 in gold coin to one firm, ostensibly as lawyers, to argue the case, but in fact for the purpose of influencing the columns of the leading newspaper in the State; one member of the firm, W. Lair Hill, being the editor of that paper. And the very purpose and object, as appears from the testimony, in the case of the employment of the firm, was in order that any action taken by Governor Grover in the premises might not meet with the indignation that otherwise might fall upon it and upon him from the people of that State in case the columns of this leading so-called maignation that otherwise might tail upon that the tail upon the people of that State in case the columns of this leading so-called republican newspaper were not toned down to a tacit acquiescence in such action as the governor might take in pursuance of this scheme. And not only that, Mr. President, but it appears that this man Patrick, after having fixed up matters in Oregon, returned to San Francisco, and on the 6th day of December—the very day on which the electoral vote was cast in Oregon—draws his check in favor of Wells, Fargo & Co., on Kountze Brothers, No. 12 Wall street, New York, for the sum of $3,000, the amount deposited in the bank of Kountze Brothers by this man Erwin Davis; that he sells that draft to Wells, Fargo & Co. for its gold value, being $7,380; that he deposited that amount in the Loudon and San Francisco Bank of San Francisco, to the credit of—whom? To the credit of Ladd & Bush, bankers, Salem, Oregon; and to be used, as the witnesses state, in connection with this electoral controversy in Oregon. Not only so, but it further appears that on the 6th day of December, 1876, at the instance of W. T. Pelton, $8,000 was telegraphed through the banking firm of Martin & Runyon, Wall street, New York, to Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon, to be used in this same identical controversy in regard to the electoral vote.

Now, then, these developments having been made, conclusively showing at least very directly if not cancellasively showing that all

Now, then, these developments having been made, conclusively showing, at least very directly if not conclusively showing, that all this money so put up was raised for this purpose in Oregon and came directly from the head of the great democratic party in this nation to-day. It appears, furthermore, that the $3,000 furnished by Martin & Runyon was manipulated through this identical man Conrad tin & Runyon was manipulated through this identical man Conrad N. Jordan, the cashier of the Third National Bank, New York; that he furnished the money at the instance of Pelton, which enabled Martin & Runyon to place it to the credit of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, on the 6th day of December last. Not only so, but it appears from the testimony that the capital of the Third National Bank is $1,000,000; that Samuel J. Tilden is one of the directors of that bank, and that Samuel J. Tilden owns $68,000 of the $1,000,000 of stock in the bank.

With these developments, showing that this conspiracy in relation

With these developments, showing that this conspiracy in relation to the Oregon electoral vote had its origin at the very headquarters of the democratic party in New York City, the committee thought it was no more than right under the circumstances that we should call upon Mr. Jordan to produce the bank accounts of Mr. Tilden, of Mr. Pelton, and of Mr. Hewitt. Therefore the subpœna was issued and served, and the process of the Senate has been treated with contempt. If these accounts are all right, if there has been no improper use If these accounts are all right, if there has been no improper use of money by these head managers, and if the accounts will show nothing of the kind, why the objection? Why did Conrad N. Jordan refuse to obey the process of this body, or why do our democratic friends on the other side of this Chamber object to this resolution compelling him to obey the process of this body? That is what I want to know. Is there any reason or excuse why a witness duly subpænaed by one of the committees of the Senate to attend before that committee to give testimony in reference to a matter properly before the committee and under consideration by that committee should not be compelled to obey the process that has been issued? I want to know by a yea and nay vote of the Senate whether there is any Senator who is willing to place himself upon record against the right and the duty of the Senate of the United States compelling obedience to its own process.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, as one of the members of this body and as one of the members of the committee I desire to inquire as to the laws regulating a subpeena, and whether in point of fact we can arrest this man and bring him here. I may not have the privilege of saying whether the question was raised in committee or that this matter came out whether it was sufficient to authorize the arrest of a man for disobeying the process when a single member of the committee for disobeying the process when a single member of the committee had taken upon himself the responsibility, without consulting the committee at all, to issue a subpœna. It may very well be that the recital in the resolution, with the injunction upon the members of the committee not to say anything about it, would answer the purpose; but surely when the man is arrested he will have a right to know whether this was a legally authorized subpœna or not. I desire to know it for that purpose as well as to guide my action now because to know it for that purpose as well as to guide my action now, because I think, if he or anybody else would have a right to inquire by calling upon the members of the committee, or even the chairman of the sub committee who presents the resolution, that he would not be able to show whether this subpœna was ever known to any members of this committee except one person until the time when this resolution was brought in. That is the only point I desire to have settled. I have thought that it was not a very wise practice that a member of a committee should have the power on his own motion to subpœna a person and then call on the committee to enforce the subpæna afterward when they had never previously known anything about it. That question, I suppose, would arise in this case. I suppose it would turn out from what occurred in committee that this was not a subpena properly issued, and that he would not be compelled to obey, knowing all the facts

I should hardly have risen to say this much, although I desire to have that question settled and settled with the facts fairly stated as they exist, but the Senator who presented the resolution took occathey exist, but the Senator who presented the resolution took occasion to go into the testimony somewhat, as brought out in the investigations of the committee before the proofs are closed and before we have, by very many pages, the evidence printed, and he states that certain things appear, that fifteen thousand and odd dollars was placed to the credit of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, and he insinuated that it was with a view to a corrupt use of that money.

Now I ask the attention of the Senate, in justice to men who have no hearing here and to men who cannot have access to this testimony, for it is not all yet printed and the proof is not even closed, while I state just what there is about this matter, and I appeal to the chair.

state just what there is about this matter, and I appeal to the chairman of the subcommittee to know if I do not state the matter fairly and truly in reference to those who are absent.

These are the facts, I think, in brief as developed by the committee: that soon after the ineligibility of Mr. Watts was discovered in Oregon and promulgated through the press, as appears by the testimony of Mr. Bellinger and Mr. Kelly, men called by the committee, they had a consultation in reference to the effect of this ineligibility. They had a consultation in reference to the effect of this ineligibility. They satisfied themselves that Mr. Watts was ineligible; that he was not entitled to a certificate, not being a duly elected elector, for the Constitution said that he was not eligible to be appointed an elector in so many words. Thereupon, as the evidence discloses, Mr. Bellinger and others consulted together. Mr. Bellinger was called before the committee. I vouch for his character, and I think the Senator from Oregon will. Mr. Bellinger stated that they thought there might be suits brought by their political opponents, by mandamus or otherwise, to compel the governor to give Watts a certificate. They thought that they themselves might want to bring suit in the courts of Orethat they themselves might want to bring suit in the courts of Oregon with reference to enforcing what they claimed to be the law. Upon that consultation, held along toward the latter part of Novem-Upon that consultation, held along toward the latter part of November, inasmuch as they expected litigation in the courts of Oregon, and I only state what the witnesses said, and as these suits would appear before, I doubt not, an honest judge but a republican judge, they thought it advisable in prosecuting or defending litigation about this matter that they should employ a leading firm in Portland, as they stated, known as Hill, Durham & Thompson, a republican firm. Negotiations were had with that firm. Mr. Bellinger testified that the firm wanted a fee of $5,000 to be retained to prosecute or defend in regard to this electoral vote in the courts of Oregon. Finally they consented to receive a retainer fee of $3,000, and for that sum they agreed to act as counsel in prosecuting or defending litigation growing out of this question. Thereupon, as Mr. Bellinger testified, they began to cast around to see how they could raise this amount of money. They found that while some men would subscribe they had not the They found that while some men would subscribe they had not the means to pay the fee, and it was suggested that the national commit-tee ought to bear the expense of the investigation.

I am endeavoring to state, not in the words of the witnesses, but to give the very substance of the investigation before the committee without any words of my own. Mr. Patrick arrived there. He had been sent out by Mr. Miller, of Omaha, a member of the national committee. These gentlemen consulted him and said they had made this arrangement to retain this firm. Mr. Patrick approved it. They talked with him in reference to raising a fund to defray the expenses of that retainer and this litigation. They testified that they thought they ought to have assurances from the national committee that if they entered into this litigation they would be indemnified against the necessary and proper expenses to the amount of $10,000. They testified that they telegraphed to W. T. Pelton if they could rely upon receiving that amount, and that they got a flat refusal. There had been another telegram, as testified by Patrick, in cipher, but which in been another telegram, as testified by Patrick, in cipher, but which in English was indorsed by Senator Kelly, stating the fact that they had engaged to employ this firm; that they only wanted what would be necessary for the purpose of this litigation, and would return all that was over the legitimate expenses of this matter in trying to enforce what they believed to be the law; and they then received in answer to the telegram which Mr. Kelly endorsed assurances that the national committee would in some form or other indemnify them to the amount of $8,000, they having stated that they would return all that was not used for the purpose of litigation. The evidence shows that Patrick, being a man of property and means, kept a banking account with Kountze Brothers, of New York. There was deposited by a Mr. Erwin Davis, who the proof shows was a partner of Patrick in New York, to the order of Patrick with Kountze Brothers on the 1st day of December $8,000. Mr. Patrick left Portland by the steamer on the morning of the 2d, and when the telegram came that the amount was there, there was nobody to draw it; and inasmuch as they wanted to secure this fund, inasmuch as Patrick could not use the money which had been deposited to his credit by Davis for that purpose, there was an effort made to put $8,000 to the credit of Ladd & Bush, bankers at Salem, through the firm of Martin & Runyon and Charles Dimon. I ask attention to this fact in order that it may be the national committee would in some form or other indemnify them Charles Dimon. I ask attention to this fact in order that it may be seen whether there ever was $15,000 or any such sum attempted to be used or in fact at the disposal of anybody there. This deposit was made with Martin & Runyon on the 6th of December.

made with Martin & Runyon on the 6th of December.

Now, mark what had been done before that time. Mr. Kelly, who sits in this Cnamber, and Mr. Bellinger, the chairman of the democratic state committee, and other responsible men of Portland and Salem, having been assured by Patrick that they should be indemnified to the amount of $3,000, gave their note to Ladd & Bush. They made their note at thirty days to Ladd & Bush, if I recollect the time, for $3,000. Ladd & Bush said they would advance on that note what was needed for this purpose, and did advance $3,000 on the note for the purpose of paying to this firm of lawyers at Portland what was paid to them. Ladd & Bush also advanced $200 to send to a distant part of the State for Mr. Laswell, one of the democratic electors, they not being sure which would be the highest on the ticket, and wanting them all to be there.

So much for that. That happened on the 6th. The money in New York with Martin & Runyon was telegraphed on the 6th to the credit of Ladd & Bush. Was that money ever brought into the account? Listen a moment. On the morning of the 6th Patrick reached San Francisco. He there learned by telegrams that money had been deposited to his credit with Kountze Brothers, his bankers, in New York. Thereupon, as the proof is shown by another witness, Griswold, he drew his check on Kountze Brothers for $3,000 and went to Wells & Fargo's Express Company, who knew him, in company with this gentleman and they gave him its worth in company with wold, he drew his check on Kountze Brothers for $3,000 and went to Wells & Fargo's Express Company, who knew him, in company with this gentleman, and they gave him its worth in coin, being $7,380. On that day, the 6th of December, he caused to be telegraphed to Ladd & Bush, Salem, that there was deposited $7,380 to the credit of Ladd & Bush in the London and San Francisco Bank, San Francisco, by him. There is one fund of $3,000 talked about by the Senator. The evidence shows, and I call the Senator's attention to it for that much is printed at page 296, what became of the other $8,000 which made up the $16,000 in currency or something over $15,000 in gold. I read from the testimony of Mr. Bush, the banker, whom the committee brought from Salem to testify, and it had been testified to before by Mr. Martin and by Mr. Runyon and by Dimon. The $8,000 deposited with Martin & Runyon to be used there was sent back to them on the 11th of December. Ladd & Bush telegraphed Dimon on the 9th that they would return the $8,000 that had been deposited. On the 9th Ladd & Bush had been informed that the $8,000 was turned into the account at San Francisco to their credit for the purturned into the account at San Francisco to their credit for the purpose which these parties wanted to use it for. Mr. Bush, whose evidence is before me, says in these words, and it was proved before that in testimony taken at an earlier day from Martin and Runyon, that Mr. Dimon returned to them the check for $7,997.25, being the $8,000 less the cost of the telegrams that he paid, and that ended that transaction.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, admitting all that to be true, it does not contradict anything I have said; and if the swears in this language:

Question. Was this $8,000 that was placed to your credit in New York by Dimon starmed or retained by you?

Answer. By Runyon & Martin?

Q. By Runyon & Martin.

A. It was returned to Runyon & Martin.

Q. So that you did not use in any way the $8,000 that Runyon & Martin deposited?

A. No, sir; it was returned to them.

Q. You telegraphed Dimon to return it to them, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

That telegram is in evidence, but I cannot turn to it without an index now.

Q. You did not receive, then, as I understand you, to retain, any funds from Dimon for this purpose at all ?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nor from Runyon & Martin either † A. No, sir. Q. Neither one nor the other † A. No air

Q. Neither one nor the other?
A. No, sir.
Q. You directed Dimon to return the money to Runyon?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that all you have had by way of funds or security for funds about this transaction was what was deposited in the London and San Francisco Bank at San Francisco and this note—

Being the one I referred to-that these gentlemen gave you?

A. Yes, sir; no other.

Q. And those you hold? The note and the funds are to your credit there, and that is all the funds you have had claimed to be in any way at your disposal for this business in Oregon?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The note was left with you before you received any advice of the deposit at San Francisco, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before the Kelly note?

A. I should say two or three days.

Therefore, here is one of these funds of $8,000 that figure in this evidence and which in the early part of it was proved to have been returned, and proved also by Bush later to have been returned. He proved that he directed it to be returned, because all that was wanted there was $8,000.

Now a word about the note. It is true Mr. Bellinger swears that he understands that the fund at San Francisco was to make good from the national committee what they had really raised on their note, and the parties who deposited the funds at San Francisco say to him that there is no claim upon that fund at all. In the face of this statement and the statement of the Senator rrom Oregon in reference to this evidence, as he and I have heard it given all through, is there any pretense that the people in Oregon ever wanted any more than a fund of $8,000 to indemnify for this litigation, or that the committee in New York ever consented to give any more? They got $8,000 on the check or draft which Patrick drew on his bankers, Kountze Brothers, and the moment that was placed to the credit of Ladd & Bush the other $8,000 placed to their credit by Martin & Runyon with Dimon was returned, as Dimon swears he drew his check on his bank and handed it to Martin & Runyon and they collected it; and that ended the transaction.

I think that is all that any fair-minded man will see in this transaction when he gets this evidence together and looks at it all through, looking at it if you please with a suspicious mind. Any one will find that that was all that the Oregon people wanted, and will find that that that was all that the Oregon people wanted, and will find that the witnesses swear there never was a word, hint, or suggestion about using money for any purpose except for these expenses, and they never did use any except the $3,000 when those suits were commenced for the employment of a law firm and $200 for the payment of the expenses of Laswell, which made $3,200, except the $3,000 paid to Cronin. What does that show ?

It appears that after Cronin was made messenger-and they all swear there had been no suggestion before—the question came up, in the way they expressed themselves, about his expenses; that there would be duplicate returns here and the Government could not pay would be duplicate returns here and the Government could not pay both; and I believe has not practically paid either, as the matter is still undetermined. They said they ought to pay his expenses. They spoke about it, and he said if they paid him anything they must pay him $3,000; that he had to leave litigation and other business, and that he should have that amount if anything, as stated, or otherwise he would stay at home, or something of that kind; and they did agree to pay him $3,000 out of this fund which was deposited. Then they got Ladd & Bush to advance them $3,000 more. They all swear that no other penny was ever used; that they never intended to use any other money; and that there was no suggestion that they would need any such sum for the purpose of litigation after his appointment; that such sum for the purpose of litigation after his appointment; that they would need any such sum for the purpose of litigation after his appointment; that they felt they ought to pay it and did pay it, and they did not expect that the national committee would object to that.

I make this brief statement, and I do not ask Senators to take it upon my say so. When they get this evidence and read it, they will see that there was not a word or intimation that they would ever use any money for any correct purpose; that they simply got the $8,000.

use any money for any corrupt purpose; that they simply got the $8,000 with the promise to return what was not used for legitimate purposes; and that there was never any suggestion that they were to use it for and that there was never any suggestion that they were to use it for any improper purpose.

At San Francisco, as the evidence shows, there were able men who sent up briefs showing, as they thought the law to be, that Cronin was elected and that the other man was not. Telegrams went from this side. Mr. Hoadly's opinion was sent. Authorities were telegraphed to the governor from this side. I say, and I say it with pleasure, that when this is all scrutinized, it will turn out that whether Governor Grover, as appears by his evidence given on the stand, was in error or not about the law, he intended to do and did do, as he swears, what he then thought was the law and what he still thinks is the law. He may be in error; I say nothing about that; but instead of there being any bribery, any corrupt intent, any intent to do anything, it will appear by the proof that the only idea was if Cronin were by the laws of Oregon entitled to that certificate he should have it, and if they were satisfied that he should have it they desired to

Mr. President, I have said this much, stepping in the Chamber with no idea to discuss the Oregon case and with no intent in what I have said to give more than the facts derived from the evidence. There never was but one sum used, and there was this negotiation about two sums by telegraph because the one could not be used after Patrick left Portland, and he told them that he would indemnify them the amount they had expended for counsel and litigation. The moment it was telegraphed that he had realized on that fund in San Francisco and placed its value in coin, $7,380, to the credit of Ladd & Bush, the other money was returned to this firm of Martin & Run-

As to the idea that Mr. Tilden's bank account will show anything wrong I have not the slightest belief or suspicion. I have throughout this investigation, so far as I could as a minority man, aided in opening every door to see if there was corruption anywhere. The opening every door to see if there was corruption anywhere. The committee have examined Mr. Bellinger, the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. Kelly,] and the men who made this transaction. Bellinger testifies frankly that, Mr. Patrick having said that he would indemnify them the moment they learned that this fund was deposited in San Francisco to the credit of Ladd & Bush, which as they understood was to pay the advance on their note, and so Ladd & Bush understood it, this note was executed. If their understanding is right, Mr. Bellinger, Mr. Kelly, and those gentlemen will not be out of nocket, as they ought not to be, for the expenses in a matter which of pocket, as they ought not to be, for the expenses in a matter which the national committee should properly take charge of, not to bribe anybody, not to influence anybody by money or anything of that kind, but to litigate a legal question in which they believed they were right and which they desired to litigate in the courts of Oregon, if there should be any necessity for doing so. That is all that was used or thought of being used. That is all the money they ever had any control of or that was ever got for this purpose.

I thought I should say this much because the charge and insinua-

I thought I should say this much because the charge and insinuation go out without the evidence yet being promulgated, and I say again I state my judgment, after scrutinizing the evidence, that the most uncharitable man who will scrutinize it will say that all the money they ever got or that they were to get, whether raised in the State or from the national committee, was with the idea that they should use it for no purpose except to maintain what they believed were their legal rights in the courts of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I did not intend to be drawn into any discussion at this time in regard to the question as to just how much money was used in the State of Oregon with reference to this electoral matter.

electoral matter.

Mr. KERNAN. Will my friend allow me a moment?
Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator would not allow me to interrupt I was only to ask the Senator if he did not mention

Mr. KERNAN. I was only to ask the Senator if he did not mention that they spent $15,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will come to that. I said over $15,000 had Mr. MITCHELL. I will come to that. I said over $15,000 had been placed to the credit of parties in Oregon. I shall repeat it. I should have said nothing in fact in reference to this matter now had it not been that I felt I was compelled to do it in answer to the opposition made by the Senator from Delaware to the passage of this resolution. As I said in what I did say, I did not undertake to go into the question fully as to how much money had been used improperly or otherwise in the State of Oregon in connection with this matter or as to all the persons who had received money improperly or otherwise in connection with the matter. I did, however, take or otherwise in connection with the matter. I did, however, take occasion to say, as a justification for the issuance of this subpoena by the Committee on Privileges and Elections calling upon Mr. Jordan for these accounts, that it had been testified to by a leading democrat of Oregon that over $15,000 in money had been put up at different points and in different banks for the purpose of being used in conmeetion with this matter.

Mr. KELLY. I should like to know what witness testified that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will answer my colleague that one Asahel Bush, a banker of Salem, Oregon, and a leading democrat, as my colleague will admit, testified as I shall read.

Mr. KELLY. On what page?

Mr. MITCHELL. On page 291 of the printed testimony, from which I now read:

By Mr. KERNAN:

By Mr. Kernan:

Question. Do you remember whom the $3,000 check was payable to? Was it payable to this firm of lawyers?

Answer. I think it was payable to Senator Kelly, but I am not certain. [To Senator Kelly.] Was it payable to you?

Mr. Kelly.] Was it payable to you?

Mr. Kelly. No; to Hill, Durham & Thompson.

The Witness. It was payable to Hill, Durham & Thompson.

Q. (By Mr. Kernan.) Your check on Ladd & Tilton there?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

By Mr. MITCHELL:
Q. What date was that check drawn; do you know!
A. I do not.
Mr. Kelly. The 6th.
The Witness. It was on the 6th.
Q. (By Mr. Mitchell.) What other checks were drawn!
A. We drew for $3,000 in favor of Bellinger, if I do not mistake the use of the cipher; $2.800 was drawn, and $200 was afterward added.
Q. Did you deliver that money to Mr. Bellinger!
A. I telegraphed it to him—to Ladd & Tilton. I telegraphed him $2,800. I supposed it was $3,000; but I had used the wrong word in the cipher. Afterward $200 was placed there to his credit.

By Mr. Kernay.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. You sent $2,800 by mistake ! A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

And now I call the attention of my colleague, as these are answers made by this witness in his presence:

Q. Then, as I understand you, there was $16,000 in all, or nearly that, placed to your credit on or about the 6th of December—$3,000 in New York, and seven thousand and some odd hundreds in the London and San Francisco Bank, (limited.) at San Francisco ?

A. Yes; a little more than $15,000.
Q. And you were advised, or understood, that each of these amounts was for use in some way in reference to the Oregon matter—about attorneys, or something?

A. Well, all I understood about it was from Mr. Bellinger—yes.

That is what I referred to in my opening statement that it appeared from the testimony in this case that over $15,000 had been placed to the credit of Ladd & Bush at different points to be used in connection with this matter.

Mr. KELLY rose.
Mr. MITCHELL. I will state before my colleague interrupts me, because I do not wish to misrepresent anybody and I am not going to do that, in response to what has been stated by the Senator from New York, [Mr. Kernan,] that it does appear from the testimony of Bush and of Runyon that the one eight-thousand-dollar amount sent through Martin & Runyon was afterward telegraphed back. That is all true so far as that is concerned, but that does not conflict with the statement I made in the first place and which I repeat upon the authority of the testimony of Asahel Bush, that for the purpose of meeting expenses whether proper or improper in the State of Oregon in connection with this matter there was at one time as much as $15,000 up at different points.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator will pardon me. I rose merely because I omitted to state that on the 9th as soon as they knew it they directed one $8,000 to be handed back and it was handed back.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I said in the remarks I made before, I do not undertake to state just how much money was used in Oregon and to whom paid. I did refer to the fact that $3,000 was paid to the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson and that the testimony shows as I believe it does conclusively that that amount never would have been paid to that firm had it not been for the fact that one member of the firm, Mr. Hill, is the editor of the leading republican paper so-called of that State and that the expectation of the democratic managers in paying that amount to these lawyers as testified to by Sena-tor Kelly, Bellinger, and others, was that the tone of that paper would be modified into an acquiescence if not an open defense of whatever might be done by Governor Grover in reference to this matthat I did not undertake to state all the different places where money had been distributed in connection with this Oregon electoral controversy, I omitted to state that which he has supplied, namely, that $3,000 in gold coin of this amount had been paid to the democratic elector E. A. Cronin, paid to him ostensibly to cover his expenses to Washington and back when the fact is that $600 would have more than covered all his expenses to Washington and return. What is the use in discussing this matter to say that there was no improper use of money in Oregon? Here is a dispatch for instance to Mr. Patrick from this same man, Davis, who deposited $8,000 to the credit of Patrick on the 1st day of December with Kountze Brothers, No. 12 Wall street, in which he says by telegraph to Mr. Patrick as follows:

NEW YORK, November 27, 1876.

J. N. H. PATRICK :

Secure your point at all hazards; communicate with me immediately, giving prospects.

What is the use of saying that money was not improperly used when the very man who put up $3,000 to be used in connection with the controversy telegraphs to the man who had been sent out to carry into execution the scheme and manipulate the matter "to secure his point at all hazards; to communicate with him immediately, giving prospects?" In addition to all that it, is conceded upon this floor that the democratic elector, Mr. Cronin, received of this money so raised the sum of $3,000 in gold coin, and furthermore it appears from the testimony conclusively, and is not denied, that Mr. Cronin for some considerable time after the election, and after this question as to the eligibility of Watts had been raised and discussed in Oregon, declared repeatedly and publicly that he would not accept a certificate if Goverrepeatency and publicly that he would not accept a certificate it covernor Grover should issue one to him; that he had been defeated at the polls by a majority of nearly eleven hundred, and that he would not accept or act under any certificate that Governor Grover might see proper to issue; and when it appears furthermore by that same testimony that when this man Patrick arrived in Oregon he sought through the democratic managers there an interview with Mr. Cronin and that there and then he told Mr. Cronin that it was an important matter to be an elector and to east the vote for President and Vice. matter to be an elector and to cast the vote for President and Vice-President; that he, Patrick, had understood that he, Cronin, had said resident; that he, Patrick, had understood that he, Cronin, had said he would not act under a certificate provided Governor Grover should issue him one, and that Patrick then volunteered to state to Mr. Cronin that if Mr. Tilden was elected President of the United States he would give Cronin anything in his power to give.

This is Mr. Cronin's own testimony. It appears from Mr. Cronin's statement, it is true, that Mr. Patrick suggested to him that he understood he had stated he would not act under this certificate and Cronin said that he had so stated repeatedly: but he had changed his mind said that he had so stated repeatedly; but he had changed his mind and said that he would act; and after all this had taken place then Mr. Cronin did accept the certificate of Governor Grover and did act upon that certificate in organizing or attempting to organize an Then, after that had all been done, he again, acelectoral college. cording to the testimony, threw himself back upon his dignity and upon his reserved rights as an individual, as a man, as a messenger, and as a democrat, and said that he would not move one peg toward carrying the vote to the President of the Senate unless he was paid carrying the vote to the President of the Senate unless he was paid not only his necessary and actual expenses in proceeding to Washington and returning, but the sum of $3,000 in gold coin, and that when in telegraphing the $3,000 in gold coin from Salem to Portland the day before Mr. Cronin was to leave to proceed to Washington the right word in the cipher dispatch was not used by Mr. Bush, and Mr. Bellinger, instead of being authorized to draw from Ladd & Tilton, in Portland Oragon the sum of $3,000 in gold coin was only author. in Portland, Oregon, the sum of $3,000 in gold coin, was only authorized to draw $2,800, even then, when that amount in gold coin had been raised, Mr. Cronin, this man who cast the vote upon which the democracy expect to wrest from the majority of the people of the State of Oregon their rights, declined to carry the vote to Washing-State of Oregon their rights, declined to carry the vote to Washington unless the remaining $200 were raised, and then a note was given to Ladd & Tilton for the remaining $200. The balance of the amount being thus raised by a note, he was paid the $3,000 in gold coin, and placing the amount in his pocket, he then, and not until then, proceeded to Washington to carry the electoral vote:

Does my friend from New York, in the face of these conceded facts, say that he money was improvedly used in connection with the electors.

say that no money was improperly used in connection with the elect-oral controversy in Oregon? I submit the facts to the consideration of a candid Senate and the candid people of this nation.

But as I said, Mr. President, I do not want to go into an investiga-tion of this matter now. It will be time enough to argue these mat-ters when all the testimony is before the Senate and when the report of the committee comes before this body. I have only been drawn at this time into saying as much as I have said by the unlooked-for, the unexpected opposition made to the adoption of this resolution by Senators on the other side of this Chamber. The simple question now before the Senate is this: Shall the Senate of the United States insist upon its right and upon its duty to enforce obedience to its own proc-That is the question before the Senate, the only question before us. And having said this much, I submit the question and hope we may get an early vote upon the resolution.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, whether the Senate may see proper to permit this discussion to go on I know not. If it is the will of the Senate that it shall go forward I am sure I have no objection; but I rise to call the attention of the Senate to the question before this body and to state the fact that the discussion is altogether irrelevant, in my judgment. I think my honorable friend from Oregon is himself responsible for this discussion, irrelevant as it is, in the case before the Scnate.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Mississippi, of course, is enti-

Mr. ALCORN. Certainly I am entitled to my opinion. I know that; and it is only my opinion that I propose to express.

Mr. MITCHELL. I certainly do not want the Senator to express

Mr. ALCORN. The only question before the Senate is whether the Senate shall issue an attachment against this defaulting witness. It is argued on one side that the subpæna which the witness has disavowed or to which he has failed to respond was not properly issued.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any evidence of that fact, I would inquire of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ALCORN. I care not whether there is any evidence of it or ot. It is not the time to inquire into that matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I think.

Mr. ALCORN. The subpœna was issued under the authority of this body, by the chairman of a Senate committee, and the question whether properly issued is one not to be decided by the witness nor is it one now to be adjudicated upon by the Senate. To the witness the process was served with the authority of this body. The question to him was not as to whether he knew anything or as to whether tion to him was not as to whether he knew anything or as to whether he did not know anything. It was for him to obey that subpœna, and when he has failed to obey the subpœna and the process is brought back by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the question then is whether the Senate will vindicate its authority or not. It is not as to any testimony that may have been taken before this committee, it is not as to any question that may have been discussed heretofore, not as to as to any question that may have been discussed herectoric, not as to the relevancy or irrelevancy of the witness's testimony, but the question is whether the Senate will vindicate the authority of this body in having that witness brought before it for the contempt un-der which he stands from the fact of his not having responded to the subpæna.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] went forward to examine The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] went forward to examine into the merits of this case. He introduced collateral testimony here and went all over the ground of the charge and denial in regard to the electoral vote of the State of Oregon. The Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] comes forward and denies this, and then the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] stands up ready to enter his protest against the declaration upon the part of his colleague. I contend that the proof is not all in, that the witness whom the Senator from Oregon has subpænaed is not here, and until he is here and has testified the proof in this case is not before the body. The only question before the Senate is whether the Senate will issue an attachment against this defaulting witness. I care not what he knows or what he does not know.

But what I arose for is that I may not by implication be brought by my vote to be considered as being either for or against one side or the other, that question not being before this body. I care not as to the merits of the case. My only inquiry is this: Is the witness in contempt of this body? The record shows that he is, and to vindicate this body I shall vote to have him brought here to answer for his

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree fully with the Senator from Mississippi Mr. MITCHELL. I agree fully with the Senator from Mississippi except in the statement that I am responsible for all that has been said aliunde the true issue before the Senate. I felt that I was justified in saying what I did in answer to the objections made to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, this discussion has certainly departed very widely from the resolution which was introduced by my colleague.

I must confess that I was not a little surprised when I entered the I must confess that I was not a little surprised when I entered the Senate Chamber and found my colleague making a very bitter assault upon the democratic party in Oregon. I had no reason to expect that such a question would arise in a discussion of this kind; but it can hardly be expected that I shall sit here and quietly listen and not repel such accusations. While I admit that there is a most singular departure from the ordinary course of debate, while I admit that there is a wide departure from discussing the resolution, yet who is responsible for this discussion? Certainly my colleague is. If he had contented himself with simply advacating the adontion of the resolution I should himself with simply advocating the adoption of the resolution, I should not have had a word to say. I might have denied the propriety at least of adopting it in the sweeping form in which it is drawn, that this witness shall be compelled to bring here the books of a bank to show all the transactions of Mr. Tilden and what took place during the canvass. I trust the Senate will be far from compelling this witness to produce everything that has taken place during this canvass and every account that he may have had with that bank without indicating that it is expected to prove a certain account or a certain payment. It must be designated in some particular way.

As I said before, I am not going to discuss that matter, and I would not now say a word about it but for this accusation. I shall now go into the full details of this transaction and show that my colleague has perverted the testimony. I will not say that he has willfully perverted it, but he is certainly blinded to the testimony that was taken before him as chairman of a subcommittee. Before I came into the Senate at the present session, he had made a most bitter assault upon the governor of Oregon. Before he ever received one iota of testimony in regard to it he prejudged the case. He had decided everything in advance, and then after introducing the resolution to submit this question to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, after making a most vituperative assault upon the governor, without a particle of evidence, my colleague by some means got himself placed upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate this matter which he had prejudged before. As to the taste of that proceeding, I leave the Senate to judge. My colleague was placed upon that committee. He was not only placed upon the committee, but he became the chairman of the subcommittee to investigate the electoral vote of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit tomy colleague whether I have not been a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections since I took my seat in the Senate, with the exception of a very few days, that I my seat in the Senate, with the exception of a very few days, that I was dropped simply because the Senater from California [Mr. SAR-GENT] took my place to go to Florida.

Mr. KELLY. Certainly my colleague was not put upon the committee at the commencement of this session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg pardon, I was placed on the committee at the commencement of this session, but I resigned from the committee some time after the session supergreated and then was placed heal.

some time after the session commenced and then was placed back upon the committee again. These are the facts.

Mr. KELLY. Very good; it makes no difference. I know that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] had him placed upon the

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know what right my colleague has to say that the Senator from Indiana had me placed upon the committee. I was placed there by the President of the Senate, not by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KELLY. I will then state it as it truly occurred. The Senator from Indiana whose seat is before me suggested that another member be put upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections and suggested my colleague as the proper person to be put upon that committee, and the President of the Senate appointed him. He was placed upon that committee and he was placed upon it to sit upon the quesupon that committee and he was placed upon it to sit upon the question that he had prejudged.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think my colleague is wrong about that. I do not think the Senator from Indiana made any such suggestion as that I should be placed upon the committee. I am satisfied the RECORD will show that he did not.

Mr. KELLY. My colleague can certainly correct me at the close of my remarks without interrupting me as I go along.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to interrupt you.

Mr. KELLY. I know that to be the course of procedure by which my colleague was placed upon the committee. I thought it was a most singular thing that he should accept the place at that time, when he knew himself that he had prejudged the case. when he knew himself that he had prejudged the case. In my judgment he could not render an impartial decision upon the testimony. He became the chairman, as I said a while ago, of the subcommittee which has investigated this whole matter. He knows the testimony; he knows every particle of testimony that was presented to that committee from the time that it examined the first witness in relation to the Oregon vote down to the present hour; and here I must confess my utter astonishment that my colleague knowing this should make the statement that he has made to-day in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will my colleague allow me one moment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Will my colleague allow me one moment?

Mr. KELLY. I certainly will if I have mistaken you.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will my colleague point to a single solitary sentence uttered by me in this debate in reference to the testimony taken in that controversy, which is not correct? If he can and will point it out I shall stand corrected, but I insist that I have not.

Mr. KELLY. I was proceeding to do that, and if my colleague will only allow me I think I can satisfy him as I can certainly satisfy the Senate that he has done so. I will now commence and detail the the Senate that he has done so. I will now commence and detail the proceedings in this conspiracy as it is termed on the part of the democracy. Let us see what it is. The republican party in Oregon had placed upon their electoral ticket a gentleman by the name of John W. Watts, who was a Federal office-holder. He was a postmaster at the time. The Constitution of the United States says that no person holding an office of profit or trust under the United States shall be appointed an elector. He was placed upon the ticket; he was voted for, and I admit he received a majority of the votes cast. I never denied, and no person in Oregon ever pretended to deny, that so far as the count went Watts received a majority of the votes. That a popular vote can make a man eligible, who is disqualified by the a popular vote can make a man engible, who is disquathed by the Constitution; that the State of Oregon can appoint an elector that the Constitution declares shall not be appointed, it seems to me, is a fallacy. I say that Watts was not eligible; he could not be chosen, and because the democracy in Oregon chose to contest his right, their action is denominated and denounced as a conspiracy. You might as well say that because the democratic party or those connected with it are at this present moment contesting the counting of a vote that is covered all over with fraud in Louisiana there is a conspiracy on the covered all over with fraud in Louisiana there is a conspiracy on the part of the democratic party to count out Mr. Hayes. Have they not a perfect right to contest? Have they not a right to employ counsel in that tribunal? Do you expect that the gentlemen who have been discussing important questions of law before the electoral commission from the commencement are doing so without any fee or reward on either side, republican or democratic? No, sir; no Senator here believes that is true; yet my colleague would denominate such conduct on the part of the democrats in Oregon a conspiracy.

Mr. MITCHELL. The difference is just this, if my colleague—
Mr. KELLY. I hope my colleague will allow me to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) The Senator refuses to yield to his colleague.

Mr. KELLY. I return now to what took place in Oregon. A number of gentlemen there believed that Watts was not eligible for the ber of gentlemen there believed that Watts was not eligible for the electoral certificate; that there would be a violation of the Constitution if he received it, and, as my colleague said here, therefore they "conspired" against the interests of the country. I took my part in that transaction there, and I never denied it or pretended to deny it. that transaction there, and I never defied it or pretended to deny it. I took a part in this proceeding because I believed it was right. I believed the Constitution of the United States should be enforced. I believed that a man who has no right to be elected and who could not be chosen without a violation of that instrument should not be permitted to have the certificate. I have said so from the time I knew that Watts was a postmaster. I have said that he was not entitled to cast the vote of that State and I say so now. If that tribunal which is to pass upon this question decide otherwise, I shall believe that they are certainly greatly mistaken.

As I said, a number of gentlemen got together in the State of Ore-believe that they are certainly greatly mistaken.

As I said, a number of gentlemen got together in the State of Oregon and devised, as best they could, some means to prevent this usurpation—because Watts would have been a usurper if he had claimed the right to cast the vote of Oregon when the Constitution of the United States said he should not do so—a number of gentlemen met together for the purpose of preventing this usurpation of the right of an elector by one who could not be chosen. Necessarily we supposed that proceedings would take place in the courts of justice to prevent it; that probably a mandamus would be issued to prevent a count of the vote for Mr. Cronin, who, we believed, would be entitled to that certificate in case the other gentleman was not. We supposed that the mandamus would probably be issued at the instance of the republican gentlemen on that side, and that we would require counsel to defend against it. Whatever proceedings at law would be brought in the courts would have to be brought before a gentleman who is a member of the republican party, the circuit judge gentleman who is a member of the republican party, the circuit judge of the district in which Salem is situated; a gentleman of distinguished legal ability; a gentleman who is above reproach. I refer to Judge Boyce. We expected that legal proceedings would be commenced before him.

Is there anything unreasonable when a party or a number of genthemen expect that a suit will be brought, in selecting counsel in whom the court have confidence, in whom the country have confidence, in whose integrity and ability every person in the community has confidence? The firm that was employed, Messrs. Hill, Durham & Thompson, was a republican firm. Some with whom I acted believed they would have more influence with the circuit judge simply because of their ability and of their republican principles than any democratic firm could have. That was the reason they were employed. Whether it was right or not to select a republican firm, I leave to every person here. I presume there is no one in the Senate who will gainsay the right to employ any man by the democratic party, whether he be a republican or whether he be a democrat. There is nothing improper in employing counsel, and if they exacted a large fee from us for that service and we chose to pay it, whose business is it? Is it to be denounced as a corrupt act because these lawyers were paid $3,000 for attending to a most important case, or what was supposed to be a most impor-tant case, which would be pending before the circuit judge, and tak-ing an appeal to the supreme court and prosecuting it there—because all that was in contemplation, and this firm was employed in that way? I leave it to the Senate to say whether it is or not. I can see no corruption in it. I agreed that it should be done.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. KELLY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of my colleague if one consideration, one ingredient, in the employment of that firm was not the fact that Mr. Hill, one of the members of the firm, was the editor of a leading republican paper, so called, in the State, and if my colleague in his testimony did not testify as follows:

Question. What was said at that time ?

The time that the employment was made of this firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson.

Answer. Mr. Hill said, "That is what you want us to do?" I said, "Yes." I will say here that I had in my own mind, but I did not communicate it to him, that I hoped the paper which he conducted would not be so severe against the democrats. That was my own opinion, but when he said to me, as Mr. Bellinger will remember, "Is that all?" I said "Yes." Although I wished to make it still something more, I said, "Yes." After all the agreement was made I said to Mr. Hill, "I think you have been unnecessarily severe on us democrats in the paper, and I hope you will not be so hereafter." This was after the agreement was all made.

Q. At the same conversation though?

A. O, yes; perhaps half an hour after.

Q. In Hill and Durham's office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, colonel, I want to ask you if the fact that Mr. W. Lare Hill was the editor of the Oregonian did not have some little inducence on your mind in consenting to pay the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson $3,000 for their services as attorneys in this case?

A. I must confess, as I said, that I hoped it would be so; but I had not the courage to ask it.

Mr. KELLY. Yes, sir; that is all, as I believe, that took place. My colleague has asked whether it was not the principal consideration that one of the members of this firm was the editor of the leading republican journal of the State. I will answer no, it was not the principal consideration. The principal consideration with me, indeed I might say the only or at least the main consideration, in making the contract, was on account of the judge before whom the legal proceedings would be commenced, because at that time we had no idea that the case would come before the governor for his consideration, but we believed that the legal proceedings would be commenced by the republican party to compel the counting of the votes for Mr. Watts, and by the law of Oregon they would have to be commenced in the district where Salem is, and in that district a republican is judge. As I said before, he is a worthy gentleman, above suspicion judge. As I said before, he is a worthy gentleman, above suspicion and above reproach, a man of intelligence; but we believed that every human being is more or less influenced by his party associations. It human being is more or less influenced by his party associations. It may be unintentional, but still there will creep over him influences, and we could not tell how it would be. We believed that a republican firm in whom we knew this judge had confidence would have more influence than any democratic firm would have. For that reason we employed this firm. That was the principal reason with every man who talked about the employment of this firm.

I must confess, as I said in my testimony, that I was somewhat adverse to the employment of the firm because I thought the fee was a very large one. This was my own opinion; but I yielded to others who thought it was more important that we should have that firm and pay the large fee of $3,000. I yielded my judgment to them, and the firm was employed. As I said, we had talked it over about Mr. Hill being the editor of the leading republican journal, and that that might have some influence. I said in my testimony that it had certain weight with me; but it was not a part and parcel of our agreement. When we made the agreement it was stipulated that they should do certain legal services for us, that is, that they should prosshould do certain legal services for us, that is, that they should prosecute all suits that should be brought by the democrats and defend against those who might prosecute suits against the democrats, and that they should attend to them in the appellate court as well. This was the agreement, and the sole agreement. It is true, as I said, that some time after the agreement was made I hoped Mr. Hill would be less severe in the journal he edited. It was a kind of casual remark. I hardly expected anything to be said about it; but Mr. Hill distinctly then and there stated that he could not and would not change the tone of that journal of which he was the editor without the consent of the proprietors; and, that if it became necessary, he would discontinue any connection with it in order to presente this suit. discontinue any connection with it in order to prosecute this suit. now say here that the tone of that journal, so far as anything was said or done in it, was afterward just as severe as it had been before.

It was as bitter against the democratic party as it had been before this agreement took place.
Mr. MITCHELL. It never was very bitter.

Mr. KELLY. Its tone was not changed by any employment that we made. We employed the firm for the reason that I have stated. The next consideration was, how should we raise money for this purpose, and at that time Mr. Patrick came there; we told him of embarrassment and that we had difficulty in raising money, and could not do it without sending to different parts of the State or asking different portions of the country to contribute to make up the large sum which we expected to pay for this employment of the law-yers. It was suggested to Mr. Patrick that, as this was a matter in which the whole democratic party was interested, it would be nothing but fair that the democratic national committee should see that this money was paid. He expressed himself in such a way as to indicate that he thought it was right, and that we should not bear this burden. The telegram to his banker to send $8,000 was put in evidence. We wanted $10,000, but could not get it; and we finally agreed that we would telegraph for $8,000, and this was done. Eight agreed that we would telegraph for $2,000, and this was done. Fight thousand dollars were placed to our credit with Kountze Brothers but we could never realize it; we could not get the money to pay the attorneys whom we had agreed to pay. Then we telegraphed several times back and forth that we could not use the money. We telegraphed to Mr. Patrick, who was in San Francisco, that we could not realize on it, and he sent up some seven thousand and odd dollars, the proceeds of $8,000 which he had in New York, which had been telegraphed to us before. He sent the proceeds of that to the been telegraphed to us before. He sent the proceeds of that to banking firm of Ladd & Bush.

And here, Mr. President, let me say that that is every cent that we ever had there. My colleague certainly knows that fact. It was anticipated, however, by simply drawing a promissory note, signed by myself and a number of other gentlemen, made payable to Ladd & Bush. We drew $3,200 upon that sum, but my colleague knows very well that Mr. Bush stated that that sum was to be replaced by the money that was sent by Mr. Patrick from San Francisco. He knows that fact and every member of the committee knows it. While you may say there was nominally $15,000 there, yet actually the one was to replace the other. We did not expect to repay this sum of money that we were using. We had been assured by Mr. Patrick that he would do everything he could to see that the democratic national comwould do everything he could to see that the democratic national committee in New York should refund the money to us and that we should not be at any loss. But we had to anticipate that sum and we gave our own notes for the purpose of realizing the money, and that is all that there is of it. We got it from the city of San Francisco; and $3,000 was paid, as I have said, to this firm of lawyers in pursuance of a contract that we made; $200 of it was paid to defray the expense of sending a messenger some three hundred miles to bring down Mr. Laswell, who was on the democratic ticket as one of our candidates for elector. At that time we were not certain whether he would not be the highest on our ticket instead of Mr. Cronin, and so we sent an express messenger for him and paid $200 for that. The other $3,000 was paid to Mr. Cronin.

Whether Mr. Cronin ought or ought not to have charged us so much is a matter of taste with him; I think he did wrong. There was no agreement made to pay him until after the electoral vote was cast. The agreement made to pay him until after the electoral vote was cast. The evidence shows clearly and conclusively that this was the case, and that Mr. Cronin then said that he had no money; that he could not leave; that he had an important case to argue in the supreme court of Oregon the following week and if absent he would be the loser of a large sum of money. I do not remember exactly the amount, but it was certainly several thousand dollars that he expected to realize in that case; and he did not like to leave the State at that time. He, however, agreed to leave, but demanded $3,000, and it was paid to him ont of this fund. As I said before, it is a question of taste with Mr. Cronin whether he should have demanded so large a sum or not. There were gentlemen there with me who thought it was wrong: There were gentlemen there with me who thought it was wrong; that he exacted too much. But where is the corruption in paying a man his expenses here, even though the demand made be exorbitant? If he was paid for doing that which it was his bounden duty to do, as an elector chosen by the people of Oregon—because I believe he was chosen according to law, not by a majority of the votes, I admit, but in my judgment legally chosen as one of the electors of the State of Oregon, and if it be decided otherwise I shall be mistaken; I must confess I shall not believe it will be decided otherwise until that august tribunal that is to pass upon it shall give its judgment—I ask is there corruption in making such a payment?

Mr. President, this is all the money that was paid. The witnesses who have testified, the men who know all about it, say that the $3,000 paid to the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson, the $200 paid for the expenses of Mr. Laswell, and the $3,000 paid to Mr. Cronin was all the money that was ever paid; and I defy my colleague or any other person who knows anything about this transaction to show that there was any other money paid. I am satisfied there was not; so far as I am concerned, I know there was not; and I am satisfied beyond the shadow of a doubt that no other money than that was paid. If this can be called a corruption fund, if this was a corrupt bargain, then there is corruption; but I can see nothing of corruption; but I tion in it. I believe it was right and proper. I believe, as I said before, that the fee we paid our lawyers was a high one; I believe that the sum paid to Mr. Cronin was more than he should have demanded; but that it was improper to pay the money, that there was a conspiracy to wrong anybody, that there was anything illegal in it, no man, in my judgment, can for a moment believe.

My colleague knows the fact too, that all the money we expected to receive, but which we did not receive, because it did not come in to receive, but which we did not receive, because it did not come in time from Kountze Brothers, or from Dimon, was returned to them. That my colleague knows. My colleague knows further that the only money we got was from San Francisco and that that was $8,000 in currency, which, reduced to coin, would make about seven thousand three hundred and odd dollars. My colleague knows further that after that sum of $6,200 was paid, the balance was remitted to the order of Mr. Patrick himself; and that was the end of the whole transaction. Six thousand two hundred dollars for that contest in Organa. tion. Six thousand two hundred dollars for that contest in Oregon;

tion. Six thousand two hundred dollars for that contest in Oregon; I leave it to the just judgment of the Senate and to every Senator here whether there was any improper use of that money; and that is the whole transaction from beginning to end.

So far as concerns the note that was given by myself and a number of other gentlemen to anticipate the money we were to get, anticipating it in order to pay this fee, we are not out anything; we never expected to pay it. It was simply anticipating the money that we were to receive from other sources. So Mr. Bush has said, so Mr. Bellinger has said, and so every one who has testified in relation to it has said, that the money that was raised on our note was simply anticipatory; it was simply anticipating what we expected to receive from either the national committee in New York or from Mr. Patrick in San Francisco. Mr. Patrick had pledged himself virtually to see that it was paid in case the democratic national committee would not pay it; and that, doubtless, was one reason why he sent the money to us from San Francisco.

to us from San Francisco.

All this was done on the 6th day of December. These several telegrams from New York were sent, the money was telegraphed, on or about the 6th day of December, and on the same day it came from San Francisco; but, two days before this, on the 4th of December, we San Francisco; but, two days before this, on the 4th of December, we had anticipated it by raising a portion of the money on our own note; and the note is simply canceled now by the payment of the sum by Mr. Patrick. So far as the note being in the custody of Mr. Bush is concerned, I have simply to say that it is there yet. Mr. Bush says he does not look to us for it; he does not expect anything from us for it; neither do we expect to pay one cent for it. And that is the "$15,000" that my colleague thinks is a fund to corrupt the courts and the people of Oregon!

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply quoted from the testimony of Mr. Bush. He said there was $15,000.

Mr. KELLY. Let me call your attention to that testimony. Mr. MITCHELL. I refer to page 291.

Mr. MITCHELL. I refer to page 291.

Mr. KELLY. Here is the examination of Mr. Bush, when he was Question. Having received the telegram, and finding an interest, as you supposed, against Mr. Watts, you, of your motion, telegraphed to see if they could help you to get funds?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. And to get funds for the purpose anticipated of retaining these lawyers?

Q. Was this $8,000 that was placed to your credit in New York by Dimon returned or retained by you?

A. By Runyon & Martin.
Q. By Runyon & Martin.
A. It was returned to Runyon & Martin.

So much for that.

Q. So that you did not use in any way the $5,000 that Runyon & Martin deposited?

Q. So that you did not use in any way the $8,000 that Runyon & Martin deposited?

A. No, sir; it was returned to them.
Q. You telegraphed Dimon to return it to them, did you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did not receive, then, as I understand you, to retain, any funds from Dimon for this purpose at all?
A. No, sir.
Q. Nor from Runyon & Martin either?
A. No, sir.
Q. Neither one nor the other?
A. No, sir.
Q. You directed Dimon to return the money to Runyon?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that all you have had by way of funds or security for funds about this transaction was what was deposited in the London and San Francisco Bank at San Francisco and this note that these gentlemen gave you?
A. Yes, sir, no other.
Q. And those you hold? The note and the funds are to your credit there, and that is all the funds you have had claimed to be in any way at your disposal for this business in Oregon?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The note was left with you before you received any advice of the deposit at San Francisco, was it not?
A. Yes, sir.
I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this was the note

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this was the note for $8,000 signed by myself and a number of other democrats.

A. I should say two or three days, but I do not know. I cannot be positive about hat. I suppose Colonel Kelly has the means of fixing the date.

The Witness. So it was.

That is all I call the attention of the Senate to at the present time. So Mr. Bush, upon whom they rely to prove that $15,000 was used in Oregon, says it was not so. He says it is true that he had a note for $8,000 signed by certain democrats in Oregon, and he some two days afterward received seven thousand three hundred and odd dollars from San Francisco. He says further that the money received from San Francisco was to liquidate and discharge the note, as it unquestionably was.

Now, I ask how do you make $15,000 out of that, when the one was a mere collateral, when the giving of the note was simply to enable us to receive the money in advance of the time at which it would be telegraphed? And yet my colleague says it was a corruption fund. It certainly behooves my colleague to have some evidence before he makes such grave charges against gentlemen—and I leave out my-self—who are in every way as worthy of respect as himself. It is incumbent upon him that he should at least prove by some respect-able witness that more than this sum was used. He has not done it, and he cannot do it. My colleague should not make such charges against any one; he should not make such insinuations against any one without having some evidence of the fact which he avers and some evidence to contradict the plain statement of Mr. Bush, which is an answer to everything my colleague has said.

Certainly, it seems to me, after having taken the testimony of the witnesses, he owes it to himself to exculpate those men whom he charges with corruption and conspiracy to deprive the people of Oregon of their right to their electoral vote. Have they not a right to their own judgment as well as he has to his judgment? Who gives him the right to judge others and to judge every man in Oregon? Because men differ about a question of great importance, not only to the State but to the right to great the results of the state but to the result the State, but to the nation at large, because they hold different views the State, but to the nation at large, because they hold different views from himself, has he aright to get up in the Senate and arraign them with aiding in corruption, with devising means to defraud the State of its electoral vote? There are certainly as good lawyers as he who believe that Mr. Watts was not elected; there are certainly all over the country men just as able as is my colleague who believe that Mr. Cronin was the lawfully chosen person to cast the electoral vote of the State; and yet, because of this difference, we are to be denounced here in the Senate as scoundrels, as villains, and as corruptionists.

I think my colleague owes it to himself to disayon the charges ha

I think my colleague owes it to himself to disavow the charges he has made and which are of so grave a character. I certainly would not make any accusation against members of the party to which he belongs, if they believed sincerely, if they believed honestly, that any democrat was trying to usurp an office to which he had no right; would not charge my colleague with corruption because he attempted to prevent that usurpation; and I repel, and repel with some warmth, any accusation against my fellow-democrats in Oregon who honestly believed that they were doing their duty, and believe it now, and who are supported in this belief by many of the most eminent legal minds in the United States.

I did not intend to be led into this discussion. As I said in the outset, it was apart from anything I had expected; but we are dragged set, it was apart from anything I had expected; but we are dragged into it by the insinuations made by my colleague, charges of corruption made here, which we were bound to repel and which we could not do otherwise than repel in the manner we have done. I mean the Senator from New York [Mr. Kernan] and myself. That Senator is a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and knows everything of this testimony, knows all the testimony than has been taken, and is more familiar with it than I am. He has made a statement which corroborates my own in every partic-

I do not care to say anything now on the point as to whether the resolution should be adopted; I leave that to be discussed hereafter, when we shall have disposed of this matter that is altogether foreign and extraneous to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I shall engage the attention of the Senate but a very few minutes longer, and would say nothing further were it not for the rather bitter remarks of my colleague in attempting evidently to place me in the situation of misrepresenting testimony and of misrepresenting facts in reference to this matter.

My colleague says that a great many good lawyers in this country, as good and better lawyers than myself, hold to the opinion that Mr. as good and better lawyers than myself, not to the opinion that are Watts was not eligible as an elector. That may be. I was not discussing that question. I was not talking about that at all. But if that is so, if this action of Governor Grover was so in accordance with law, then why the necessity for all this money, for all this manipulation, for all these telegraphic dispatches?

lation, for all these telegraphic dispatches?

I scarcely think that my colleague has any right, under all the evidence adduced in this case, to make accusations against me. I hardly think that he is justified, under the testimony in this case, in insinuating or charging that I have sought to place the democrats of Oregon or any member of the democratic party in that State in a false position when, according to the testimony taken in this case, when according to my colleague's own testimony, it appears that the question was one of law to be passed upon by the governor of the State; when, according to his statement and according to the opinion of many eminent lawyers in the country, the law was with the governor; and when it appears further, from the testimony in the case, that every democratic lawyer in Oregon stood ready and willing to present the case before either the governor or any of the judicial tribunals in any aspect that the case might take, without any fee or hope of reward whatever; and when after all that, in addition to having all the democratic lawyers in the State ready to present the case in all its details and bearings before the governor or before the courts, all its details and bearings before the governor or before the courts, they had actually employed the republican firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson for the sum of $3,000.

Having all the democratic lawyers in the State and this firm of republican lawyers, then my colleague and other democratic managers in Oregon sat down and telegraphed to the leading democratic managers in New York that they wanted $10,000 telegraphed to Oregon. For what purpose I ask my colleague. Why did they ask for $10,000 to be telegraphed to Oregon to be used in connection with this controvers. troversy? Simply to pay lawyers, when, according to the testimony in the volume before me, every democratic lawyer in the State stood ready to argue the case, to present and submit it before either the governor or the courts; and, in addition to that they had secured the services of Hill, Durham, and Thompson, three republican lawyers, for the sum of $3,000. Why, I ask my colleague, did they telegraph for $7,000 more? That is an inquiry, I submit, that my colleague did not satisfactorily answer when he was a witness on the stand; that is an inquiry that Mr. Bellinger, the chairman of the democratic State central committee of Oregon, did not satisfactorily answer when he was on the stand.

Then am I to be accused by my colleague of making false insinuations and false charges against the democratic party and the democratic managers in Oregon, because I call attention to the facts as testified to by witnesses! I apprehend not, Mr. President. I apprehend that I am not to be placed in any false position by any charge preferred by my colleague that I am making insinuations or charges that the contract in the contract is the contract to the contract that I am making insinuations or charges are contracted to the contracted to that are not justified by the evidence, when the evidence lies before the Senate on the desks of its members. I do not wish to place any member of the desseron the members. I do not wish to place any member of the democratic party of Oregon in any false position; I do not wish to make, nor will I make, against a member of the democratic party in Oregon any charges I do not believe to be fully sustained and borne out by the sworn testimony in the case.

Far be it from me to say a word here that would place my colleague in any false position or that would intimate that he had acted improperly. So far as that is concerned, I did not say anything of the kind. What I did say was that, according to the testimony of a leading democrat of Oregon, over $15,000 was placed at different points in different banks, for the purpose, as testified to by him, of meeting expenses in connection with this electoral controversy in Oregon. I frankly stated, before my colleague rose, that so far as a part of that money, $8,000, was concerned it was, according to the testimony of Mr. Bush and others, refunded and telegraphed back. I stated nothing in connection with this matter that is no thorne out by the sworn testimony of witnesses.

Mr. President, having said this much, I will dismiss this whole proceeding at this time. It was the farthest from my intention when I came into the Senate this morning to say a single word in regard to this testimony. I know that to a certain extent it is foreign to the real issue before the Senate. I have only been drawn into saying as much as I have said from the fact that unlooked-for opposition to the adoption of this resolution has come from the other side of the Chamber. I hope we may now have a vote on the pending resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—

Mr. KELLY. Will you allow me to say a few words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLY. I wish, before the Senator from Delaware takes the floor, to reply very briefly to what my colleague has last stated to the Senate. My colleague puts a question: Why did we telegraph for the $7,000 in San Francisco when we had already $8,000 deposited in New York ?

Mr. MITCHELL. No; that is not the question exactly. I will state the question, if my colleague will allow me. According to the testimony of my colleague, and of Mr. Bellinger and other leading democrats of Oregon, the democratic lawyers of Oregon had volunteered to present this controversy to the courts or before the governor; and it was the understanding of all parties that no charge was to be made, but that they would argue it just as my colleague argued the case, without charge, as he stated in his testimony, that he did it out of patriotism, because he thought his view of it was right, and all that sort of thing. In addition to that, they had secured softer lawyers, are republican firm, to whom they were obligated to pay $3,000. It is claimed that the only reason why they wanted money at all was to pay lawyers, and to meet any other little expenses, such as bringing Laswell down. Now having all the democratic lawyers and this republican firm at an expense of $3,000, why then did they tolegraph for $10,000? What did they want the other $7,000 for?

Mr. KELLY. I think I now understand the question. My colleague asks me why, when we had every democratic lawyer in Oregon ready to assist us, we wanted $10,000. Let me say to my colleague that we telegraphed for the money before we knew that any democratic lawyer would assist us. The telegram was sent by Mr. Patrick when he first came there, the day after I went there. We did not when he first came there, the day after I went there. We did not know who would assist us; we did not know how much money we should really need; we had not then employed the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson. We telegraphed for $10,000, a round sum. We expected we should need a great or at least a considerable portion of it for counsel fees and other expenses. We could not tell for what we might want it. We knew that we had to send to a distant part of the State for a messenger; we knew we should have necessarily other expenses attending the matter.

The understanding, as every witness has testified, was that if we did not need the money it would be returned. As has been testified by Mr. Bellinger and others that a flat refusal came from the democratic national committee; they said that they could not furnish it. Finally they agreed to furnish $8,000, which we knew would be in currency. We knew that our fee to Mr. Hill was payable in coin, as all transactions are payable in coin in that State unless otherwise expressed. We had not then any concert of action among the democratic lawyers; we did not know who would assist us or how much might be charged for the assistance rendered.

Mr. MITCHELL. One word.

Mr. KELLY. I beg my colleague to reserve his reply until I have concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

Mr. KELLY. We telegraphed for the $8,000, and it was placed with a certain banking house—Kountze Brothers, I believe, is the name—by Mr. Patrick. They were his bankers. We could not use that money for the simple reason that the firm of Martin & Runyon had no communication with any banking-house in Salem or in Oregon, and it could not be used until the draft was sent out to Oregon; which would take about ten days or two weeks altogether to make it available. Hence there was an effort made to have that money placed with Charles Dimon, who was the agent of the banking firm of Ladd & Bush, of Salem; but it could not be done, or it was not done until the 6th day of December, long after the time that we wanted to use it. My colleague knows that fact.

Then he asks, having $8,000 deposited in New York, why did we want $8,000 or the equivalent in coin of that amount in currency from San Francisco † I answer, for the very good reason, as all the witnesses stated to my colleague, that the $8,000 we had in New York amounted to nothing, because it could not be used.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague misunderstands me. The question

I asked was simply this—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to his colleague?

Mr. KELLY. Yes, sir. Let my colleague go on.
Mr. MITCHELL. Your expenses all told in Oregon, according to your own testimony, were $3,000. Why, then, did you telegraph for

Mr. KELLY. I tell my colleague, as I did before, that we had not

Mr. KELLY. I tell my colleague, as I did before, that we had not then employed anybody, we had not employed any lawyers.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Bellinger says you had.

Mr. KELLY. No; I beg pardon of my colleague; Mr. Bellinger says no such thing. Neither Mr. Bellinger nor any other person says that when we first telegraphed for this money we had employed any lawyers. We learned afterward that we could get any number of democratic lawyers to assist us without any fee; but when we telegraphed for that money we had made no bargain with any one.

Mr. MITCHELL rose

Mr. KELLY. My colleague can answer me when I conclude, without continually interrupting me.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator does not wish to make a misstatement.

Mr. KELLY. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. He is certainly mistaken.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yielded the floor to the Senator from Oregon,

[Mr. KELLY.] I certainly should not have extended that courtesy if I supposed that I was yielding the floor to everybody in the Chamber.

Mr. KELLY. I beg the honorable Senator from Delaware to understand that it is not my desire that these interruptions should take place; but I cannot avoid answering when interrogated.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt my colleague, but he certainly does not desire to misstate the testimony. Now I will read from the testimony of Mr. Bellinger to show that my colleague is entirely mistaken.

Mr. KELLY. Well, what is it? Mr. MITCHELL. I will read it:

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Question. What else did you agree upon at this meeting?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me one

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I have been requested to go to another part of the Capitol. I have been which and I express go to another part of the Capitol. I have been waiting here to get an opportunity to make some remarks on this subject; and I express the hope that the vote will not be reached this evening as I desire to express some opinions up on this question. I have not, I believe, during this whole session engaged the attention of the Senate ten minutes, having been all the time occupied in other duties. I desire, however, to be heard on this question before the final vote is taken, and it is impossible for me to be heard now.

Mr. MITCHELL. So far as I am concerned, I should like to accommodate the Senator from Delaware, and I will not engage the attention of the Senate two minutes longer, but I hope the vote will be taken to-night and I shall insist upon that.

I will read now from the testimony.
Mr. KERNAN. From what page are you reading?
Mr. MITCHELL. Page 304.

Question. What else did you agree upon at this meeting?

Mr. KELLY. To what meeting does that refer?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the meeting between yourself and Mr. Bellinger at the time the firm was employed.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. What else did you agree upon at this meeting?
A. That was all that was agreed upon.
Q. All that was agreed upon, then, was that you should employ the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson?
A. That was the only business done.
Q. Was there anything said about the money, how you should raise it?
A. Yes, sir; I had attempted before Mr. Patrick's arrival to raise money. I had talked with leading democrats to know the amount that probably could be raised.
Several had agreed to contribute in various sums. In that way I had ascertained that it would be very difficult to raise the amount of money that we thought we needed. I had a conversation with Mr. Griswold, who was going to San Francisco.
I desired him to see, when he arrived in San Francisco, if money could not be raised there. Mr. Griswold represented himself as being largely interested, a man who had a great many bets pending, and he said he would be willing to contribute himself.

self.
Q. He had bet on Tilden?
A. He had bet on Tilden I informed Mr. Patrick of these things. Mr. Patrick said he thought the national committee would help us out. I then telegraphed, or got Mr. Patrick to do so, a statement of our condition. I do not know but what I prepared the telegram myself. I am not positive about this, but we telegraphed that we desired a certain amount of money.
Q. To whom was that telegram sent?
A. I think it was to Mr. Pelton.
Q. Colonel W. T. Pelton, was it?
A. I think it was. There were telegrams sent to different persons. I think one was sent to this party in Omaha, whom Mr. Patrick represented as having suggested to him the advisability of his coming to Oregon.
Q. What was sent to him?
A. I do not remember the language of the telegram, but that was the effect of it.

Q. What? A. That we desired $10,000 to defray the expenses of this contest.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. That was sent to whom ? A. Such a dispatch was sent to Mr. Miller.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Was that before or after you had agreed with Hill, Durham & Thompson?

Q. Was that before or after you had agreed with A.A. That was after.
Q. You had the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson employed, and you had agreed to pay them $3,000. You had Mr. Williams's partner, who volunteered to assist you, so that you had four lawyers employed for the $3,000. What did you want with the other $7,000?

Mr. KELLY. What four lawyers?
Mr. MITCHELL. Hill, Durham & Thompson, and Mr. Williams's partner, Mr. Thayer.

A. I thought probably we might desire to employ other attorneys. As I have stated to you, I did intend to employ the firm of Whaley & Fecheimer. I did not know what other expenses might arise and be necessary in the course of the con-know what other expenses might arise and be necessary in the course of the contest.

Q. Had you employed Judge Strong at that time?

A. I had not. I will say that we did not expect to pay democratic attorneys anything. We expected them to volunteer their services.

Q. Did you pay them anything?

A. We did not.

Q. You had all the democratic attorneys that you wanted, then, without a dollar of money?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not have to pay them anything?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not expect to pay them anything?

A. I did not expect they would want anything.

Q. They would do it out of pure patriotism?

A. Yes, sir, we thought they ought to do it for nothing.

Q. And you had Hill, Durham & Thompson, a leading republican firm, secured for $3,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After that was all done, you telegraphed to Pelton and Miller, wanting to know if $10,000 could be raised?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you explain what you expected to do or how you expected to use the remaining $7,000?

That is the question I put to my colleague.

That is the question I put to my colleague.

A. I might partially explain that. I had prior to this time telegraphed to The Dalles, to parties there, requesting them to send a special messenger to Canyon City, in Grant County, for Mr. Laswell, a candidate on the democratic ticket for elector, stating to those persons that I would pay the expenses. I had no means of knowing what the expenses would be.

Q. Sending a messenger up there would cost about how much?

A. We finally paid $200, but that was much less than we expected.

Q. Very well; what else? Was there any other expense that you knew of?

A. There was no other expense especially further, but we did not know what expense might be necessary in the course of the contest.

Mr. KERNAN. I want to read to my friend the testimony immediately following what he has read:

Q. What answer did you get from Mr. Pelton? A. The answer was a flat refusal.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from New York certainly will not contend-

Mr. KERNAN. O, no! I find no fault.
Mr. MITCHELL. The money was afterward sent.
Mr. KELLY. That is exactly just as I stated it to be. I stated—and my colleague will remember this—that that conversation took any lawyers at that time. It is true that in the portion of the evidence read by my colleague Mr. Bellinger said they expected they could get democratic lawyers; that Mr. Williams had offered his services, but that he was the only one who offered to give his services at all. There was really no one employed. There was an expectation that some would volunteer their services through patriotism, as my that some would volunteer their services through patriotism, as my colleague has suggested; but after all there was no employment made until after this telegram for the $10,000 was sent. The telegram, as the evidence shows, was a flat refusal.

After several telegrams we learned that $8,000 was deposited in the city of New York, which was of no more value to us than if it had been deposited at the north pole, so far as our immediate wants were concerned; it was wholly unavailable. We had to pay our attorneys according to promise, according to pledge, according to agreement. As I said, it became necessary to try to get the money elsewhere. We did not telegraph at all for the money from San Francisco, but it was sent without any request whatever, as the whole evidence will show, by Mr. Patrick, who had left Portland on the 2d day of December, and three or four days afterward reached San Francisco. Finding that we could not realize quite all the money which he thought we ought to have, he sent it up from San Francisco. Was he thought we ought to have, he sent it up from San Francisco. Was there anything wrong in trying to get the money from several sources? We found we could not get it elsewhere, and we had to raise it ourselves at last, in anticipation of what we would get from the national committee or from Mr. Patrick. This is the sum and the national committee or from Mr. Patrick. This is the sum and substance of the whole proceeding.

My colleague knows well, he is satisfied and must be satisfied from the evidence in the case, if he judges from that, that only $6,200 was used. He knows that what was sent besides that amount was returned. We have shown that we needed that much. We anticipated that, in case the decision should eventually be in our favor, we would have to bear the expense of the elector or messenger who would be sent to Washington. We would necessarily have to bear his expenses. These things were manifest to us all, and we thought it was nothing but right if the national committee expected, as they did, and as every democrat expected, that we should attend to this business in Oregon and do what we could to secure the rejection of a usurping candidate who had no right whatever to cast the votes. I say when every democrat expected us to do this we thought it was say when every democrat expected us to do this we thought it was nothing but right that we should receive the funds which were required to be paid, and that the committee in New York should adthey should pay the whole of it, and we believe so now.

We have expended, as I said, $6,200, and we have returned the balance; and that is all that can be made out of this Oregon muddle, as it is called. The Oregon muddle shows that we have conducted this business as economically as we could, as justly as we could, and that we have simply discharged a duty which every democrat owes to the party, to see that the Constitution shall not be trampled upon by an office-holder when he wants to foist himself into the electoral college and to hold two offices in his greed of office, and when he shall re-office-holder when he wants to foist himself into the electoral college and to hold two offices in his greed of office, and when he shall refuse to surrender or resign the one that he is holding and grab for another. We were determined that that spirit, at least among office-holders seeking to be electors, should be put down in Oregon, even though we had some expense to bear. I have shown how we accomplished that object, and I think it was just and right and proper.

My colleague said that democratic lawyers were ready to assist in the argument of this case before the governor. Of course they were. If we had anticipated what did take place, that the whole argument would be made before the governor, the firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson never would have been employed. As I said before, the reason of employing the firm was because we anticipated these proceedings to be before a republican judge who had the utmost confidence in the ability of that firm. If we erred in employing a republican firm to argue before a republican judge, then we should bear the censure. I do not think we did. We had a right to select our counsel and to employ whom we pleased; and we did; and we paid them for it honestly and fairly. We did not cheat them out of their fee, even after we found out that their services were not needed before the tribunal where we expected they would be required. We did not deprive them of their fees because the service was not rendered. We paid them honestly as honest men would, and we expected the money to be refunded, as it will be refunded from the money deposited by Mr. Patrick in the bank at San Francisco.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate for any length of time. I concur with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Alcorn,] that the real question before the Senate, whether the attachment by the resolution shall issue or not, is the question that is really brought to the attention of the Senate by the resolution. It attachment by the resolution shall issue or not, is the question that is really brought to the attention of the Senate by the resolution. It was that question alone which I proposed to discuss for a few moments this morning when I was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour. Subsequently the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] obtained the floor and introduced a discussion which has occupied the Mr. KELLY. The money was afterward sent.

Mr. KELLY. That is exactly just as I stated it to be. I stated—and my colleague will remember this—that that conversation took place on the evening I got to Portland.

The firm of Hill, Durham & Thompson was employed conditionally, if we could raise the money. The agreement was made afterward. I was there, and as Mr. Bellinger says we had not employed MITCHELL] has introduced, and they have demonstrated clearly to my mind, and I think clearly to the country, that so far as the action of the democracy is concerned, it was perfectly legitimate, and the charges that have been framed of attempts to corrupt and bribe a judge or an executive officer charged with ascertaining who was elected, falls harmless at their feet.

elected, falls harmless at their feet.

But I do not propose to enter into that discussion. I desire to call the attention of the Senate back to the proper question now before us, and that is whether the resolution offered providing that a certain gentleman in the city of New York, the cashier of a certain bank there, shall be brought to the bar of the Senate to answer for contempt. That is the question.

I am sorry that the Senator from Oregon who introduced the resolution did not respond to the inquiry which I had the honor this morning to make of the Senator, whether certain information was true or was not true. He did not deign to answer the question but evaded it, for to say that the subpœna which had issued was signed by the chairman of the committee is not a full answer to the interrogatory. I knew that a subpœna had gone forth bearing the imby the chairman of the committee is not a full answer to the interrogatory. I knew that a subpena had gone forth bearing the impress of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, signed by its chairman. I knew that without being informed by the Senator from Oregon. That was not the inquiry which I made. The inquiry was whether that subpena had issued improvidently, whether it had been ordered by the committee in fact, or whether it had been issued upon the request of a member of that committee at a time when the committee was not in session. I hold that this is a pertinent inquiry.

I do not concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Mississippi, that, ascertaining that a subpena has been issued bearing the authority of the committee, we are precluded from inquiring into its legality. This whole proceeding of application for an attachment for contempt is a question addressed to the discretion of the ment for contempt is a question addressed to the discretion of the ment for contempt is a question addressed to the discretion of the Senate. All applications of this kind addressed to courts are addressed to the discretion of the court, and if the court should ascertain upon a full inquiry that a process or subpena has issued improvidently and irregularly, no court in this land, high or low, with a condition of facts before it of that character, would attempt to issue an attachment for a contempt of the authority of the court.

Is it not a proper inquiry for the Senate of the United States before it assumes the high prerogative of bringing a witness to the bar of the Senate, even the humblest in the land, to know whether there has been in fact a contempt of the authority of this body? It was to ascertain that fact that I addressed my inquiry to the Senator from Oregon this morning. He was in possession of knowledge upon that point which he has not deigned to lay before the Senate.

point which he has not deigned to lay before the Senate.

point which he has not deigned to lay before the Senate.

Is the Senate to be asked to issue its mandate to bring to the bar of the Senate any citizen of this land upon the mere application of a single member of a committee, without any authority whatever? We would in my opinion humble ourselves—I will not use the word "disgrace"—in the eyes of the American people if we should exert our authority and deprive of his liberty and bring to the bar of the Senate any citizen of the land, whether he be white or black, whether he be high or low, unless he is in fact in contempt of the authority of this holy.

If my information is correct, I say that I know of no power in the Senate to punish the party whose arrest is sought to be effected by this resolution unless he is in contempt; and if my information is correct then he is not in contempt of the Senate or of any lawfully and properly constituted committee of the Senate. That is the point I want to bring to the attention of the Senate and it was to that point that I directed my inquiry to the Senator from Oregon this morning. Yet we have not had information upon that point. I remorning. Yet we have not had information upon that point. I repeat that I am informed that such is the fact that this subpœna was issued improvidently. I did not cast any blame upon the Senator from Oregon in bringing this resolution to the attention of the Senate; I did not say that he was not authorized to bring the resolution here for the consideration of the Senate; I did not even criticise the action of any member of the committee in ordering the subpæna; I simply of any member of the committee in ordering the subpœna; I simply called attention to the point in order that the Senate might be in possession of the proper information before it votes upon this resolution. What does the resolution propose? It proposes, I say again, to arrest a citizen of this land, to deprive him of his liberty, and to bring him to the bar of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir, if the Senator from Oregon will please. The PRESIDING OFFICE, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) The Senator from Delaware declines to yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not trespassed upon the time of the Senate ten minutas during this session and to my certain knowledge.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator said that I did not answer the

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator said that I did not answer the question and I wanted to reply.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This proceeding contemplates the arrest of a citizen of this country, the deprivation of his liberty, the imputation upon his character of disobeying a process of this body. It is no slight thing to cast suspicion upon even the humblest man. Is it no slight thing to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate and deprive of his liberty any citizen of this broad land? I know within recent slight thing to cast suspicion upon even the humblest man. Is it no slight thing to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate and deprive of his liberty any citizen of this broad land? I know within recent years there has been a practice too often indulged in of arresting men without authority or warrant of law, and their incarceration is likely larger to the last less in Elonia and Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. We have heard from Florida.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We do not, however, on our side of the Chamber desire to enter into these discussions. I should not have alluded to any of these things in this discussion had it not been for the resulting boards in Florida and Louisiana.

sometimes in prisons and in dungeons has sometimes taken place, without the proper foundation for the arrest having been laid; but trust the American people are returning to their sober senses and that liberty which we have boasted of as our heritage, that liberty which is the birthright of every American citizen, will not be further trampled upon, and that therefore this high body will not lay the trampled upon, and that therefore this high body will not lay the example before the country of ordering the arrest of any man without sufficient cause having first been laid before the Senate.

The resolution goes further. It not only proposes to arrest and deprive of his liberty an American citizen, but it proposes to investigate the private affairs of a citizen of this country. It proposes to drag before the people of this country, before a committee of this body, and as a consequence to be published in all the papers of this land, the accounts of a banking institution in the State of New York. Those institutions have a right to be protected. Certainly they have rights institutions have a right to be protected. Certainly they have rights the accounts of a banking institution in the State of New York. Those institutions have a right to be protected. Certainly they have rights not to be invaded with impunity. Every person knows if the accounts of the banks of this country are to be spread before the land men will be cautious how they deal with them. The resolution proposes to investigate into the private affairs of people of this country, to inquire into the bank account of Samuel J. Tilden, Mr. Hewitt, and Mr. Pelton. I speak not because it is the account of these men; and yet they are men high in the estimation of the people of this country, especially one of them, who has, as I believe, received the approval of the majority of the American people and is justly entitled to the executive office for the next four years after the 4th of March. Mr. MITCHELL. Will my friend allow me a moment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Excuse me; I shall be as courteous as the circumstances will allow me. Now, it is proposed to drag the private accounts of Samuel J. Tilden here, and for what? Upon any facts alleged? No, upon the mere suspicion in the fertile imagination of some Senator of this body, and not upon the authority of any committee of the body. Are the private affairs of men to be investigated unless there is some proof made that those private accounts will disclose something pertinent to the public interest? There has been no allegation on the part of any man, by affidavit or otherwise, that the accounts of Samuel J. Tilden, or of Mr. Hewitt, or of Mr. Pelton will disclose any corruption or anything affecting the presidential election. It may indeed rest in the mind of the Senator from Orewill disclose any corruption or anything affecting the presidential election. It may indeed rest in the mind of the Senator from Oregon or in the minds of other parties that these gentlemen, high in public esteem, have done that which is improper, and their curiosity may prompt them to ask for a process of this kind. Still I apprehend that in the judgment of the American people their reputations will not be tarnished and they will still live in the memory of the American people and go down to history as the honored sons of our Republic.

Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a discussion in reference to the condition of affairs in Oregon. That question has occupied much of the attention of the Senate of late, but I have no objection to gentlemen on proper occasions entering into a discussion of that question. I shall not on this occasion, however, enter into any remarks in reference to the electoral vote of Oregon whatever, but I must be allowed to say that, when the Senator from Oregon attempts to impute to those who oppose the adoption of this resolution tempts to impute to those who oppose the adoption of this resolution a purpose to prevent the disclosures which may be made by an answer to the subpoena, he is entirely mistaken. Let everything be brought to public light, emblazon it upon your banners, and throw it broadcast before the American people; let every fact be known if you desire it to be known, but I may say to the Senator from Oregon that it ill becomes that Senator or any member of his party to east imputations of corruption upon the democracy when to-day it is known as a fact that the public employes of this Government have been taxed by the managers of the republican party and have contributed to by the managers of the republican party and have contributed to the republican funds. I do not know that it is true, but the papers publish the fact that even the Executive of this nation contributed for some political purpose out of the $50,000 which you gave him by your act. The President being the head of his party he was called upon I suppose to contribute. Perhaps I should have done the same thing if I had had the honor of filling the same high place which he

But the Senator from Oregon ought not to cast these imputations upon the democratic party, not only upon the ground that his own party is guilty of raising funds to carry elections, but while he speaks of Mr. Cronin as a man who attempts to exercise the office of elector has he forgotten that there sits in one of the chambers of this Capitol a commission investigating into the rights of certain parties from the State of Louisiana who have been returned by a returning board notoriously corrupt? Does the Senator's party not back up the pretensions of these men who would cast the vote of the people of Louisiana in violation of right and by fraud practiced by that returning board, whose vote it is claimed shall determine who will be the Executive of this land for the next four years? Let me say to the Senator when he begins to make imputations against the democratic party with upholding frauds when no man that I have heard on this floor is attempting to insist upon fraud, let him be careful at least lest he may hear something of the action of the returning marks of the Senator from Oregon. My only purpose this morning was to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was reported, was to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was reported, and as I believe truly, that the subpœna which issued for this gentleman was issued improvidently, and that being the fact brought to the attention of the Senate, it is a question which the Senate ought to consider, whether they will now back that subpœna by issuing an attachment to the party who is alleged to be in contempt. Certainly, I repeat again, upon such a state of facts before any court in this broad land there is no court which would not at once refuse an attachment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, will the Senator allow me one question?

Does the Senator from Delaware hold that where a subpæna is issued, regular on its face, by the chairman, if you please, of one of the committees of the Senate, and that subpœna is regularly served upon a witness, that witness is not in contempt in refusing to respond to it? Will the Senator answer that question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say again, with a similar state of facts before any court in reference to this subpæna duces tecum, and that court would not, being in possession of all the facts of the case, issue its attachment. I certainly would not if I were a judge presiding in a court.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want the question, and will take no further

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow

Mr. MITCHELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bailey, Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, and Saulsbury—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Barnum, Bayard, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Morton, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT.) The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. The yeas and nays were ordered on this question, I believe, some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that they have not been ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right; I do not insist on them. The resolution was adopted.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. WEST. I move now to take up Senate bill 984, reported by the Judiciary Committee, on the subject of the sinking fund of the Pacific Railroads

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 984) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named act

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the Senator to allow me to have a matter of form attended to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. OGLESBY. I move that House bill No. 2382, granting the right of way to the Hot Springs Railroad Company over the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas, which came back to the Senate from the Committee on Public Lands with the recommendation that it pass as amended by that committee, be now recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois what is the object of the recommittal?

Mr. OGLESBY. The object of recommitting the bill to the Committee on Public Lands is to consider it in connection with another bill now pending before that committee on the same subject.

bill now pending before that committee on the same subject.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, at ten o'clock a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The House resumed its session at ten o'clock a. m. Tuesday, February 13, 1877.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest there is no quorum present. I move that a recess be taken till five minutes to twelve o'clock.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I think the recess should not be taken. We might as well have the Journal read.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order. This is in fact the legislative day of Monday.

Mr. YOUNG. There are a great many measures which might be attended to this morning. I think there will be a quorum present soon, and I hope a recess will not be taken.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order to-day would be the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the 1st February.

Mr. HALE. Might it not be agreed that after the reading of the Journal a recess be taken till five minutes to twelve o'clock?

Mr. HOLMAN. There will be no quorum here before twelve o'clock.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana raises the point that a quorum is not present, the Chair is bound to take cognizance of that. But the Chair would suggest that if that point be not pressed the Journal may be read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the Journal might be read.

The SPEAKER. After the reading of the Journal there would be

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the reading of the Journal, but object to any business when there is not a quorum of members present. I understand that the Chair rules that we are now in the legislative day of Monday.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not want any suspension of the rules this morning; but I presume that would be prevented by there being a morning hour after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that the time when a motion to suspend the rules might be entertained can hardly be reached this morning. The reading of the Journal would probably occupy a long time; one hour at least. The Chair thinks the Journal might as well be read now as that the time after twelve o'clock should be consumed in reading it. And after the reading of the Journal there would be a morning hour before any suspension of the rules could be reached.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is my idea about it.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask the Chair when the legislative day

Mr. CLYMER. 1 desire to of Monday expires.

The SPEAKER. At twelve o'clock.

Mr. HALE. Was the language of the resolution adopted yesterday such as to make it take effect immediately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution took effect immediately on its passage. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Resolved, That the rules of the House be, and are hereby, so amended that, pending the count of the electoral vote, and when the House is not required to be engaged thereon, it shall assemble on each calendar day after recess from the preceding day, proceed at and after twelve o'clock m, with its business, as though the legislative day had expired by adjournment; and this rule shall not be interpreted as interfering in any way with the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, nor as interfering with the report of the joint commission, nor the meeting of the two Houses in joint session.

The Chair is of opinion that the effect of that change of rule was immediate; but that the business at twelve o'clock as mentioned in the resolution could not then be brought up because of the proceedings under the law in relation to the count of the electoral But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] raises the

Mr. HOLMAN. On reflection I will not insist on that, but call for the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The way to secure that there shall not be interruption is for the gentleman from Maine to stay in his seat and object if preserves.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it is necessary to have any understanding. I call for the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the reading of the Journal is ever interrupted by any business unless some one rises to correct it.

The SPEAKER. The motion is frequently made—the Chair does not think it ought ever to be made—to dispense with the reading of the Journal the Journal.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will remain in my seat, as the Chair suggested that the gentleman from Maine should do, and will see that the reading of the Journal is not interrupted.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Other members will do so also.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will now be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the legislative day of Thursday, February 1, and the subsequent calendar day, and concluded the reading at eleven o'clock and fifty minutes a. m. The Journal was approved.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the printing deficiency appropriation bill (S. No. 1222) Mr. Waldron, Mr. Atkins, and Mr. Turney.

The Chair also appoints as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. No. 4452) Mr. Wells of Missouri, Mr.

Holman, and Mr. Foster.

The Chair also appoints as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Military Academy appropriation bill (H. R. No. 4306) Mr. Clymer, Mr. Blount, and Mr. Hale.

COMMITTEE ON REAL-ESTATE POOL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also announces the appointment, to fill a vacancy, of Mr. J. L. Vance of Ohio, in place of Mr. B. B. Lewis of Alabama, as a member of the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke Indebtedness Committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows: To Mr. LAPHAM, until the 19th instant on account of important business.

To Mr. Douglas, for six days from Wednesday next.

To Mr. James B. Reilly, for four days.

JENKINS A. FITZGERALD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on the bill (H. R. No. 4287) for the relief of Jenkins A. Fitzgerald; which was referred to the Committee on Military

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE POTOMAC RIVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the removal of obstructions in the Georgetown and Virginia channel of the Potomac River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

R. F. BERNARD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Adjutant-General on the bill (H. R. No. 4219) for the relief of Captain R. F. Bernard; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WILLIAM WINTERS AND FRANCIS ST. CLARE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the gratuitous issue of clothing to William Winters and Francis St. Clare, privates in the Fifth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of the debates some remarks touching the subject which was under consideration yester-day in relation to the Florida election.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I believe that was objected to yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. SAMPSON. No, sir; I object to the printing of any speeches in the RECORD upon these subjects.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY IN MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. YOUNG. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to report back from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. No. 4576) to provide for changing and fixing the boundaries of certain property ceded to the Government of the United States by the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the motion to suspend the rules is not in order, as there has been no morning bour.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee can ask unanimous consent to report the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. That is my request.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. YOUNG. That is my request.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the corporate authorities of the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, are desirous, in order to render the same more eligible and suitable for the purpose intended, of enlarging, changing, and fixing in more definite terms the boundaries of the lot of land heretofore given and granted by the said corporate authorities to the Government of the United States for a site upon which to erect a custom-house, post-office, bonded warehouse, and United States district and circuit court rooms, in the said city of Memphis, and which said lot of land was accepted by the Government of the United States under and by virtue of an act of Congress approved March 1, 1876, entitled "An act to provide for the further building of a custom-house, post-office, bonded warehouse, and United States district and circuit court rooms, in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," and upon which said building is now being creeted, in pursuance of the act of Congress aforesaid; and the Secretary of the Treasury being of the opinion that such enlargement and change in the boundaries of said lot of ground would greatly increase its value to the Government, make it more suitable for the location of a public building, and in no way interfere with the work already done in the construction of the custom-house, post-office, &c., aforesaid, nor increase the cost thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the following described property or lot of land in the city of Memphis and State of Tennessee, namely, beginning at a point where the west line of Front street intersects the north line of the first alley south of Madison street, to a stake; thence westward at right angles to Front street, and with the south line of the first alley south of Madison street, to a stake; thence westward at right angles to Front street, and with the south line of the first alley south of Madison street,

Sec. 3. That so much of the act of Congress approved March 1, 1876, entitled "An act to further provide for the building of a custom-house, post-office, bonded warehouse, and United States court-rooms in the city of Memphis, Tennessee," as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain property therein mentioned be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the committee recommend the passage of this bill, and I have no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLYMER, (at eleven o'clock and fifty-nine minutes a. m.) I move that the House now take a recess until twelve o'clock to-morrow. The motion was agreed to.

And the House accordingly took a recess until twelve o'clock m.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN AMERICA AND EUROPE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to report back, with a favorable recommendation, Senate bill No. 1141, to encourage and protect telegraphic communication between America and Europe, and to ask that it be considered by the House at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will that interfere with the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that it be considered at this time. If that consent be given, it will take no time that might otherwise be consumed by the regular it will take up time that might otherwise be consumed by the regular order, nothing more.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is a short bill, and I think there will be no objection to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

will be no objection to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Ferdinand C. Latrobe, William F. Frick, and Robert Garrett, of Maryland, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph, or submarine cables, on the Atlantic coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and European coasts by telegraphic lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That at least one cable shall be laid and operating between Europe and the Atlantic coast of the United States within three years from the approval of this act; and the at present tariff rates of messages shall be reduced to one-third, or one shilling British currency, per word, over said new cable or cables: And provided, That no amalgamation, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act shall be made to any existing European or other cable companies.

Sec. 2. That any telegraphic line or cable laid be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit:

First. The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines, or cable or cables, as there may, by law, agreement, of otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever.

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nations.

Thirdly. The transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order: First, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested, the rates not to exceed those charged to individuals; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches.

Fourthly. The transmission of may such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications posed by this act shall be filed in the once of the secretary of State by the said company.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges herein contained.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hewitt] if this bill does not authorize the laying of cables up and down the line of the entire American coast?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not so understand it; the bill, limits the right to lay telegraphic cables between Europe and the United States.

United States.

Mr. CONGER. If I understood the reading of the bill correctly, there is a provision that relates to the laying of cables "in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is qualified by the terms of the original grant. There is no provision authorizing the laying of cables along the coast; but if there was, I can see no harm in opening as wide as possible the gates for telegraphic communication between the United States and all the world.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman know whether that is the object of the bill; that is, to lay coastwise lines of cables?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The bill is a Senate bill, and passed that body unanimously. I have examined it very carefully to see if it is properly guarded, and I find that it is. I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of a general bill, if we can get one through, giving everybody the privilege of laying telegraphic lines anywhere they may see fit.

they may see fit.

Mr. CONGER. But this bill proposes to give this right to a close orporation.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is a clause at the end of the bill which provides that it shall not be a close corporation.
Mr. CONGER. A clause that reserves the right to the United States to grant the same privileges to others?
Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Yes; that the same privileges may be granted to others as this bill grants to the corporators.

Mr. CONGER. And I think there is a provision at the end of the bill reserving the right to Congress to alter, repeal, or amend this

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly; the bill is very closely

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly; the bill is very closely guarded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hewitt] whether this bill contains the same provision that was incorporated in the Pacific telegraph bill of the last session, providing that the rights conferred by this bill should not be construed to prevent the United States from granting similar rights to other parties?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is an express provision to that effect. And I desire to say that if this line of telegraph cable shall be laid it will reduce the rates of telegraphing to Europe to one-third of the present rates.

of the present rates.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I desire is to avoid a monopoly in telegraphing.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 620, to authorize the President to restore George A. Armes to his former rank in the Army, and that the bill be now put upon its passage. Mr. SAMPSON. I object.

MARY WELSH.

Mr. EAMES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4646) granting a pension to Mary Welsh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House will now resume the consideration of the report of the select committee on the election in Florida, which was made a special order immediately. ately after the next reading of the Journal subsequent to the making of the order.

Mr. SEELYE. I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Goodin] to withdraw his call for the regular order until I can report a bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs which it is necessary should be passed at once, and to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. GOODIN. I will not insist upon the call for the regular order.

SENECA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

Mr. SEELYE. I ask consent to report for consideration at this time from the Committee on Indian Affairs House bill No. 4257, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875.

I desire to state that I am instructed by the committee to report an amendment to the bill, to strike out the last section, the one to which on Saturday last the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] objected. It is a bill that can cause no discussion, and it is quite important that the should be passed at an early day.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That at the expiration of the leases as provided for by the act of which this is an amendment the Scaeca Nation of New York Indians shall be entitled to the possession of said lands, except those parts thereof laid out, and to be laid out, and designated as streets, which shall be for the public use of the villages in which they are respectively located.

Sec. 2. That the boundaries of tracts or lots leased within the limits of villages upon the Allegany reservation indicated with black lines upon the maps, now on file, prepared by the commissioners who were appointed by the President to execute the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases," approved February 19, 1875, which are in conformity with the understanding of the parties to said leases, and are so occupied and claimed by the lessees, shall be held to be the boundaries of such leased tracts or lots, and the area embraced within such boundaries, so indicated in black ink, shall be held to be the land to be occupied and used by the lessees under their present leases, and in the renewal of the same, instead of the boundaries indicated in red ink, and the areas included within the same, which are in accordance with the descriptions in the leases, but not in accordance with the understanding of the parties.

in red ink, and the areas included within the same, which are in accordance with the descriptions in the leases, but not in accordance with the understanding of the parties.

Sec. 3. That in any case when the parties cannot agree upon the conditions in regard to the renewal of a lease and the amount of rent to be paid, then the concilors of said Seneca Indians and the other party shall each appoint a disinterested person as arbitrator; and if these two cannot agree, the United States agent for said Seneca Indians shall act as umpire, and his decision shall be final: Provided, That in leasing said lands, no rent shall be paid for more than one year in advance, and that any renewal of a lease shall not be executed more than three months prior to the expiration of the existing lease.

Sec. 4. That whenever two-thirds of the men and two-thirds of the women over twenty-one years of age on either or both of the Cattarangus and Allegany reservations shall request the same in writing, duly witnessed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause these reservations, or either of them, to be subdivided and allotted to those entitled to said lands, in as nearly equal proportions as may be, having reference to the value of the same, in such manner as he may deem proper; and such allottees shall be entitled to the use and occupancy of their respective allotments, without, however, the power of alienation, except to an Indian, and not until ten years after said allotment is made; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to have certificates issued to the said allottees expressing this condition.

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint three commissioners, who shall have the boundaries of the Cattarangus Indian reservation surveyed, and have the same marked with permanent monuments; and the plats and field-notes of the survey of the said boundary shall be made in triplicate, and, after approval by the General Land Office, one copy shall be filed in that office, one copy in the clerk's office of Cattarangu

Mr. SEELYE. It is the last section of the bill to which the gentle-man from Indiana has objected and which I am directed to omit in reporting the bill.

Mr. HÖLMAN. That section proposes to re-appropriate the unexpended balance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the

Mr. HOLMAN. One other point. The appropriation of that $15,000 grew out of the direction of the Government to have that survey made. It is a liability which has been created on part of the Government and for that reason $15,000 was appropriated. Now I wish to ascertain from the gentleman from Massachusetts whether there is any other provision in the bill directing further survey to be made?

Mr. SEELYE. There is no provision with this section omitted.

This section 5 of the bill did provide for the further survey of Cattaraugus reservation. But omitting this there is no provision for any new survey

The House will have to strike that section out.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House and the first question is on the motion to strike out the fifth section.

Mr. SEELYE. I can explain the bill to the House in a moment, and then I think there will be no objection to it. This Allegany reservation is a strip of land about forty miles long by a mile and a half or two miles wide, owned by the Seneca Nation, which has been leased in portions to certain parties in a very irregular way, and in order to make those leases effectual Congress passed a law two years ago appointing a commission for the survey of the reservation. This bill simply provides that the survey thus made shall be recognized as the authority to which appeal shall be made in subsequent leases. I ask for the passage of the bill as amended, striking out the fifth section.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment to strike out the fifth section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed

Mr. SEELYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECENT ELECTION IN THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

Mr. HOPKINS. As the regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen, I now take the floor for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the regular order of business, which is the report of the select committee on the recent election in the State of Florida.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The report of the select committee on the Flor-

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is it proposed to do with it?

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported from the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at the election held on November 7, A. D. 1876, in the State of Florida, Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, R. B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock were fairly and duly chosen as presidential electors, and that this is shown by the face of the returns and fully substantiated by the evidence of the actual votes cast; and that the said electors having, on the first Wednesday of December, A. D. 1876, cast their votes for Samuel J. Tilden for President and for Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President, they are the legal votes of the State of Florida and must be counted as such.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the intention of the gentleman relative to the time to be allowed in debate to The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Perhaps the gentleman will be good enough

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa wants to know what time the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires as to debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not propose any limit. Gentlemen can take as much latitude as they desire.

Mr. WILSON, or Iowa. We do not want any latitude; we do not want to be bothered with funeral orations.

Mr. CONGER. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration? The SPEAKER. No, sir; the Chair will read from the Journal:

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That the consideration of the report of the select committee on the re-cent election in the State of Florida shall be resumed immediately after the reading of the Journal when the same is next read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is no doubt but that this is in order, but what we wish to get at is this: We agreed to amend the rules last night because it was absolutely necessary to get at the business of the House. If there is a proposition to have debate on this matter already disposed of by the electoral commission, we want to know it. If the gentleman wants an hour we will not say anything.

The SPEAKER. At the end of the hour the gentleman can make the motion to postpone.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We want to know whether the other side will be heard. It has always been done—always an amicable agreement is made in such matters.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not been able to hear a word the gentle-

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not been able to hear a land and man has said.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the gentleman propose to give this side an opportunity to debate?

Mr. HOPKINS. So far as I am concerned, unquestionably, but I

Mr. HOPKINS. So far as I am concerned, unquestionably, but I have no control over giving time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recognized as controlling the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I propose to withdraw the demand I made for the previous question; and if gentlemen desire a limit on that side let them name it, and we will assent to it.

Mr. KASSON. I shall be glad, before the gentleman opens on the subject, to know whether he proposes to occupy an hour or to take up very much time in debate in reference to a subject, when the debate yesterday covered the same ground, or merely desires that the bate yesterday covered the same ground, or merely desires that the committee shall be heard on the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think that the question under consideration yesterday was the one which is proposed to be discussed to-day. The time yesterday was occupied in discussing the legal aspect of the case. We think that it is now time that the House and the people should understand something of the facts.

Mr. KASSON. I asked the question with reference to the conclusion of the report simply, the resolution, which is substantially the same resolution acted on yesterday. In view of the pressure of business, I think there might be a common understanding that the least time possible with fairness to both sides might be consumed in this time possible with fairness to both sides might be consumed in this

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to one hour. The Chair would then recognize some gentleman in opposition to the report for one hour, after which the floor would revert to some friend of the resolution for another hour. Between the hours the House can of course make such disposition of the question as it may deem fit.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] and all other gentlemen will remember that when this report was presented to the House the majority sought to have it acted on without adding a single word of comment. But since that time we have seen the extraordinary spectacle of a tribunal created to ascertain the facts refusing to investigate; and we have also seen a report signed by the minority of this committee containing testimony which was never taken by the committee, containing a misrepresentation of facts, containing reflections upon the majority of the committee which are utterly unwarranted. In view of this, I have withdrawn my motion for the previous question; and I think there should be some latitude of discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor, and will either proceed or yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. I propose to proceed as soon as there is order.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman one question before he goes goes on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, to declare and count the electoral votes of the State of Florida for Samuel J. Tilden would end the votes of the State of Florida for Samuel J. Tilden would end the presidential controversy. This fact was realized on the day after the election as soon as the voice of the different States had been heard. And immediately the telegraphic mandate flashed from the representative of the opposition, "Hold the State for Hayes!" It was not a question of justice or right, but simply and purely one of force. "Troops and money" without limit were promised, and the imperative order was to be enforced at all hazards. Thenceforth until the present hour all of the majesty of power, all of the appliances of wealth, all of the ingenuity and skill of intellect, and all of the devices of the reckless and unsermulous have been actively and cease. vices of the reckless and unscrupulous have been actively and cease-lessly at work to accomplish that purpose. The ultimate success or failure of all these agencies will soon be known. If Bertram's right and Bertram's might Shall meet, he record of the attempted wrong will alone remain as a dark and shameful chapter in American history. But if that chapter shall record the success of the great conspiracy, only one more will be needed to recite the speedy decay of popular government. An election carried by force or fraud or an election subverted by force or fraud is a mockery of the people's will and a stab at the very vitals of the Republic.

of the Republic.

The great tribunal, the Delphic oracle now sitting in the chamber of the Supreme Court, might have declared what was the true and honest vote of the people of Florida; but they preferred to reach a conclusion hemmed in by technicalities and forms. Whatever may be said of the wisdom and justice of their decision under the law, it is conclusive upon all unless reversed by the two Houses of Congress. I do not propose to invade their jurisdiction nor to intrude upon their meditations, but to discuss briefly some of the details of evidence which they refused to consider, for the information of those who are more anxious to know for whom the votes were cast than for whom they shall be counted. they shall be counted.

There was but a single certificate or return sent up to the secretary of state from each of the counties in Florida, except from the county of Baker. From Baker County there were three returns. Two of them, however, were signed by the same officers and contained precisely the same result. To determine which of these is the true and legal return will be to decide the presidential contest so far as "the face of the returns" will do it. This great question is thus compressed into a very narrow compass.

The total vote of the State, exclusive of Baker County, was— For the Hayes electors...... For the Tilden electors.....

One of the certificates referred to was signed by E. W. Driggers, county judge, A. A. Allen, sheriff, and William Green, justice of the peace. The other two were signed by Martin J. Coxe, elerk of the circuit and county courts, and John Dounan, justice of the peace.

The different results produced by accepting and adopting each of these returns will be apparent at a glance.

Adopting Coxe's return the result would be—

Tilden electors exclusive of Baker County Tilden electors in Baker County	24, 201 238
Total for Tilden electors  Hayes electors exclusive of Baker County  Hayes electors in Baker County	24, 206	24, 439
Total for Hayes electors		24, 349
Majority for Tilden electors		90
Or adopting Drigger's return the result would be— Hayes electors exclusive of Baker County Hayes electors in Baker County	24, 206 130
Total for Hayes electors Tilden electors exclusive of Baker County Tilden electors in Baker County	24, 201 89	24, 336 24, 290
Majority for Hayes electors		46

Upon what a slender thread hang issues so momentous! If the voice of the people of Florida is to be potential in settling the greatest political contest of the age, and if that voice can be heard only as it speaks through official certificates, how all-important is it that we should catch the true sound and not be deceived by a dangerous, even a fatal, mimicry!

Which of these certificates or returns is true, and which is false? Which is legal, and which illegal? The election law of the State of Florida provides as follows:

SEC. 24. On the sixth day after any election, or sooner, if the returns shall have been received, it shall be the duty of the county judge and clerk of the circuit court to meet at the office of said clerk and take to their assistance a justice of the peace of the county, (and in case of the absence, sickness, or other disability of the county judge or clerk, the sheriff shall act in his place,) and shall publicly proceed to canvass the votes given for the several officers and persons, as shown by the returns on file in the office of such clerk or judge, and shall then make and sign duplicate certificates, containing in words and figures, written at full length, the whole number of votes given for each office, the names of the persons for whom such votes were given for such office, and the number of votes given to each person for such office. Such certificate shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, and one of such duplicates shall be immediately transmitted by mail to the secretary of state and the other to the governor of the State.

It will be observed that the judge and the clerk are of equal rank and power under the law.

In case of the absence, sickness, or other disability-

And in that case only-of the county judge or clerk, the sheriff shall act in his place.

Unless the contingency provided for shall arise, the sheriff has no more right to participate than any other citizen, and his interference to the exclusion of the judge or clerk is unwarranted and illegal. Hence it must appear affirmatively upon any return signed by the

Hence it must appear affirmatively upon any return signed by the sheriff, that the contingency did arise which made it lawful for him to act. In the case of Baker County there was no such evidence. There was no reason or excuse for the sheriff's presence as a canvasser set forth upon the certificate. But, on the contrary, the very fact that the clerk made and certified to a canvass proved that there was neither "absence, sickness, or other disability" upon his part.
